A. I. R. (35) 1948 Nagpur 1 [C. N. 1.]

BOSE AND SEN JJ.

Mandli Prasad Ramcharanlal — Plaintiff — Appellant v. Ramcharanlal and others — Defendants — Respondents.

Second Appeal No. 373 of 1941, Decided on 3-2-1947, from decree of Extra Addl. Dist. Judge, Bilaspur, D/- 1-4 1941.

*(a) Hindu law — Partition — Suit for partition by minor — Share allotted to his father — Another son begotten after suit for partition cannot reopen partition.

Where a father has, at a partition with his sons, reserved a share for himself, a son begotten after partition is not entitled to have the partition reopened, but is exclusively entitled both to the father's share and to his separate or self-acquired property. A son who was in his mother's womb at the time of partition but was born subsequent to it, is however entitled to reopen the partition and to receive a share equal to that of his brothers. [Para 25]

Even in a suit for partition filed by a minor the severance of status takes place from the date of the suit and not from the date of the decree. [Paras 35 and 66]

Hence where in a suit for partition by a minor son, a share is allotted to his father, the critical date when the severance takes place is the date of suit and another son begotten subsequent to it but before the final decree for partition is not entitled to reopen the partition. Case law referred. [Para 66].

(b) Hindu law — Joint family — Son in utero — Rights of.

Under the Hindu law a son begotten but not born is equal in all respects to a son actually in existence except for the purposes of adoption. His membership with the family is considered as commencing from the date of conception. A son in utero becomes (if he is born alive) a coparcener with all his rights as from the date of his conception as if he were in actual existence. He has, therefore, the right to take the joint family property by survivorship Case law referred. [Para 23]

(c) Hindu law — Partition — Right of member of joint family to require partition — What amounts to separation — Division of title and division of property.

According to the true notion of an undivided family in Hindu law, no individual member of that family, whilst it remains undivided, can predicate of the joint and undivided property, that he, that particular member, has a certain definite share. Any one of several members of a joint family is entitled to require partition of ancestral property, and his demand to that effect, if it be not complied with can be enforced by legal process. A definite and unambiguous indication by one member of intention to separate himself and to enjoy his share in severalty may amount to separation. But to have that effect the intention must be unequivocal and clearly expressed. Partition is used in two different senses, division of title or severance of status and division of property. By division of title the coparcenary property ceases to be joint property and it is converted from a joint into a separate ownership. Severance of the joint status so far as the separating member is concerned, with all its legal consequences resulting therefrom is quite distinct from the de facto division into specific shares of the property held until then jointly: Case law referred. [Para 27]

(d) Hindu law — Partition — Suit for partition by adult coparcener — Date of severance.

Where an adult coparcener clearly and unequivocally gives a notice of his intention to separate from the joint Hindu family he becomes separate in status from the date of the notice and if no previous notice is given, the filing of a suit for partition amounts to an expression of an intention to separate and if the claim is decreed the date of severance relates back to the date of the institution of the suit and not the date of the decree. [Para 34]

(e) Hindu law — Partition — Valid partition may be made during minority of one or more coparceners. [Para 41]

(f) Hindu law — Partition — Suit for partition by minor when can be decreed.

It has been the settled practice not to decree a suit for partition filed on behalf of a minor plaintiff unless the Court is satisfied that the partition is for his benefit. This does not in any way affect the right which a minor has to separate from the joint Hindu family if it is for his benefit and that power can be exercised on his behalf by a person purporting to act as his guardian. Any person can file a suit for partition on behalf of a minor and a change in his legal status which affects his right to property in various ways should not be permitted unless the Court is satisfied that the partition is for his benefit. In deciding whether partition is in the interest and for the benefit of the minor, a Court is not restricted to considerations purely personal to the minor but may take into consideration matters concerning his mother, or his wife or his daughter in whom he may be interested. The power which the Court exercises in decreeing or refusing partition at the instance of a minor plaintiff is not in denial but in protection of his right which he undoubtedly has to separate from the joint Hindu family if it is in his interest and for his benefit: Case law referred. [Paras 48 and 49]

(g) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 22, R. 1—Partition—Suit for partition by minor does not abate on his death.

The right to partition is a right relating to property. It is not a case of a personal action which dies with the personactio personalis moritur cum persona. A suit for partition on behalf of a minor, if properly instituted, should not abate on his death but his legal representative should be in a position to carry on the litigation. There is no justification for the assumption that the cause of action does not survive on the death of a minor plaintiff after the suit for partition has been filed on his behalf. [Paras 50 and 52]

Annotation: ('44-Com.) C. P. C., O. 22, R. 1, N. 9a.

(h) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 7, R. 7 — Suit to be tried on cause of action existing at date of its commencement —Court when can take notice of subsequent events.

A suit must be tried in all its stages on the cause of action as it existed at the date of its commencement. The Court, however, may in suitable cases take notice of events which have happened since the institution of the suit and afford relief to the parties on the basis of the altered conditions. This doctrine is of an exceptional character and is applied in cases where it is shown that the original relief claimed has, by reason of subsequent change of circumstances, become inappropriate, or, that it is necessary to base the decision of the Court on the altered circumstances in order to shorten litigation or to do complete justice between the parties: 2 A. I. R. 1915 Cal. 103, Rel. on. [Para 51]

Judgment.—This appeal arises out of a suit for partition. For a proper understanding of the case it is necessary to set out the genealogical tree given below.

GOKULPRASAD

Deviprasad (defendant 3). Dineshchandra (defendant 2) Mandliprasad (plaintiff).

[2] Respondent 3, Deviprasad is the son of respondent 1, Ramcharanlal by his first wife who is dead. Respondent 4, Chandramukhi is the second wife of Ramcharanlal. Respondent 2, Dineshchandra and appellant Mandliprasad are their sons who are minors. Ramcharanlal has three daughters from Chandramukhi but we are not concerned with them in the present appeal.

[3] Chandramukhi filed Civil Suit No. 6-A of 1937 on 27-9-1937 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, 1st Class, Bilaspur, for partition of movable and immovable property on behalf of herself and as a next friend of her son Dineshchandra, who was described as a child of 7 years, against her husband Ramcharanlal and her step-son Deviprasad. She claimed that each of the parties was entitled to 1/4th share in the property and prayed for partition. The property sought to be partitioned consisted of 16 share of Baghamunda which was ancestral property in the hands of Ramcharanlal, tenancy land at mauza Fandwani, houses at Mungeli and Baghamunda, grain, cattle, pots and pans. The family had also to pay debts to the extent of Rs. 2250/- to creditors whose names were mentioned in the schedule filed along with the plaint. The reason alleged for seeking partition was that the property was being mismanaged and wasted on account of the frequent quarrels of Ramcharanlal with his son Deviprasad and that partition was necessary to protect the interest of her minor son Dineshchandra.

[4] Deviprasad contested the right of Chandramukhi to a share and stated that she was merely entitled to maintenance. He stated that he had no objection to the partition being effected and a share allotted to Dineshchandra.

[5] The trial Court found that Chandramukhi was also entitled to a quarter share and passed a preliminary decree for partition on 7-12-1937 and specified that each of the parties was entitled to a quarter share and directed that partition of land revenue paying estate be effected by the Collector and of the rest of the property by a commissioner. Commissioners were appointed successively to make a partition but no partition was actually effected. On 8-3-1938 the trial Court granted time to the parties as they stated that they were going to compromise and effect a partition out of Court.

[6] Further time was granted on 24-3-1938 and the case was fixed for 31-3-1938. In the mean time, the parties effected a division of property through arbitrators who delivered their award on 28-3-1938. Under that award Dineshchandra (plaintiff) and Ramcharanlal (his father) and Deviprasad (his half brother) were each given 1/3rd share. On the application of the plaintiffs, the Court granted permission to Chandramukhi to compromise the case but directed that the terms of the compromise be intimated to the Court in order to enable it to find out if the compromise was for the benefit of the minor. The case was fixed for 2-4-1938. On that date the parties filed an application under O. 23, R. 3, Civil P. C. for drawing up a decree in accordance with the terms of the award. The application was signed by Chandramukhi for herself and as a guardian of her minor son Dineshchandra and by the defendants. The defendants filed in Court the award dated 28-3-1938 delivered by the arbitrators. In the order sheet of that date the Court recorded that an application had been made for sanctioning the compromise and that it would persue the terms of the compromise and pass orders. On 22-4-1938 the Court recorded the statements of the parties regarding the compromise and passed an order that the compromise was for the benefit of the minor as he was getting a quarter share and accordingly sanctioned it. A final decree for partition was passed as per terms of the compromise on that date.

[7] The property was divided by metes and bounds into three shares and Ramcharanlal was to discharge the entire debt and he was to remain in possession of the 1/3rd share of Deviprasad in the property for six years from 31-5-1938 to 31-5-1944. Under the terms of the decree, Ramcharanlal was to deliver certain quantities of grain and Rs. 120/- in cash annually on 15th May each year from 1939 to 1944 with a condition that in case of default Deviprasad was entitled to resume possession of his share and realise the balance by a suit.

[8] One of the terms of the decree based on the terms of the compromise and the award was to this effect :

" In case of any sons being born to Ramcharanlal in future their share be carved out of the share of plaintiff 2 and defendant 2 and they shall have no right in the 0-5-4 share of defendant 1 and the burden of debts will also be on their shoulders."

Ramcharanlal was defendant 2 and his son Dineshchandra was plaintiff 2 in the suit. The effect of the decree was that a son born to Ramcharanlal after the partition was entitled to a share out of the 2/3rd share of the property allotted to them and had no right to claim anything out of the 1/3rd share allotted to Deviprasad.

[9] The appellant Mandliprasad was not born when Civil Suit No. 6 A of 1937 was filed on the 27-9-1937, or on 7-12-1937 or on 22-4-1938 when the preliminary and the final decree for partition were made. Mandliprasad was born on 16-8-1938 on the 323rd day after the institution of Civil Suit No. 6 A of 1937, 252nd day after the preliminary decree and 116th day after the final decree.

[10] On 17-11-1939 Shyamprasad as next friend of his brother-in-law, Mandliprasad, filed Civil Suit No. 93-A of 1938 on his behalf in the Court of 1st Subordinate Judge 2nd Class, Bilaspur, against his father Ramcharanlal and mother Chandramukhi, brother Dineshchandra and half brother Deviprasad for re-opening the partition made in Civil Suit No. 6-A of 1937 and for a fresh partition of the family property. In the plaint the age of Mandliprasad was stated to be 1 year The plaintiff stated that as no share had been reserved for him at the partition made in the previous suit though the parties must have known that Chandramukhi was then enceinte, he was not bound by that partition and was entitled to have a re-partition of the property. He stated that each of the parties was entitled to 1/5th share and claimed a decree for partition and separate possession of his 1/5th share. He also claimed a decree for Rs. 160/- against Deviprasad on the allegation that he had removed grain worth Rs. 800/- and he was entitled to 1/5th share of the amount.

[11] Shyamprasad, the next friend of the plaintiff, is his sister's husband and is a resident of Bodla in Kawardha State which is outside British India. On the application of Deviprasad the trial Court ordered the plaintiff on 6-1-1940 to furnish security for Rs. 50/- for the costs of Dineshchandra and Deviprasad (defendants 2 and 3). On 15-1-1940 the plaintiff agreed to furnish security for costs and Ramcharanlal agreed to be his surety. In compliance with the directions of the Court Ramcharanlal executed the security bond.

[12] Ramcharanlal (defendant 1) admitted the claim of the plaintiff and stated that the condition in the award that any issue of Ramcharanlal born after the award was to get his share out of the property in the hands of Ramcharanlal and Dineshchandra, was not legal and not binding on him. Chandramukhi also admitted the claim of the plaintiff and stated that she was entitled to a share equal to that of the sons of Ramcharanlal and that the award could not take away her share which she got under the preliminary decree dated 7-12-1937.

[13] There can be no doubt that the suit has been filed at the instance of the parents of Mandliprasad in order that the 1/3rd share which Deviprasad obtained at the previous partition may be reduced to the 1/5th share which he would obtain in case the previous partition is set aside and a fresh partition effected.

[14] Deviprasad contested the claim of the plaintiff and stated that he was separate from Ramcharanlal and Dineshchandra as he had expressed his intention in clear and unequivocal terms to separate from them about 6 years before the institution of Civil Suit No. 6-A of 1937. He pleaded that Mandliprasad was bound by the partition which took place before he was born and begotten and was not entitled to reopen it and that on the death of Ramcharanlal Mandliprasad would be entitled to inherit the share allotted to Ramcharanlal and any separate property which he might possess. Deviprasad denied the removal of the grain or his liability for the payment of Rs. 160/.

[15] Dineshchandra was represented by the Court reader as his guardian. He denied the claim of the plaintiff and his defence was the same as of Deviprasad.

[16] The trial Court framed a preliminary issue on 6-1-1940 and decided it against the plaintiff by the order dated 31-1-1940. The trial Court held that the plaintiff was not entitled to re-open the partition and accordingly dismissed the suit on that date. The claim for Rs. 160/- was also not decreed and the plaintiff did not make that a ground of appeal either in the first appeal or in second appeal.

[17] The decree of the trial Court was affirmed by the Court of the Extra Additional District Judge, Bilaspur, by the decree dated 1-4-1941 in Civil Appeal No. 68-A of 1940. It is against this decree that the plaintiff has filed the present appeal

[18] Ramcharanlal, Chandramukhi and their son Dineshchandra were not represented before us. As already stated there can be no doubt that the present suit for partition by Mandliprasad has been filed at the instance of his father Ramcharanlal through his son-in-law as the next friend of the minor. Ramcharanlal admitted the claim of the plaintiff and furnished security on his behalf for the costs of Deviprasad incurred in the suit. Ramcharanlal paid fee of the counsel of the appellant: see the certificate of fees dated 28-8-1946 which recites that Rs. 25/- had been remitted by Ramcharanlal by money order on 5-7-1945 towards payment of fee. Ramcharanlal is interested in the litigation and is taking keen interest in it although he is not represented in appeal.

[19] Deviprasad filed copies of the order sheets dated 27-9-1937 and the 10-11 1937 in Civil Suit No. 6 A of 1937 (Ex D. 1) and of his written statement dated 10-11-1937 (Ex. D. 2) in that suit. Reference was made by the parties in their pleadings to the award dated 18-3-1938, the preliminary decree dated 7-12-1937 and the final decree dated 22-4-1938 passed in that suit but their copies were not filed in the trial Court by either of the parties. The trial Court as well as the lower appellate Court have referred in their judgments to the pleadings and the decrees in the previous case.

[20] On 18-2-1942, the appellant Mandliprasad and the respondent Deviprasad made a joint application in this Court asking that the record of Civil Suit No. 6-A of 1937 be sent for and admitted in evidence and the preliminary and the final decree for partition and a copy of the endorsement dated 27-9 1937 made at the time of the presentation of the plaint in that suit be included in the supplementary paper book. This has been done and counsel have referred to them without any objection. Reference has accordingly been made to the pleadings and the decrees for partition in the previous suit in giving a resume of the case.

[21] The question for decision in this appeal is whether the appellant, Mandliprasad is entitled to re-open the partition made in the previous suit (Civil Suit No. 6-A of 1937). The decision of this question turns on the determination of the point when did the partition take place in the previous suit, whether on 27-9-1937 when the suit was filed by Dineshchandra for partition or on 7-12 1937 or on 22-4-1938 when the preliminary and the final decrees for partition were respectively made.

[22] Mandliprasad was born on 16-8-1938 more than three months after the final decree for partition had been made on 22 4-1938. The normal period of gestation is 280 days. Conception must have taken place sometime in November 1937 long after 27-9-1937 when the Civil Suit No. 6-A of 1937 for partition was filed. The trial Court was doubtful whether the plaintiff was conceived even on 10-11-1937 when the written statement of Deviprasad was filed. The plaintiff's case as stated in para. 6 of the plaint was that he was in his mother's womb on 28-8-1938 when the award was made and also on 22-4-1938 when the final decree for partition was passed in that suit but did not allege that he was in the womb on 27-9-1937 when the previous suit for partition was filed. The Courts below have decided the case on the basis that Mandliprasad was not in his morther's womb at the time when the previous suit for partition was filed. This assumption was not disputed by the appellant before the District Court and has also not been contested before us. Mandliprasad was thus not en ventre sa mere on 27-9-1937 when the previous suit for partition (Civil Suit No. 6-A of 1937) was filed.

[23] Under the Hindu law, a son begotten but not born is equal in all respects to a son actually in existence except for the purposes of adoption. His membership with the family is considered as commencing from the date of conception: 4 M. H. C. R. 307.[1] A son in utero becomes (if he is born alive) a coparcener with all his rights as from the date of his conception as if he were in actual existence. He has, therefore, the right to take the joint family property by survivorship: 4 ALL. 427[2], 23 Bom. 636[3] and 9 Mad. 64[4] to impeach alienations prior to his birth: 37 ALL. 162[5], 16 Mad. 76,[6] at p. 79 and A. I. R. 1937 Mad. 274[7] and to re-open a partition to have a share allotted to him: 2 Beng. L. R. 103,[8] 4 M. H. C. R. 307[1] and 12 Bom. 105,[9] at pp. 108, 109. The only exception to the rule is in regard to adoption: 12 Bom. 105.[9] (see Dr. Jolly, Tagore Law Lectures, page 132; Mayne's Hindu Law, Edn. 10, para. 419 at pages 532, 533; Mulla's Hindu Law, Edn. 9, para. 28 at pages 20 and 21, para. 270 at page 318 and para. 309 at page 380; and Gupte's Hindu Law, Article 14 pages 46-47.)

[24] In an elaborate and comprehensive judgment in A. I. R. 1921 Cal. 487[10] Mookerjee J. has reviewed the law regarding the position of a son in utero under the Hindu and other systems of law. He has referred to ancient Hindu law texts and their commentaries in discussing the rights of a son born after partition In that case the question was whether a posthumous son could challenge the settement made by his mother with her step-daughter during the time he was in the womb. The decision was that he had a right to do so.

[25] In para. 419 of Mayne's Hindu Law, Edn. 10, reference has been made to the ancient Hindu law texts and their commentaries in notes (t) (u) and (v). The law regardnig the rights of a son born after partition has been accurately and concisely summarised in these terms:

"419. .....Where a father has, at a partition with his sons, reserved a share for himself, a son begotten after partition is not entitled to have the partition reopened, but is exclusively entitled both to the father's share and to his separate or self-a quired property.

A son who was in his mother's womb at the time of partition but was born subsequent to it, is however entitled to reopen the partition and to receive a share equal to that of his brothers. For, a son in the womb is in point of law in existence.

"420. If the father had divided the whole property among his sons, retaining no share for himself, then the sons, with whom partition was made, must allot from their shares a portion equal to their own to an after-born son. This proceeds on the principle that the unborn son cannot be deprived of his share in the paternal estate by a prior partition."

[26] In the privious suit for partition (Civil Suit No. 6-A of 1937) Ramcharanlal was allotted a share. Mandliprasad was not conceived on 27-9-1937 when the suit was filed. He was born on 16-8-1938 after the final decree for partition was made on 22-4-1938. He was, however, in utero on 7-12-1937 or on 22-4-1938 when the preliminary and the final decree for partition were respectively made. According to the law stated above, Mandliprasad would be entitled to reopen the partition in case the severance of status took place on 7-12-1937 or on 22-4-1938 as he was then in his mother's womb. If, however, the severanco took place on 27-9-1937, the date when the previous suit for partition was filed, he was not entitled to reopen the partition because his father was allotted a share. The question for decision, therefore, is what is the critical date, the 27-9-1937 when the suit was filed for partition or the 7-12-1937 or the 22-4-1938 when the preliminary and the final decree for partition were respectively made.

[27] In order to decide this question, it is necessary to set out briefly a few propositions of Hindu law which are well settled.

(1) According to the true notion of an undivided family in Hindu law, no individual member of that family, whilst it remains undivided, can predicate of the joint and undivided property, that he, that particular member, has a certain definte share: 11 M. I. A. 75[11] at pp. 89, 90

(2) Any one of several members of a joint family is entitled to require partition of ancestral property, and his demand to that effect, if it be not complied with, can be enforced by legal process: 17 I. A. 194, 196 : 18 Cal. 157[12]

(3) A definite and unambiguous indication by one member of intention to separate himself and to enjoy his share in severalty may amount to separation. But to have that effect the intention must be unequivocal and clearly expressed: 40 I. A. 40, 43; 35 ALL. 80.[13]

(4) Partition is used in two different senses : division of title or severance of status and division of property. By division of title, the coparcenary property ceases to be joint property and it is converted from a joint into a separate ownership. Severance of the joint status so far as the separating member is concerned, with all its legal consequences resulting therefrom is quite distinct from the de facto division into specific shares of the property held until then jointly : 11 M. I. A. 75,[11] at p. 92 and 43 I. A. 151[14] at pp. 160, 161.

[28] In 39 Mad. 159[15] a minor illegitimate son of a Sudra filed a suit for partition against a legitimate son. The trial Court held that the paternity was not established and dismissed the suit. On appeal the High Court held that the paternity of the plaintiff was established and on reference to a Full Bench it was decided that he was entitled to the share of an illegitimate son in his father's property. The decision of the Full Bench is reported in 39 Mad. 159[15] while the appeal was pending in the High Court the legitimate son died unmarried and in his place his mother was brought on the record as his legal representative. This order was contested by the appellant who contended that he was entited to the entire property by survivorship on the death of his brother who died joint. The contention of the respondent was that by the presentation of the plaint for partition the plaintiff became a divided member and that consequently he was not entitled to succeed to his legitimate brother by survivorship. The question for decision was whether the plaintiff became separated from the other members by the fact of suing them for partition. It was held that the plaintiff became a separated member when he filed the suit for partition and that he was not entitled to succeed to his brother by survivorship. The decision is reported in 39 Mad. 159.[15] The case was argued by distinguished counsel and decided by eminent Judges and it is curious that there is no reference in that case to the question whether the fact that the plaintiff was a minor made any difference as regards the date of separation of status, whether from the date of the suit or from the date of the decree. As Jockson J. stated in A.I.R. 1930 Mad. 486[16] the learned Judges of the Full Bench in 39 Mad. 159[15] could not have overlooked the fact that the plaintiff was a minor and if the minority of the plaintiff affected the date of severance of status they would have distinghished the case in 40 I. A. 40[13] especially as the majority of the Judges of the Full Bench stated that they would have decided otherwise if the matter had not been concluded by the decision of the Privy Council.

[29] In F. A. Nos. 16 and 25 of 1911,[17] the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, Nagpur, held that severance of status could only be effected with the consent of all the ceparceners or by decree of the Court, There the plaintiff Harihar Bapuji Talatule gave a notice to the other members of the family in which he expressed his intention to separate from the joint Hindu family and claimed partition of his share. As this was not done, he filed a suit for partition. The other defendants admitted that he had 1/3rd share in the property and that he was entitled to have that share partitioned. The case was fixed for settlement by the parties as regards the best mode of the division of the property. Before that question could be settled, Haribar died and in his place his widow Girja Bai was brought on the record as his legal representative and untimately a decree for partition was passed in her favour. The defendants filed appeals in the Court of the Judicial Commissioner against the order bringing Girja Bai on the record as a legal representative of the deceased plaintiff and against the decree for partition. The Court of the Judicial Commissioner held that partition could only be made by agreement of parties or by decree of the Court and as before that could be done Harihar died he must be deemed to have died as a member of joint Hindu family and as such the other brothers were entitled to the entire property by survivorship and the widow was not entitled to a decree for partition and accordingly reversed the decree of the trial Court and dismissed the suit. On appeal the Privy Council reversed the decree of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner and restored the decree of the trial Court. The judgment of the Judicial Committee is reported in 43 I. A. 151 : 12 N. L. R. 113.[14]

[30] The statement of law contained in their previous decision, 40 I. A. 40: 35 ALL. 80[13] was re-affirmed and their Lordships discussed the principle more fully than was in 40 I. A. 40 : 35 ALL. 80.[13]

[31] After a discussion of the relevant Hindu texts on the question of partition their Lordships of the Judicial Committee at page 160 held:-

"Separation from the joint family involving the severance of the joint status so far as the separating member is concerned. with all the legal consequences resulting therefrom, is quite distinct from the de facto division into specific shares of the property held until then jointly. One is a matter of individual decision, the desire on the part of any one member to sever himself from the joint family and to enjoy his hitherto undefined or unspecified share separately from the others without being subject to the obligations which arise from the joint status; whilist the other is the natural resultant from his decision, the division and separation of his share, which may be arrived at either by private agreement among the parties, or on failure of that by the intervention of the Court. Once the decision has been unquivocally expressed and clearly intimated to his co-shares. his right to obtain and possess the share to which he admittedly has a title is unimpeachable; neither the co-sharers can question it, nor can the Court examine his conscience to find out whether his reasons for separation were well founded or sufficient;, the Court has simply to give effect to his right to have his share allocated separately from the others."

Their Lordships pointed out at page 161 that the District Court had confused the two considerations, namely, the serverance of status, which is a matter of individual volition, with the allotment of shares, which may be effected by different methods: by private agreements, by arbitrators appointed by the parties, or, in the last resort by the Court. This is now the leading case and has been followed in numerous cases: 44 I. A. 159: 39 ALL. 496,[18] 52 I. A. 83 : 48 Mad 254[19] (258), 58 I.A. 220, (224) : 53 ALL. 300[20] and I. L. R. (1939) ALL. 680[21], (685).

[32] In 44 I. A. 159 : 39 ALL. 496[18] the question was whether a morgage executed by Prabhu Lal was enforceable. If was joint at the time he executed the mortgage he had no power to execute it and the mortgage was void and unenforcable. If, however, he was separate the mortgage of his 1/5th share was valid and enforceable. The decision of the question turned on determination of the point whether he was joint or separate. In order to arrive at a decision the legal effect of a previous suit for partition filed by him had to be construed, Their Lordships held that notwithstanding the dismissal of.the suit for partition the claim in the plaint amounted to an intimation to the defendants, his co-sharers, of the unequivocal desire of the plaintiff for separation from the joint family and they held that the commencement of the suit for partition effected a separation from the joint family and that it was immaterial in such case, whether the co-sharers assent. Their Lordships observed at page 161:

"A decree may be necessary for working out the result of the severance and for allotting definite shares, but the status of the plaintiff as separate in estate is brought about by his assertion of his right to separate, whether he obtains a consequential judgment or not."

As the mortgage was executed by Prabhulal after separation it was binding on him.

[33] In 52 I. A. 83 : 48 Mad. 254,[19] their Lordships of the Judicial Committee stated at p. 86 that the fact that any member of a joint family has separated himself from his coparceners may be proved by his suing for a partition of the joint family property, and if the suit is decreed the date of his severance from the joint family will, if nothing else is proved, be treated as the date when the suit was instituted.

[34] In each of the Privy Council cases referred to above, with the exception of I. L. R. (1939) ALL. 680,[21] their Lordships of the Judicial Committee had to consider the effect of a suit for partition filed by an adult male coparcener. It may be taken as settled that where an adult coparcener clearly and unequivocally gives a notice of his intention to separate from the joint Hindu family he becomes separate in status from the date of the notice and if no previous notice is given, the filing of a suit for partition amounts to an expression of an intention to separate and if the claim is decreed the date of severance relates back to the date of the institution of the suit and not the date of the decree.

[35] The learned counsel for the appellant contended that these principles are not applicable to the case of a minor plaintiff suing for partition and in his case the severance of the joint status takes place not from the date the suit for partition is filed on his behalf but on the date when the decree for partition is made in his favour. On that point there was a divergence of judicial opinion but the weight of authority is in favour of the view that even in the case of minor, if his claim for partition is decreed the date of severance is the date of suit and not the date of decree.

[36] There are three cases of this Court which are, however, inconclusive as in none of these cases the point was decided. In I. L. R. (1941) Nag. 652[22] at p 655 the conflict of views was noted but it was not decided as it was not necessary. In that case, the question was whether the mortgage executed by Ratan Singh on 23 7-1930 was binding on his wife and minor son who claimed that they had separated before the date of the mortgage and that the mortgage was not binding on them. Prior to the execution of the mortgage the minor had filed a suit for partition through his next friend but that was filed in a wrong Court and the plaint was returned for presentation to the proper Court on 4-10-1930 and it was re presented in the proper Court in 1931. On those facts, it was held that the suit for partition must be deemed to have been instituted in 1931 when the plaint was filed in the proper Court and as the mortgage was effected before that date the mortgage was binding. The question whether the severance took place on the date when the suit for partition was filed or on the date when the preliminary decree for partition was made, was not material in that case because the mortgage was executed before either of the dates. Reference in that case was made to A. I. R. 1935 Bom. 54[23] and 42 ALL. 461[24] but no reference was made to the later cases 48 Mad. 465,[25] 50 Mad. 866,[26] 57 Mad. 95[27] and I. L. R. (1939) Bom. 256[28] where it was decided that the mere filing of a suit by a minor does not ipso facto cause severance of the joint status but that if the Court considers that the partition is for the benefit of the minor and decrees the claim, the partition relates back to the date of the institution of the suit and not to the date of the decree.

[37] In I. L. R. (1943) Nag. 390[29] at p. 407 the cases in I. L. R. (1939) Bom. 256,[28] 50 Mad. 866[26] and I. L. R. (1941) Nag. 652[22] at p. 655 were incidentally noted but the point was not decided as the plea had not been raised in the Courts below. There was no reference to 48 Mad. 465,[25] 50 Mad. 866[26] and 57 Mad. 95.[27]

[38] In I. L. R. (1945) Nag. 444[30] at p. 450 it was held that the mere commencement of a suit for partition is sufficient to effect a severance in interest before the decree No minors were involved in the case and it was not necessary to consider the effect of a suit filed by a minor plaintiff for partition, whether severance of status takes place from the date of the suit or the date of the decree. The statement at p. 450 is a part of the argument of counsel and not a part of the decision. This was pointed out by one of us (Bose J.) who had delivered the judgment in that case. The learned counsel for the appellant did not stress the matter further and did not contend that the decision is an authority in support of the proposition he contended, So far as this Court is concerned, the matter is res integra and can be decided on first principles.

[39] In 10 W. R. 273[31] Mitter J stated:

"Now it is settled doctrine of the Hindu Law that every member of a joint undivided family has an indefeasible right to demand a partition of his own share. The other members of the family must submit to it whether they like it or not."

This statement was cited with approval by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in 43 I. A. 151[14] at p. 161. At p. 160 their Lordships of the Judicial Committee observed:

"Once the decision has been unequivocally expressed and clearly intimated to his co sharers, his right to obtain and possess the share to which he admittedly has a title is unimpeachable; neither the co sharers can question it, nor can the Court examine his conscience to find out whether his reasons for separation were well founded or sufficient; the Court has simply to give effect to his right to have his share allocated separately from the others."

[40] In 30 I. A. 139[32] the Privy Council had to consider the effect of an Ikrarnama executed on 21 6-1883 by adult coparceners. Under that agreement the parties agreed to divide the coparcenery property in certain defined shares. The question was whether the agreement to separate executed by the guardians on behalf of the minor coparceners was effective to cause a severance of status. The decision was that it did. Their Lordships of the Judicial Committee observed at p. 150:

"There is no doubt that a valid agreement for partition may be made during the minority of one or more of the coparceners. That seems to follow from the admitted right of one coparcener to claim a partition, and (as has been said) if an agreement for partition could not be made binding on minors a partition could hardly ever take place. No doubt, if the partition were unfair or prejudicial to the minor's interests, he might, on attaining his majority, by proper proceedings set it aside so far as regards himself."

[41] This was applied in 36 I. A. 71[33] and an agreement entered into during the minority of some of the coparceners was upheld and it was held that there was a severance of status. The mere fact that one of the coparceners is a minor does not affect the right of an adult coparcener to separate if he chooses: 9 N. L. R. 111[34] and 60 Bom. 736.[35] It is now settled that a valid partition may be made during the minority of one or more coparceners: Mayne's Hindu Law paras. 426, 539. If a guardian can represent a minor in effecting a partition, there is no reason why he should not have the right to separate the minor from the family by giving a notice and if that right is denied, to enforce the claim by a suit for partition.

[42] In I. L. R. (1939) ALL. 680[21] the question was whether the claim by the guardian of a lunatic for separation of his share effected a severance of his status. The decision was that it did. The question arose in this way. Two of the coparceners Ram Das and Parsotam filed a suit for partition and claimed half share. The defendants were the other two coparceners Ram Narain and Deo Narain. Deo Narain was a lunatic and he was represented in the suit by his wife as his guardian. Deo Narain filed a written statement but there was no demand for separation from Ram Narain, the other defendant. On 23-4-1924 the trial Judge ordered partition and directed the amin to divide the properties into two lots. On 10-5-1924, the guardian of Deo Narain filed an application that his share be separated by the amin and stated that there was an apprehension of loss in future if the said share was allowed to remain joint. The trial Court passed a final decree for partition in which 1/4th share was allotted in severalty to Deo Narain. Ramnarain and his son filed an appeal in the High Court on 27-7-1925. During the pendency of the appeal, Deo Narain died on 5-8-1927 leaving behind him a widow and a daughter. The widow was brought on the record in his place as his legal representative. The High Court held that after the preliminary decree the trial Court was not competent to entertain an application that Deo Narain's share should be separated, and accordingly reversed the decree granting a share to Deo Narain but left the question open as regards the legal effect of the application of the guardian upon the status of the family property or the constitution of the family qua Ram Narain and Deo Narain which was left to be determined in a properly framed suit.

[43] Ram Narain and his son filed a suit for declaration that Deo Narain died joint and that they were entitled to the entire property by survivorship. The trial Court dismissed the suit which was affirmed by the High Court in A.I.R. 1935 ALL. 875.[36] The High Court held that the guardian ad litem of Deo Narain did clearly express an intention by means of an application to have the share of Deo Narain separated from the share of Ram Narain and the application had the approval both of the trial Court and of the High Court and had the legal effect of bringing about separation between Ram Narain and Deo Narain even if they were joint up to the time that the petition was filed in Court. At p. 882 their Lordships observed:

"A member of a joint family who is a minor or of unsound mind is incapable of giving expression to an effective intention to separate, but such intention can be expressed by his guardian and has the legal effect of bringing about disruption of the joint family, provided the Court is of the opinion that it is to the benefit of the minor or the person of unsound mind to separate. Once the Court has recorded a finding to that effect the separation follows as a matter of law."

[44] The decision of the High Court was affirmed by the Privy Council in I. L. R. (1939) ALL. 680.[21] At p. 687 their Lordships of the Judicial Committee observed that the ordinary right of a coparcener to effect a separation of his estate, interest or title as distinct from a partition by metes and bounds by proper declaration of his desire to sever, is not abrogated by the mere fact that he has not claimed to exercise it prior to the preliminary decree. As the demand by the guardian for separation of the estate and interest of the lunatic had the approval of the trial Judge and apparently of the High Court, and as it was not shown to have been in any way contrary to the interests of the lunatic, it was held that the application of the guardian amounted to severance of status. The principle underlying this decision is equally applicable to the case of a notice given by a guardian on behalf of a minor to separate from the joint family or by his filing a suit for partition on his behalf.

[45] In the case of a minor the right to separate has to be exercised on his behalf by a person acting as his guardian. There are special considerations why a Court must scrutinise the reasons given by the guardian for separation of the minor to find out whether they were well founded or sufficient and if the Court is satisfied that the partition is for the benefit of the minor, to give effect to his right to have his share allocated separately from the others. The Court exercises this power because it has supervisory jurisdiction over the property of the minor and to control the action of a person who purports to act on his behalf.

[46] Story in para. 1769 of Vol. 3 of his Equity Jurisprudence, 14th Edition, states the law regarding infants thus:

"Properly speaking, a ward of chancery is a person who is under a guardian appointed by the Court of Chancery. But wherever a suit is instituted in the Court of Chancery relative to the person or property of an infant, although he is not under any general guardian appointed by the Court, he is treated as a ward of the Court and as being under its especial cognizance and protection."

In para. 1771 it is stated that in all cases where an infant is a ward of chancery no act can be done affecting the person or property or state of the minor, unless under the express or implied direction of the Court itself. The principle stated by Story has been applied in several Indian cases : 13 Bom. 137,[37] at pp. 145, 146, 27 Mad. 377,[38] 57 Mad. 95,[27] at pp. 140, 148 and it has been held that a suit relating to the estate or person of an infant and for his benefit has the effect of making him a ward of Court and that being so, no act can be done affecting the property of the minor unless under the express or implied direction of the Court itself.

[47] Under Order 32, Civil P. C. a Court has ample power to remove the next friend of a minor if he acts to his prejudice and to make him liable for costs of the suit in case the suit filed by him on behalf of the minor for partition was frivolous, or vexatious or not for the benefit of the minor. In suitable cases, a suit may be stayed in order to enable the minor to decide on his attaining majority whether he elects to proceed with the suit or to abandon it. The guardian purporting to act on behalf of a minor may do so out of hostility to the family of which the minor is a member and may be actuated by considerations other than the benefit of the minor and he need not necessarily be a person who is interested in the welfare of the minor. That is the reason why the Court has to determine whether a suit for partition filed on behalf of a minor is for his benefit and if satisfied to decree his claim.

[48] As stated in 3 M. H. C. R. 94,[39] at p. 96 an action will not indeed lie, unless there is something clearly indicating that the interests of the infant will be advanced by partition, because, ordinarily speaking the family estate is better managed and yields a greater ratio of profit in union than when split up and distributed among the several parceners, and as a general rule, therefore it is more profitable for an infant parcener, that his share should continue an integral portion of the whole estate in the hands of kinsmen. At page 98, Innes J. observed :

"that it often may not be for the benefit of a minor that he should have a partition; if his rights are not denied or the property not mismanaged, it might not be so, he would lose for instance the possible benefit of survivorship, and generally so great a change in the condition of a minor as a partition operates, ought not to be allowed to take place, unless it is clearly for his benefit that it should be so."

Accordingly, it has been the settled practice not to decree a suit for partition filed on behalf of a minor plaintiff unless the Court is satisfied that the partition is for his benefit. This does not in any way affect the right which a minor has to separate from the joint Hindu family if it is for his benefit and that power can be exercised on his behalf by a person purporting to act as his guardian. Any person can file a suit for partition on behalf of a minor and a change in his legal status which affects his right to property in various ways should not be permitted unless the Court is satisfied that the partition is for his benefit. That was laid down in 3 M. H. C. R. 94[39] at p. 96 and has been followed in numerous cases. In 29 Bom. 51[40] at p. 60 Tyabji J. refused to decree partition because it was not for the benefit of the minor and that decree was affirmed in appeal by the High Court and also by the Privy Council in 34 I. A. 107 : 31 Bom. 373[41]

[49] In deciding whether partition is in the interest and for the benefit of the minor a Court is not restricted to considerations purely personal to the minor but may take into consideration matters concerning his mother, or his wife or his daughter in whom he may be interested. The power which the Court exercises in decreeing or refusing partition at the instance of a minor plaintiff is not in denial but in protection of his right which he undoubtedly has to separate from the joint Hindu family if it is in his interest and for his benefit. This aspect of the case has been considered in some Madras cases to which reference will be made later. When, however, the Court decrees a suit for partition filed on behalf of a minor, there is no reason why the separation or severance of status should not be from the date of the plaint as in the case of an adult coparcener.

[50] The right of action for partition rests upon the right to separate by a Hindu coparcener. The cause of action for a minor's suit is not essentially different from the one by an adult. The only difference is that in the case of a minor the right to separate is asserted on his behalf by his guardian. The Court grants relief on the cause of action stated in the plaint if it is satisfied that the assertion by the guardian was properly made and that partition was in the interest of and for the benefit of the minor. The right to partition is a right relating to property. It is not a case of a personal action which dies with the person — actio personalis moritur cum persona. A suit, if properly instituted, should not abate, but on plaintiff's death his legal representatives should be in a position to carry on the litigation. The cause of action survives on the death of a minor plaintiff and it cannot be said that if a minor dies before a decree for partition is passed that he dies joint.

[51] Two principles are well recognised in the matter of grant of relief to suitors and have been stated with precision by Mookherjee J. in 20 C. L. J. 107[42] in these terms. A suit must be tried in all its stages on the cause of action as it existed at the date of its commencement. The Court, however, may in suitable cases take notice of events which have happened since the institution of the suit and afford relief to the parties on the basis of the altered conditions. This doctrine is of an exceptional character and is applied in cases where it is shown that the original relief claimed has, by reason of subsequent change of circumstances, become inappropriate, or, that it is necessary to base the decision of the Court on the altered circumstances in order to shorten litigation or to do complete justice between the parties. If these two principles are borne in mind many of the difficulties raised by Reilly J. in his order of reference in 57 Mad. 95,[27] and on which great stress was laid by the learned counsel for the appellant, can be resolved.

[52] In 41 Mad. 442[43] two propositions were stated. The first proposition was that the rule that the institution of a suit for partition of joint family property effects a severance of the joint status is not applicable to a suit instituted on behalf of a minor; for, in such suit, it is for the Court to determine whether a decree for partition will be beneficial to the minor. The second proposition was that where a minor plaintiff dies during the pendency of the suit before a decree for partition is passed his legal representatives are not entitled to continue the suit. The first proposition was followed in latter cases but the question whether the second proposition was correct was not decided in those cases. The contention of the appellant in that case, that the mere filing of a suit for partition on behalf of a minor effects a severance of joint status, was negatived and it was held that the mere fact of the filing of a suit does not cause a severance of a status and that it is for the Court to determine whether in the special circumstances of the case partition was for the benefit of the minor and in case it was so, the Court is to decree the claim for partition. As the minor plaintiff died before a decree for partition was passed it was not necessary to decide when the severance of status takes places, whether from the date the suit for partition is filed or from the date of the decree. A suit for partition on behalf of a minor, if properly instituted, should not abate on his death but his legal representative should be in a position to carry on the litigation. There is no jusitfication for the assumption that the cause of action does not survive on the death of a minor plaintiff after the suit for partition has been filed on his behalf. The decision in 41 Mad. 442[43] was in conflict with the earlier Full Bench decision in 39 Mad. 159[15] and has been overruled by the Full Bench decision in 57 Mad. 95.[27]

[53] In 48 Mad. 465[25] it was held that the suit by a minor for partition, if it ends in a decree for partition, has the effect of creating a division of status from the date of the plaint. In that case after the institution of a suit for partition on 31-1-1919, another son was born in May or June 1920 before the preliminary decree for partition was passed. It was held that the birth of a son subsequent to the filing of the suit for partition did not affect the share of the plaintiff which had to be determined on the state of affairs as existed on the date of the suit and not on the date of the decree. Spencer J. at p. 468 stated that it is a sound principle to regard the prayer in the minor's plaint for division as a conditional request that, provided that the Court sees fit, it may declare the status of the minor divided as from the date of the plaint and though there can be no division unless the Court sees fit to decree it, there is no reason why the Court should not make its decree take effect from the date of the institution of the suit. In the case of a suit by an adult coparcener for partition his share is not liable to be altered by the birth of a coparcener after filing of the suit for partition. There is no reason why a distinction should be made between adults and minors so far as their shares are subject to alteration in consequence of events that occur between the commencement and the end of a partition suit.

[54] In 50 Mad. 866[26] a minor plaintiff sued for partition on 14-8-1918 and a preliminary decree for partition was passed on 7-4-1921. The question for decision was when did the severance of status take place whether on 14-8-1918 when the suit was filed or on 7-4-1921 when the preliminary decree for partition was passed. That was necessary in order to determine the extent and share of the liability of the manager to render account. It was held that when a suit for partition is instituted on behalf of a Hindu minor and if the Court holds that a division is necessary in the interests of the minor and passes a preliminary decree for partition, it must be deemed that the divided status of the plaintiff dates from the date of the plaint and not from that of the preliminary decree.

[55] In A. I. R. 1930 Mad. 486[16] it was held that where in a suit for partition a minor defendant claimed a share and subsequently died his mother was entitled to continue the suit as his legal representative. The principle underlying the decision was that a guardian can on behalf of a minor exercise the discretion to separate from the joint Hindu family and if the Court approves, a decree for partition can be made at the instance of a guardian. Jackson J. pointed out that the Court acts as a super guardian in this matter and when once it is assumed that the Court may act for the minor and vicariously exercise his volition, there is nothing in logic to prevent the guardian doing the same.

[56] In 57 Mad 95[27] the question for decision was whether on the death of a minor plaintiff in a suit for partition the suit abated or whether it could be continued by his legal representative. The case came on for hearing before Venkatasubba Rao and Reilly JJ. They made separate orders for reference to a Full Bench. Venkatasubba Rao J. was of opinion that the suit did not abate and that the mother of the plaintiff was entitled to proceed with the trial of the suit. Reilly J. took a contrary view. The Full Bench case was decided by three Judges and it was held that it was open to his legal representative to proceed with the trial and obtain a decree on her showing that when the partition suit was instituted it was for the benefit of the minor and that a suit by a minor for partition does not abate if he dies before the Court has found that the partition is for his benefit. The Full Bench case in 57 Mad. 95[27] was followed in A. I. R. 1937 Mad. 274,[7] A. I. R. 1941 Mad. 828[44] and in I. L. R. (1945) Mad 710[45] In the last case the doctrine was further extended and it was held that the severance takes place on the date the guardian communicates his intention on behalf of the minor to separate and that if the Court holds that the partition is for the benefit of the minor the severance relates back to the date of the notice given on behalf of the minor.

[57] In 4 Pat. L. J. 38: A. I. R. 1918 Pat. 91[46] Nandeshwar, a minor, filed a suit for partition on 11-8-1913 against his parents, step-mother Aina and grandmother for partition. During the pendency of the suit, the plaintiff attained majority. The trial Court held on 4-8-1915 that each of the parties was entitled to 1/5th share and accordingly decreed the claim for partition. Against this decree, his father Krishna Lal Jha filed an appeal in the High Court. During the pendency of the appeal, a son was born to him on 21-11-1915 by his 2nd wife Aina. The question for decision was whether the birth of a half-brother after the suit was filed affected the share of the plaintiff. The half-brother had not been conceived when the suit for partition had been filed on 11-8-1913 but was in utero on 4-8-1915 when the decree was made. If severance of status of the plaintiff took place on 11-8-1913 when the suit was filed, he was entitled to 1/5th share and the subsequent birth of a half-brother who was not conceived at the date of the suit would not have affected the share of the plaintiff. If, on the other hand, the severance took place on 4-8-1915 when the decree for partition was made the plaintiff was entitled only to 1/6th share as the half-brother who was in the womb was also entitled to a share. The date of severance was thus material as that would have determined the share of the plaintiff. It was held that the severance of status took place on 11-8-1913 when the suit for partition was filed, that the plaintiff was entitled to 1/5th share and that his share was not diminished by the subsequent birth of a half-brother during the pendency of the litigation.

[58] The cases in 4 Pat. L. J. 38 : A. I. R. 1918 Pat 921[46] and 48 Mad. 465[25] were followed by Agarwala J. in 14 Pat. 732[47] at p. 777 who held that when a partition suit, instituted by a minor, is decreed, the partition is effective from the date when the suit was instituted.

[59] In I. L. R. (1939) Bom. 256[28] a Hindu minor through his next friend filed a suit for partition against his father and grand-mother. The mother and the step-mother were not impleaded as defendants. Notwithstanding the defect the trial Court passed a decree for partition. On appeal the case was remanded for a de novo trial after impleading the mother and the step-mother. A half-brother who was born after the institution of the suit was also added as a defendant after remand. The question was whether the after-born son was entitled to a share and whether the share of the plaintiff was affected. The High Court approved of the decisions in 48 Mad. 465[25] 50 Mad. 866[26] and 57 Mad. 95[27] and held that although the institution of a suit for partition by a Hindu minor through his next friend does not ipso facto effect a severance of the joint status, if a decree were passed in that suit, the severance in estate must take effect from the date of the suit. Consequently the share of the plaintiff was not diminished by the birth of a son after the institution of the suit.

[60] In A. I. R. 1944 Bom. 67[48] it was held that a partition cannot be claimed by a minor as a matter of right and it is to be decreed in the minor's favour only if the Court is of opinion that in the circumstances of the case partition is in his interest and for his benefit. Divatia J. pointed out that this rule was one of prudence and expediency and did not affect the fundamental rule of Hindu law that a coparcener can sever his status merely by expressing a clear intention to do so. The decisions of the Madras High Court in 48 Mad. 465,[25] 50 Mad. 866.[26] and 57 Mad. 95,[27] and the decision in I. L. R. (1939) Bom. 256,[28] were followed and it was held that where a notice to separate is given by a guardian on behalf of a minor and the Court finds that the separation was for the benefit of the minor, the severance of status dates back from the date when the notice was given. The decision was the same as was taken in I. L. R. (1945) Mad. 710.[45]

[61] The learned counsel for the appellant relied on a few cases in support of his contention that the severance of status in the case of a minor takes places when a decree for partition is made and not when a suit is filed. In 42 ALL 461,[24] the plaintiff, a minor, through his mother as his next friend, filed a suit for partition against his grandfather on 18-11-1914. The grandfather made a will on 22-11-1914 and died on 25-11-1914. There was nothing to show that the grand-father knew of this suit. The question involved was as regards the validity of the will. The decision was that the grand-father died joint with the plaintiff and that the will made by him was inoperative in law. The decision was based on 41 Mad. 442,[43] which has been distinguished in later cases and subsequently overruled in 57 Mad. 95.[27] In the Allahabad case a decree had not been passed and it was in the interest of the minor that there should be no decree for partition as he got the property by survivorship on the death of his grand-father. Banerji J. at p. 470 stated that the rule laid down by the Privy Council in 43 I. A. 151,[14] to the effect that the institution of a suit for partition of joint family property has the effect of creating a separation of the joint family, cannot be applicable to a suit brought on behalf of a minor which has not matured into a decree. This aspect of the case has been elaborated in the Madras cases where it has been laid down that once a decree is passed, the severance of status takes place from the date of suit and not from the date of the decree.

[62] In A. I. R. 1926 Sind 216,[49] the minor plaintiffs through their mother filed a suit for partition and claimed 1/4th share against their uncle and other members of the family. During the pendency of the suit, their uncle died bequeathing certain legacies to his daughter-in-law and the residuary estate to the defendants. The question was about the validity of the will. If the defendant died joint he had no power to bequeath the property and the plaintiffs were entitled to half share. The decision of that point depended on the date of severance of status. It was held following the decision in 41 Mad. 442,[43] and 42 ALL. 461,[24] that the mere institution of a suit by a minor does not effect a partition of the family but separation takes place only when the suit is decreed. We have already given reasons why this view is not sound and we respectfully dissent from the decision.

[63] In A. I. R. 1935 Bom. 54,[23] observations at p. 61 of Divatia J. based on 41 Mad. 442,[43] were obiter and not necessary for the decision of the case. No reference was made by him to later cases : 48 Mad. 465,[25] 50 Mad. 866,[26] and 57 Mad. 95.[27] Murphy J. who delivered a concurring judgment did not refer to 41 Mad. 442,[43] or base his decision on it. This was pointed out by Wassoodew J. in I. L. R. (1939) Bom. 256,[28] at p. 261 and by Divatia J. himself in A. I. R. 1944 Bom. 67,[48] A. I. R. 1935 Bom. 54,[23] cannot be quoted as an authority in support of the proposition contended by the learned counsel for the appellant, especially as a contrary view was taken in later cases in the same Court

[64] In A. I R. 1936 Lah. 504,[50] it was held that the mere institution of a suit does not effect a separation of the family but separation only takes places when the suit is decreed and that consequently the liability to render account to the plaintiff is from the date of the preliminary decree. No reference was made to the Full Bench case in 57 Mad. 95.[27] In the judgment the conflict between the Allahabad view and the Madras view is noted but no reasons have been given for accepting the Allahabad view.

[65] The learned counsel for the appellant commended the opinion of Reilly J. in his order of reference in 57 Mad. 95[27] for our acceptance. The opinion of Reilly J. apparently did not meet with the approval of the learned Judges of the Full Bench. No useful purpose will be served in discussing his opinion because the Judges of the Full Bench dealt with every aspect of the case and have given reasons both on principle as well as on authority why the severance of status, even in the case of a minor, takes place from the date on which the suit for partition is filed and not from the date of the decree. We respectfully agree with the Full Bench decision and do not, therefore, cover the same ground over again.

[66] The view taken by the Madras High Court in 48 Mad. 465,[25] 50 Mad. 866[26] and 57 Mad. 95[27] and followed by the Bombay High Court in A. I. R. 1939 Bom. 256[28] is not only the more logical view but is also the better one from the point of view of convenience : it safeguards the interests of the minor, avoids anomalies and makes for consistency. We approve these decisions and hold that even in a suit filed by a minor the severance of status takes place from the date of the suit and not from the date of the decree. Accordingly, the critical date was 27-9-1937 when Civil Suit NO. 6-A of 1937 for partition was filed by Dineshchandra As on that date Mandliprasad was not in utero, he was not entitled to reopen the partition made in that suit. Ramcharanlal was given a share and the plaintiff was entitled under law to claim a portion out of his share and not out of the share given to Deviprasad.

(67) The plaintiff did not claim in the alternative that if he was not entitled to reopen partition, he may be given a share out of the

1/3rd share allotted to his father or out of the 2/3rd share allotted to him and Dineshchandra as stated in the final decree. This case was not set up or tried in the Courts below. This has not been made a ground in the memorandum of appeal in this Court. If partition is allowed now Chandramukhi will be entitled to a share and the plaintiff will lose the right to claim by survivorship, and he will need somebody to look after his share during his minority. He was of 1 year when he filed the suit for partition and may be now about 8 years of age. He is living with his father. Nothing has been alleged against him. The object of the suit was to reduce the share of Deviprasad from 1/3rd to 1/5th. That has failed. Partition in the circumstances of the case will not be in the interest and for the benefit of the plaintiff and is accordingly refused. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Judgment.—This is a second appeal by the plaintiff whose suit for declaration was decreed by the trial Court but dismissed by the Court of First Appeal. The plaintiff purchased 3 annas, malguzari share in patti No. 3 of mouza Lalpur belonging to the defendants in the sale held by the Sub-Divisional Officer, Waraseoni, on 20th April in execution of the decree in Civil Suit No. 2 of 1939 of the Court of the Sub-Judge, First Class, Balaghat, which was transferred by that Court for execution to the Collector in pursuance of the notification issued by the Provincial Government under S. 68, Civil P. C. This sale was confirmed on 10-6-1940. Before this sale was held the defendants had filed an application on 13-1-1940 before the Debt Relief Court for determination of their debts and framing a scheme for repayment. On that very day, the presiding officer of the Debt Relief Court passed an order directing that notice be issued to the Sub-Divisional Officer, Waraseoni, for staying the proceedings in execution pending before him. On 17-1-1940, another order was passed directing the issue of notices to the Court of the Subordinate Judge First Class and Junior Small Cause Court, Balaghat. On 4 5-1940 a notice in form No. 3 as prescribed by R. 15 of the rules framed under the Relief of Indebtedness Act was issued to the Sub-Divisional Officer Waraseoni before whom the proceedings for confirmation of the sale of that village share were pending. In spite of that notice the sale was confirmed. An appeal was filed before the Deputy Commissioner by the defendants against the order dated 10-6-1940 confirming the sale, but it was dismissed. The defendants then made an application to the Financial Commissioner for revision of that order, and it was allowed; the order of sale was set aside, and the case was remanded for disposal according to law.

[2] The plaintiff therefore brought the suit out of which this second appeal has arisen for a declaration that the order passed by the Financial Commissioner was invalid and without jurisdiction and did not affect his right, title, and interest to the 3 annas village share purchased by him at the auction sale. Though the trial Court granted to the plaintiff the declaration prayed for the District Judge, Chhindwara, has set aside that decree in appeal and dismissed the plaintiff's suit holding that the order passed by the Financial Commissioner is final and that the civil Courts have no jurisdiction to interfere with it; and that is the question for decision in this second appeal.

[3] The Financial Commissioner passed the order under R. 15 of the rules made by the Provincial Government under S. 70(1), Civil P. C. 1908. This rule which is to be found at p. 175 of the Revenue Manual Vol. 2, is to the following effect:

'In regard to any order passed in appeal under the preceding rule, the Governor in Council shall have the same powers of revision as are vested in the Judicial Commissioner by S. 115, Civil P. C. in respect of cases in which no appeal lies to the Judicial Commissioner.'

The Provincial Government had the power to make such a rule under S. 70(1)(c), Civil P. C. and it empowers the Financial Commissioner to go into the question whether in passing the order the Deputy Commissioner or Collector (a) exercised jurisdiction not vested in him by law or (b) failed to exercise jurisdiction so vested or (c) acted in the exercise of his jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity, and if it appears that he has done so to pass such order in the case as the Financial Commissioner thinks fit. That is exactly what the Financial Commissioner has done in this case. In his order dated 20-3-1941 (Ex. P. 6) the Financial Commissioner says:

'It must be held that in the peculiar circumstances of this case the orders of the Relief Court deprived the Collector of jurisdiction. I, therefore, set aside the order of sale and remand the case for disposal according to law.'

[4] The learned counsel for the appellant contends that the Financial Commissioner was wrong in saying that the Collector was deprived of jurisdiction by the orders of the Relief Court. It may be so; the Financial Commissioner may have come to an erroneous decision on a question of fact or even of law, but that does not mean that he had no jurisdiction to give that decision.

[5] The Financial Commissioner having jurisdiction no suit lies to set aside his order according to the opinion expressed at p. 278 of Mulla's Civil Procedure Code, Edn. 11 (1941), on which the learned counsel for the appellant relies, and which is to the following effect:

'A suit will lie to set aside an order made by the Collector, if the order is ultra vires.'

[6] Their Lordships of the Privy Council in I. L. R. (1940) Mad. 599,[1] made the following remarks at p. 614:

"It is settled law that the exclusion of the jurisdiction of the civil Courts is not to be readily inferred, but that such exclusion must either be explicitly expressed or clearly implied. It is also well settled that even if jurisdiction is so excluded, the civil Courts have jurisdiction to examine into cases where the provisions of the Act have not been complied with, or the statutory tribunal has not acted in conformity with the fundamental principles of judicial procedure."

By rule 12 of the rules framed under S. 70 (1), Civil P. C., the Deputy Commissioner to whom decrees are sent under S. 68, Civil P. C. for execution is invested with all the powers which the Court might exercise in execution of such decrees if the execution thereof had not been transferred to the Deputy Commissioner including the powers of the Court under rules 72 and 92 in O. 21, Sch. 1. Civil P. C. Rule 13 invests Assistant Commissioners of the First Class and Extra Assistant Commissioners invested with the powers of an Assistant Commissioner of the First Class with all the powers of a Deputy Commissioner under those rules. Rule 14 provides for an appeal to the Deputy Commissioner if an order is passed by an Assistant or Extra Assistant Commissioner who is a Sub-Divisional Officer. Then comes rule 15, which deals with the powers of revision given to the Financial Commissioner. By these rules a precise and self-contained code of appeal is provided in regard to the orders passed in the proceedings before the Collector and the jurisdiction of the civil Courts seems to have been excluded by implication.

[7] It may be contended that in I. L. R. (1940) Mad. 599[1] their Lordships were dealing with a provision which said that every order passed in appeal shall be final, whereas there are no such words in the rules made under S. 70 (1), Civil P. C. But this only means that in that case the exclusion of the jurisdiction of the civil Courts was explicitly expressed, while in this case it is implied.

[8] We may mention here that in this case it is only the order of the Financial Commissioner which is challenged as ultra vires and not the order of the Collector. Our decision therefore does not cover the case where not only the order of the Financial Commissioner but even the order of the Collector, i. e. the Sub-Divisional Officer, is challenged as ultra vires. We are of the opinion that the order of the Financial Commissioner in this case is final and civil Courts have no jurisdiction to interfere with it. The decision of the learned District Judge is quite correct, and this appeal is hereby dismissed with costs.

Judgment.—This is an appeal by defendant 2 and the only point for consideration is whether the suit itself was time-barred. The cause of action on a promissory note arose on 5.11.1936, and on 3.11.1939 the plaintiffs brought a suit in the Court of the First Sub-Judge Second Class, Jubbulpore. On 3.5 1940, that Court held that it had no jurisdiction to try the suit as no part of the cause of action arose at Jubbulpore and returned the plaint to be filed in the proper Court, which in this case was the Court of the First Sub-Judge, Second Class, Chhindwara. The 4th of May was a working day, the 5th of May was a Sunday, and the Courts closed for the summer vacation on the next day, the 6th of May. The plaint was presented on the day on which the Courts re-opened.

[2] In the Chhindwara Court, the defendants took the stand in their written statement without elaborating their reasons, that the suit was time-barred. That the argument turned on the right to exclude the time taken in the Court of Jubbulpore is evident from the finding of the trial Court that the suit at Jubbulpore was prosecuted bona fide and that the time there taken could be excluded under the provisions of S. 14, Limitation Act. The Court also found that the delay in not filing a suit on the 4th of May in Chhindwara was excusable in view of the distance of Chhindwara from Jubbulpore and the fact that preparation would have to be made before the plaint could be presented in Chhindwara.

[3] On appeal by the defendants, the lower appellate Court on a full consideration of the litigation held that there had been no want of diligence in prosecuting the case in the Jubbulpore Court which ultimately found that it had no jurisdiction, and that the suit was instituted there bona fide, and the Court pointed out conflicting rulings in the Judicial Commissioner's Court which misled the plaintiffs' counsel. The learned appellate Judge, however, did not agree that the delay after the 4th of May could be condoned He held that it was prefectly possible for the plaintiff to reach Chhindwara on the 4th of May. He found, however, that his decision was immaterial inasmuch as he had allowed the time taken in the Jubbulpore Court to be excluded, that limitation expired on a day when the Court was closed, and that the plaint was presented in the proper Court on the first day that the Courts re-opened.

[4] In appeal, it was contended that S. 4, Limitation Act cannot be tacked on to the time excluded under S. 14, and the case in I. L. R. (1937) Nag. 217[1] was cited in support of the contention. This case, however, has no application since it was decided on the point that when limitation had expired during the vacation the plaint was not presented in the appropriate Court on the day on which the Courts reopened but on the second day. That S. 4, which by itself excludes no time, can be tacked on to S. 14, Limitation Act is apparent from the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in A. I R. 1935 P. C. 85[2]. It is there stated that what S. 4 of the Act provides is that where the period of limitation prescribed expires on a day when the Court is closed the application may be made on the day when the Court re-opens and that 'the Court' means the proper Court in which the application ought to have been made. To the same effect is a judgment by a Divisional Bench of the Calcutta High Court in A. I. R. 1929 Cal. 315.[3] In the case we are now considering, the plaint was laid in the proper Court and was presented on the first day after the Courts reopened, they having been closed on the date when limitation expired. It is also clear that limitation had not expired until the 5th of May and there was no need for the trial Court to condone the delay in not presenting the plaint on the 4th May. Deducting the time taken in the Jubbulpore Court the plaintiff had 2 days in hand which carried him safely up to the time when the Courts were closed.

[5] It was also contended on behalf of the appellant that the plaint when presented contained no averment or statement of the facts under which the plaintiffs claimed that their suit was within time. This point was raised in the lower appellate Court, but it was raised by the plaintiffs respondents who asked permission to be allowed formally to amend the plaint by including it. The defendant-appellant objected, but the objection was overruled. In our opinion, the objection was rightly over-ruled inasmuch as it was obvious from the very beginning that the provisions of S. 14 were to be invoked and indeed, on the issue raised on the defendants' pleading that the suit was time-barred the trial Court found that proceedings had been carried on bona fide in the Jubbulpore Court and allowed time to be excluded under the provisions of S. 14. Both parties then were well aware as to the nature of the argument which was to be afforded on this issue despite the fact that the prayer had inadvertently been omitted when the plaint was re-presented, and since the issue was there the defendant-appellant has not, as he contends, really been deprived of the opportunity of leading evidence to show mala fides in the Jubbulpore Court.

[6] The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Civil Revn. No. 258 of 1944, Decided on 11-3-1946, from decree of 3rd Sub-Judge, First Class, Nagpur, D/- 24-4-1944.

(a) Railways Act (1890), S. 77—Notice of claim to Superintendent General of Claims—Superintendent General subsequently authorised to receive notices under S. 77—Effect.

The question whether a particular officer is authorised by the Agent to receive notices on his behalf is a question of fact to be determined in each case. Agency may be proved by direct evidence of authority or by a course of conduct justifying the interence of authorisation : 9 A. I. R. 1922 Mad. 362 (F. B.), Rel. on. [Para 6]

A bale of cloth belonging to the plaintiff having been lost in transit, the plaintiff on 19-10 1942 sent a notice to the Superintendent General, B. N. Railway, demanding settlement of his claim. On 20-5-1943 that officer was invested with power of disposing of all claims and in November 1943 he was authorised to receive notices under S. 77 and to dispose of claims. The claim of the plaintiff was pending before him on that date for disposal.

Held that whether the notice meant for the Railway Administration is to be given to one Railway Officer or another is merely a matter of procedure and as enactments affecting procedure are deemed to be retrospective in operation, the order of the Agent delegating his power to the Superintendent General in November 1943 was retrospective in its operation in respect of all claims which were awaiting disposal on that date. Hence the notice given to the Superintendent General was sufficient to bind the Railway Company in terms of S. 77 even though the Superintendent General had not then been technically authorised to receive notices under that section and the failure to give notice to the Agent did not disentitle the plaintiff from claiming compensation which was justly due to him. [Paras 6 & 7]

(b) Railways Act (1890), S. 77—Object—Validity of notice—Question as to.

Section 77 is only intended to give an opportunity to the Railway Company to make satisfactory investigation. Where, therefore, the Railway Company has admitted that loss of goods belonging to the plaintiff had occurred in transit, that admission itself dispenses with the inquiry into the validity or invalidity of the notice of the claim made by the plaintiff. 17 A. Order.—This is an application to revise the judgment of the Third Subordinate Judge, 1st Class Nagpur, empowered under S. 18, C. P. Courts Act, in Civil Suit No. 89 of 1943 dismissing the plaintiff's suit on 24-4-1944.

[2] On 7-7-1942 the management of the Delhi Cloth and General Mills Company Limited sent 4 bales of towels from Delhi to Itwari in the name of the self and endorsed the same in favour of the plaintiff Govindlal, a minor. The plaintiff received only 3 bales at the Itwari station. One bale that was missing contained 40 dozen towels and then market rate being Rs.11- per dozen. The plaintiff made a complaint to the Station Master as well as to the Superintendent General of the Bengal Nagpur Railway Company and on 19-10-1942 sent a notice to the Superintendent General B. N. R. by registered post through his pleader demanding settlement of his claim as early as possible. That was acknowledged by the Superintendent General on 29-10-1942. As the plaintiff received no further response, he on 9-5-1943 served notices purporting to be under S. 80, Civil P. C. as well as under S. 77, Indian Railways Act, on the Secretary to the Central Government, New Delhi and the Manager G. I. P. Railway Victoria Terminus Bombay and the Agent B. N. R, Calcuttta. The Deputy Director, Railway Board, Simla, on 24-5-1943 intimated to the plaintiff that his notice had been forwarded for disposal to the Agent and General Manager, B. N. R., Calcutta, who was the competent authority to deal with the matter and to whom all further references on the subject should be made. Since the decision of the suit, the Bengal Nagpur Railway has come under the direct control of the Governor-General in Council as the G. I. P. Railway already was before the institution of the suit.

[3] In the lower Court both the Governor-General in Council representing the G. I. P. Railway and the Agent B. N. Railway conceded that there was the loss of one bale in transit and they did not contest the amount of damages claimed. They, however, contended that as no notice as contemplated in S. 77, Railways Act was properly served on the Manager of the G. I. P. Railway or the Agent of the B. N. Railway the plaintiff was not entitled to claim any damages. That contention prevailed in the lower Court with the result that the plaintiff's claim was dismissed.

[4] The main dispute turns on the question whether the notice that was given to the Superintendent General on 19-10 1942 (Ex. P-15) fulfilled the requirements of S. 77, Railways Act. In a number of cases it was held that the notice contemplated in S. 77, Railways Act must be served on the Agent or the Manager of the Company in one of the modes prescribed in S. 140, Railways Act. It was also held that notice served on an officer appointed to investigate the claim is not notice which could properly answer the requirements of S. 77, Indian Railways Act. These cases are referred to in 8 N. L. R. 34[1] and 24 N. L. R. 1.[2] But as there was divergence of the judicial opinion on the point the question came to be considered by a Full Bench in 45 Mad 135[3] in which it was held that the notice of claim under S. 77, Indian Railways Act must be served upon the Agent or Manager of the Railway or upon any officer deputed by the Company or its Agent or Manager to receive such notice and that it would be sufficient if the Agent or Manager had somehow knowledge of the claim within the specified time. Kumaraswami Sastri J. was of opinion that S. 140 was an enabling provision and that the word 'may' did not mean 'must' so as to make other modes of service ineffectual even in cases in which the notice was actually given. The learned Judges however concurred in the conclusion that the suit had been rightly thrown out because the notice had not been sent to the Agent and there was no evidence that the Agent had notice within the prescribed period, that is of six months. Since the decision of this case, the judicial opinion has turned against the too literal interpretation that used to be put in the past on the terms of Ss. 77 and 140, Railways Act, so as to save just claims from being throttled by purely technical considerations based on the letter of the law. In 57 Cal. 1286,[4] Lort-Williams J. pointed out that the object of S. 77 is to prevent dishonest claim for loss when owing to delay it might be impossible to trace the transaction and that it was intended as a weapon of defence against fraud, not as a means to enable the railway authorities to deprive their customers of their just dues. In 12 Pat. 67[5] it was held by Courtney-Terrell C. J, that if the company in the course of its business allowed their District Traffic Superintendent to deal with the claim of compensation that officer must be deemed to be the duly authorised agent of the Railway Company for the purposes of notice under S. 77 read with S. 140, Railways Act. These decisions may call for reconsideration of 8 N. L. R. 34[1] and 24 N.L.R. 1[2] in some proper case that may arise in this Court hereafter. The view taken in I. L. R (1944) Nag. 612[6] gives an indication of the trend towards a more judicial approach to the problem.

[5] So far as this case is concerned, it can be decided on the special facts which have been brought to light in this Court. Rule 4 printed on the back of the consignment note whice was current in July 1942 directed that the claims against the Railway Company for loss should be made to the Superintendent, Claims, B. N. Railway. From the affidavit filed on behalf of the B. N. Railway in this Court it appears that in 1922 (?) and upto 19-5-1943 the Superintendent General was receiving written statements of all claims. On 20-5 1943 that officer was invested with the power of receiving and disposing of all claims. In November 1943, the Superintendent General was authorised to receive notices under S. 77, Railways Act and dispose of all claims not exceeding Rs. 2000 without the sanction of the General Manager. After November 1943 any notice such as the one given by the plaintiff to the Superintendent General would be as good as one given to the Agent.

[6] It is to be seen what is the legal effect of the delegation of authority in November 1943. Whether the notice meant for the Railway Administration is to be given to one Railway officer or another is merely a matter of procedure. As pointed out by Kumaraswami Sastri J., in 45 Mad. 135[3] at pp. 154, 155 the question whether a particular officer is authorised by the Agent to receive notices on his behalf is a question of fact to be determined in each case. Agency may be proved by direct evidence of authority or by a course of conduct justifying the inference of authorisation. In the present case, the Superintendent General was in the course of the business, always held out as the person competent to receive claims and inquire into them so as to lead the public to believe that he was the officer appinted to receive notices under S. 77, Railways Act. The fact that he was expressly authorised in November 1943 was perfectly in conformity with the course of previous practice. It only made explicit what was implicit before. It is a well recognised rule of construction of statutes that enactments affecting procedure are deemed to be retrospective in their operation. Applying that principle to the order of the Agent delegating his power to the Superintendent General in November 1943 to receive notices under S. 77, Railways Act, that order would be deemed to be retrospective in its operation in respect of all the claims which were awaiting disposal on that day.

[7] Both the Railway Companies have admitted that the loss of one bale had occurred in transit. That admission itself dispenses with the enquiry into the validity or invalidity of the notice of the claim made by the plaintiff, since as pointed out in 57 Cal 1286[4] section 77, Railways Act is only intended to give an opportunity to the Railway Company to make satisfactory investigation. In view of the special facts of this case, I hold that the notice given to the Superintendent General within 6 months was sufficient to bind the Railway Company in terms of S. 77, Railways Act even though the Superintendent General had not then been technically authorised to receive notices under that section and that the failure to give notice to the Agent does not disentitle the plaintiff from claiming compensation which is justly due to him.

[8] I set aside the lower Court's decree and send back the case to the lower Court for trial on its merits. Costs will abide the result. Counsel's fees Rs. 15.

P. R. Padhye—for Appellant.

R. Kaushalendra Rao and W. K. Sheoray—for Respondent (No. 3).

Judgment. — The defendant Wahidunnisa Begum sold certain fields to the defendant Meherunnisa Begum, and as a result of this sale two suits for pre-emption were instituted, one by Zaheda Begum, who is the daughter of Wahidunnisa and the sister-in-law of Meherunnisa, and the other by Kazi Karimuddin. It is admitted that Zaheda Begum has a prior claim to pre-empt, and that, if for any reason her claim fails, then Kazi Karimuddin is entitled to pre-empt. In each suit Kazi Karimuddin took the plea that Zehada Begum was estopped from claiming pre-emption. The lower Courts have decided the point in favour of Zehada Begum. This judgment will dispose of the appeals in both cases.

[2] As stated above, Zehada Begum is closely related to both the vendor and the vendee. Kazi Karimuddin alleged that she took part in bringing about the sale, that the property was sold partly in order to provide for the maintenance of Zaheda Begum and her husband, and that she and her husband having taken an active part in bringing about the sale and having full knowledge of the transaction had waived their right of pre-emption, if any, by their conduct and acquiescence and were estopped from challenging the sale as it was brought about by them for their own benefit. As the Privy Council explained in I.L.R. (1938) 1 Cal. 66[1] at p. 73:

"The doctrine of estoppel rests upon the principle that the person invoking it has relied upon a declaration, act, or omission of another person, and has thereby been induced to change his position to his detriment."

And again in 13 Rang. 256[2] at p. 266 'estoppel' has been explained as follows :

"It is a rule of evidence which comes into operation if (a) a statement of the existence of a fact has been made by the defendant or an authorized agent of his to the plaintiff or some one on his behalf, (b) with the intention that the plaintiff should act upon the faith of the statement, and (c) the plaintiff does act upon the faith of the statement. On the other hand, waiver is contractual, and may constitute a cause of action ; it is an agreement to release or not to assert a right."

Kazi Karimuddin relies upon a representation said to have been made by Zaheda Begum to Meherunnisa There is no suggestion that Kazi Karimuddin has been led by any such representation to change his position in any way, and it does not appear to me to be open to him to raise the plea of estoppel, for he is a stranger to the estoppel, and there was no privity between him and Zaheda Begum: see Caspersz on Estoppel, Edn. 4, at p. 72.

[3] Even assuming that the property was sold in order to raise money for the maintenance of Zaheda Begum and her husband and the money was subsequently spent on them, that cannot, in my opinion, raise a presumption of waiver of the right of pre-emption, and it has not been specifically pleaded that the money was so spent.

[4] Even if Zaheda Begum had agreed in writing to the transfer before it was made, her right of pre-emption would not have been extinguished if Kazi Karimuddin refused his consent to the sale, as is clear from the proviso to sub-s. (3) of S. 174, Berar Land Revenue Code. There appears therefore to be no reason why an implied consent not in writing should be more effective than a consent in writing.

[5] The lower Courts were correct, in my opinion, in holding that Zaheda Begum and not Kazi Karimuddin in entitled to pre-empt. The appeals are dismissed with costs. No counsel's fee as certificates have not been filed.

B. R. Mandlekar—for Appellant.

D. B. Najbile—for Respondent.

Judgment. — The defendant erected a substantial Dharmashala on a portion of his occupancy field, and the plaintiff has brought this suit claiming that the defendant should be ejected from the portion of his holding diverted to non-agricultural purposes, and should also be directed to remove the building or pay Rs. 2000 as compensation. Both the lower Courts have held that the plaintiff's suit must fail, as he acquiesced in the building of the Dharmashala. The learned District Judge, has also held that the suit is barred by limitation under Art. 32, Limitation Act. The trial Court applied Art. 143.

[2] The learned Counsel for the appellant in this Court contends that Art. 143 should be applied. That article applies to suits for possession of immovable property when the plaintiff has become entitled by reason of any forfeiture or breach of condition. Article 32 applies to suits against one who having a right to use property for specific purposes perverts it to other purposes. Article 143 is obviously the more general article and cannot apply if Art. 32 can be applied. The appellant relies on the decision in 14 Lah. 267[1] but that decision seems clearly against him, for, it is said that with regard to suits in which the dispute is between the person who has given the use of his property to another for a specific purpose and this other has perverted it to an unauthorised purpose, there appears no difficulty, all the Courts being agreed that the suit falls within Art. 32. In 24 Cal. 160[2] where a landlord sued to eject his tenant on the ground that he has used the land in a manner which rendered it unfit for agricultural purposes, Art. 32 was applied and Art. 143 was not apparently suggested. That decision was approved in 26 Cal. 564.[3] Again in 30 Cal. 1063[4] where the landlord sued to eject the tenant who had rendered his land unfit for agricultural purposes, Art. 32 was apparently applied.

[3] Rustomji in his Law of Limitation remarked, at p. 652 of Edn. 5, that Art. 32 applies irrespective of the question whether the suit is based on tort or contract, that the article is quite general in its terms and is not limited to suits for compensation, and that a suit for ejectment or for injunction may come within the article. The wording of the article seems clear, and there is nothing to indicate that it does not apply to suits for ejectment. No case has been cited in which Art. 32 was not applied to such cases. In I. L. R. (1937) ALL. 623[5] where Art. 32 was not applied, the defendant had not a legal right to remain in possession for a specific purpose. There is an obiter remark that Art. 32 would not apply to cases where in substance the plaintiff seeks a greater relief than to have the perversion removed, but I do not think that this can be taken as a considered expression of opinion that Art. 32 would not apply to a suit for ejectment of a tenant who has perverted the property to non-agricultural purposes. I think it is clear that Art. 32 applies; it is admitted that if it does apply, the suit is thus barred by limitation. The appeal is dismissed with costs. Counsel's fee Rs. 75.

Criminal Appeal Nos. 184 and 185 of 1946, Decided on 22-8-1946, from judgment of Sessions Judge, Raipur, D/- 22-7-1946.

(a) Penal Code (1860), S. 84 — Exemption under — Essentials to be proved.

A person is presumed to be responsible for his action and the natural consequences thereof unless he affirmatively proves that he is entitled to exemption from criminal liability. To bring the case within the exemption under S. 84 the accused must prove that at the time of committing the offence he was labouring under a defect of reason which had been caused by unsoundness of mind with the result that he was rendered incapable of knowing the nature of the act and that he was doing what was either wrong or contrary to law: 14 A. I. R. 1927 Lah. 674, Rel. on. [Para 11]

(b) Penal Code (1860), S. 84 — Insanity — Evidence — Atrocious crime without motive.

A crime is not excused by its own atrocity. From the fact that the accused killed four persons in succession without any motive no inference can be drawn that his reason must have been affected by insanity temporarily. One must look outside the act itself for the evidence as to how much the accused knew about it : 24 A. I. R. 1937 Pat. 363, Rel. on. [Para 12]

(c) Penal Code (1860), S. 84 — Legal insanity — What is — Insanity affecting mind and that affecting emotions.

There is a clear distinction between 'medical insanity' and 'legal insanity.' Insanity affects not only the cognitive faculties of the mind which guide one's actions, but also his emotions which prompt his actions, and the will by which his actions are performed. It is only unsoundness of mind which materially impairs the cognitive faculties of the mind that can form a ground of exemption from criminal responsibility, the nature and the extent of the unsoundness of mind required being such as would make the offender incapable of knowing the nature of the act or that he is doing what is wrong or contrary to law. It is this rule which is the basis of S. 84 : 23 Cal. 604 and (1843) 10 Cl. & Fin. 200, Rel. on. [Para 13]

(d) Penal Code (1860), S. 84 — Applicability.

Section 84 must be construed strictly and governs only those cases where the cognitive faculties of the accused are completely impaired. It cannot be extended to cases where the accused acts without any motive and under sudden and overpowering impulse : 10 Bom. 512; 12 Mad. 459; 22 Cal. 817 and (1859) 175 E. R. 898, Rel. on. [Paras 14 and 15]

(e) Penal Code (1860), S. 302 — Sentence — Extenuating circumstances.

Where the accused who was not cruel or quarrelsome by nature committed four murders in quick succession without any motive under a sudden and strong impulse the sentence of death was reduced to one of transportation for life : 24 A. I. R. 1937 Pat. 363; 14 A. I. R. 1927 Lah. 674 and 19 A. I. R. 1932 Oudh 18, Rel. on. [Para 17]

G. J. Ghate — for Appellant.

W. B. Pendharkar, Addl. Government Pleader — for the Crown.

Judgment. — This judgment governs two criminal appeals i. e. Criminal Appeal No. 184 of 1946 and No. 185 of 1946 against the judgments in Sessions Trials Nos. 21 of 1946 and 22 of 1946 respectively in both of which the accused (now appellant) has been convicted of murder and sentenced to be hanged in addition to a sentence of imprisonment passed against him for an offence under S. 324, Penal Code. The relevant facts are as stated below.

[2] The accused, Kalicharan was working as raj-mistri (mason) at Calcutta where he met Mt. Dukalbin and married her. After some time she left Calcutta as the climate of that place did not suit her and came to reside at Jora (her original village) along with Ramdanuwa, the son of the accused from his former wife. The accused continued to live at Calcutta for some time and sent letters and money-orders to his wife at Jora but finding that she did not like to return to Calcutta he himself came to reside at Jora and even purchased some land there. The accused with his wife and son was living in a house belonging to Bahorik, brother of Mt. Dukalbin, who was himself living in the adjoining house with his wife Thanwarin, his son Khorbahara and two daughters, Khorbahrin and Kachra. The children were all below 6 or 7 years of age and the youngest Kachra was only 2 months old.

[3] Mt. Dukalbin was not pulling on well with her step son, Ramdanuwa and she often complained against him to the accused. This was the cause of some disagreement between the accused and his wife and the latter threatened to leave the accused and go to live with her relations; as a fact on a day previous to the incident, i. e., on 7-4-1946, she actually went to a village Lawandi to stay with her sister. The accused requested her brother Bahorik to persuade her to return but in spite of Bahorik's persuasion she did not return that night i. e., on the night of 7-4-1946. The conduct of the wife in leaving the house and not returning that night was naturally disliked by the accused and it can be safely assumed that he was enraged against her.

[4] The next morning that is on the 8th, Mt. Dukalbin (the wife) returned only, as it appears, to ask the accused to give her As. 8 as she wanted to go to some village to attend the marriage of her relative. This added fuel to the fire and the accused threw the keys on her. At this time, Khorbahara, the minor son of Bahorik, came to the house of the accused.

[5] Mt. Dukalbin picked up the keys and went to the first floor of the house where the box containing money was kept. The accused, it appears, felt further enraged as he anticipated that his wife would take out money from the box and then leave as she proposed to attend her relative's marriage. The accused with a view to prevent and punish his wife, who was then on the first floor, proceeded to go to the first floor and unfortunate Khorbahara who happened to be there was the first subject of his wrath. The accused made a murderous attack on this boy, causing him not less than 13 injuries with a sharp-edged knife to which the boy subsequently succumbed in hospital where he was removed for treatment. He then went to the first floor, attacked his wife and caused her injuries, but before any fatal injury could be inflicted, Baborik reached there and after some struggle snatched away the knife (ART. C) from the accused.

[6] The accused continued beating his wife with fists and blows until both of them, it appears, jumped from the first floor into the court-yard. Mt. Thanwarin, wife of Baborik with her dauther Khorbahrin in her lap came to the scene to rescue Mt. Dukalbin, her husband's sister. The accused assaulted her and also the daughter in her lap causing them several injuries which resulted in their instantaneous deaths. The accused also injured and killed Kachra, the young daughter of Baborik. One Mt. Turkabin, wife of Mehtar, a neighbour who came to the spot to intercede, was also attacked by the accused, but she escaped only with one injury on her shoulder. Thus the accused struck four persons to death and injured two persons in addition. The injures on the persons of all six were caused by the three instruments i. e., the two knives and the adze which were subsequently seized by the police.

[7] After snatching the knife (ART. C) from the hand of the accused, Baborik went to report the incident to kotwar and to mukaddam of the village and handed over the knife (ART. C) to the kotwar. Mt. Dukalbin also came to kotwar and reported to him the assault by the accused on her and on Khorbahara. The mukaddam, kotwar and others reached the spot immediately. Baborik also returned and found that his wife and his son were badly injured and were lying in precarious condition in court-yard and his two daughters were found in the house, the elder seriously injured and the younger dead.

[8] The tragic incident was reported to the police; usual investigation followed and as a result thereof two challans were put up against the accused. The accused was committed to sessions in both the cases and was tried and punished as stated above. The charges in Sessions Trial No. 21 of 1946 were under S. 302, Penal Code for the murders of Mt. Thanwarin wife of Baborik and of Mt. Khorbahrin and Kachra the two daughters of Baborik; the charges in Sessions Trial No. 22 of 1946 were for the murder of Khorbahara and for voluntarily causing hurt to Mt. Turkabin and to Mt. Dukalbin under Ss. 302 and 324, Penal Code.

[9] Both trials arise out of the same incident and oral and documentary evidence in both the trials is almost common. We shall, for convenience, give references from the paper book of Criminal Appeal No. 184 of 1946. The police seized three articles which are of importance in this case one knife under seizure memo EX. 5, one Basuli (adze) with hair sticking to the sharp edge and one small knife under seizure memo. EX P-19. The report of the Imperial Serologist (EX. P-36) shows that bloodstains on adze and knives were disintergrated and their origin could not be determined. The prosecution evidence consists of witnesses whom the learned Sessions Judge has rightly believed and on the strength of which he found the accused guilty of charges framed against him in both the trials. It is needless for us to refer to that evidence in detail as we agree with the conclusions and findings reached by the learned Sessions Judge and moreover no attempt was made before us to impeach the same except as to the state of mind of the accused at the time of the occurrence.

[10] The learned counsel for the appellant urged that the accused at the time of the occurrence was by unsoundness of mind incapable of knowing the nature of the act or acts which he was doing and those acts did not, therefore, constitute criminal offences. He relied on S. 84, Penal Code. He further urged that even if the appellant be not entitled to the exemption described in S. 84, Penal Code, he should in the circumstances of the case be awarded a lesser sentence i. e., of transportation for life.

[11] A person is presumed to be responsible for his action and the natural consequences thereof unless he affirmatively proves that he is entitled to exemption from criminal liability. In order to bring the case within the exemption under S. 84, Penal Code the accused must prove that at the time of committing the offence he was labouring under a defect of reason which had been caused by unsoundness of mind with the result that he was rendered incapable of knowing the nature of the act and that he was doing what was either wrong or contrary to law: vide 8 Lah. 684[1] at p. 690.

[12] The learned counsel for the appellant urged that the appellant had no motive to kill four persons in quick succession and that the very nature of the act of the accused shows that his reason must have been affected by insanity, howsoever temporary it may be. It may be noted that the appellant did not plead insanity in the lower Court. In his examination before the Committing Magistrate he admits having struck Khorbahara and having given a blow to Mt. Dukalbin with a knife. He remembers that the knife was snatched away from him by Baborik. He however does not remember having struck Mt. Thanwarin and her two daughters as he was not on his senses and he struck any one who came before him. The accused has neither suggested in the lower Court that he was ever before suffering from insanity nor did he disclose his family history from which such an inference can be drawn. The belated contention for the first time put forward in the memo of appeal that he suffered from fits of insanity since long before the incident cannot carry much weight, specially as the entire evidence on record positively shows that the accused was quite sane all through before and after the incident, and there is absolutely no evidence to the contrary. We are not, therefore, satisfied that the accused suffered from insanity either before or at the time of the occurrence. Nor is such an inference possible from the acts and conduct of the accused at the time of the occurrence. As was rightly observed in 16 Pat. 333[2] at p. 339 a crime is not excused by its own atrocity. One must look outside the act itself for the evidence as to how much the accused knew about it. The accused has not examined any expert to prove his mental condition and we do not think that the opinion of Dr. Kailash Chandra (P. W. 20) that the accused may have been at the time of the incident in a temporary fit of mania or unsoundness of mind helps us very much.

[13] There is moreover a clear distinction between 'medical insanity' and 'legal insanity'. Regarding legal insanity, the learned Judges in 23 Cal. 604[3] point out that the rule in substance is the same as that laid down by the House of Lords in (1843) 10 Cl. & Fin. 200: 8 E. R. 718.[4] It is pointed out thus:

"Insanity affects not only the cognitive faculties of the mind which guide our actions, but also our emotions which prompt our actions, and the will by which our actions are performed . . . It is only unsoundness of mind which materially impairs the cognitive faculties of the mind that can form a ground of exemption from criminal responsibility, the nature and the extent of the unsoundness of mind required being such as would make the offender incapable of knowing the nature of the act, or that he is doing what is wrong or contrary to law. Instances of unsoundness of mind of this description would be such as these. A person strikes another, and in consequence of an insane delusion thinks he is breaking a jar. Here he does not know the nature of the act. Or he may kill a child under an insane delusion that he is saving him from sin and sending him to heaven. Here he is incapable of knowing by reason of insanity that he is doing what is morally wrong. Or he may under insane delusion believe an innocent man whom he kills to be a man that was going to take his life, in which case by reason of his insane delusion, he is incapable of knowing that he is doing what is contrary to the law of the land."

[14] It is this rule in (1843) 10 Cl. & Fin. 200[4] which is the basis of S. 84, Penal Code. This section has received a strict interpretation and is held as governing only those cases where the cognitive faculties of the accused are completely impaired: vide 10 Bom. 512[5]; 12 Mad. 459[6] and 22 Cal. 847.[7]

[15] There are no doubt thinkers who are in favour of extending the rule in (1843) 10 Cl. & Fin. 200[4] even to cases where the accused acts without any motive and under sudden and overpowering impulse. This is, however, the province of Legislature. We, as Judges, have to administer the law as is contained in S. 84, Penal Code. In (1859) 175 E. R. 898,[8] Baron Bramwell told the jury thus:

"It has been urged for the prisoner that you should acquit him on the ground that, it being impossible to assign any motive for the perpetration of the offence, he must have been acting under what is called a powerful and irresistible influence, or homicidal tendency. But I must remark as to that, that the circumstance of an act being apparently motiveless is not a ground from which you can safely infer the existence of such an influence. Motives exist unknown and innumerable which might prompt the act. A morbid and restless (but resistible) thirst for blood would itself be a motive urging to such a deed for its own relief. But if an influence be so powerful as to be termed irresistible, so much the more reason is there why we should not withdraw any of the safeguards tending to counteract it. There are three powerful restraints existing, all tending to the assistance of the person who is suffering under such an influence—the restraint of religion, the restraint of conscience, and the restraint of law. But if the influence itself be held a legal excuse rendering the crime dispunishable, you at once withdraw a most powerful restraint—that forbidding and punishing its perpetration. We must, therefore, return to the simple question you have to determine—did the prisoner know the nature of the act he was doing; and did he know that he was doing what was wrong."

[16] On a careful consideration of the evidence and the circumstances of the present case we find ourselves quite unable to hold that the cognitive faculties of the accused were completely impaired and that he is, therefore, entitled to be acquitted by anything contained in S. 84, Penal Code.

[17] We are, however, of the opinion that we ought to alter the sentence to one of transportation for life. The accused had no motive to kill Mt. Thanwarin and her three children. If he had any motive howsoever feeble, it was only against his wife but she was not killed. Bahorik himself admits that the accused loved his children and used to feed them. There was no premeditation or pre-arrangement. There was no accomplice with and no secrecy on the part of the accused. The evidence on record shows that the accused was highly excited and complained of reeling sensation. The accused is not shown to be cruel or quarrelsome by nature. Still he under a sudden and strong impulse has committed the murders. It is no doubt true that the accused has not succeeded in bringing his case within the exemption described in S. 84, Penal Code, but the fact still remains that at the time of the occurrence he was completely unhinged and had lost the balance of his mind, the sudden impulse proved too strong for him to resist and it was under that impulse that he acted quite abnormally. These are, in our opinion, extenuating circumstances which impel us to modify the sentence of death passed against the accused by the learned Sessions Judge. We are supported in modifying the sentence by several reported cases where in similar circumstances the accused while found guilty of the offence under S. 302, Penal Code, was awarded a sentence of transportation for life with a further recommendation to the Provincial Government that the case against him be dealt with under S. 401, Criminal P. C.

[18] In 16 Pat. 333,[2] their Lordships of the Patna High Court set aside acquittal on the ground that the accused failed to bring himself within the exemption described in S. 84, Penal Code, and convicted him under S. 302, Penal Code, but sentenced him only to transportation for life, with a further recommendation for action under S. 401, Criminal P. C. In 8 Lah. 684[1] their Lordships of the Lahore High Court dismissed the appeal and maintained the sentence of transportation for life but felt themselves bound to make a recommendation for the case to be dealt with under S. 401, Criminal P. C. In 7 Luck. 341[3] the conviction of the accused under S. 302, Penal Code, was maintained but the sentence was reduced from one of death to one of transportation for life on grounds inter alia that the accused committed the act in a moment of extreme excitement. Accordingly, while maintaining the conviction of the accused under S. 302, Penal Code, we reduce the sentence passed against him to one of transportation for life. In our opinion, no separate sentence need be passed for a minor offence under S. 324, Penal Code. The appeals are dismissed except for the modification in the sentence.

Misc. First Appeal No. 286 of 1944. Decided on 9-4-1946. from order of Dist. Judge, Wardha, D/- 28-8-1944.

(a) C. P. Local Fund Audit Act (9 [IX] of 1933), S. 10 — Loss caused by gross negligence — Municipal Committee removing servant drawing salary of Rs. 90. p. m. from service — Order set aside by Deputy Commissioner on appeal—Appeal to Commissioner against order of Deputy Commissioner under R. 2 (iii) of Rules framed under S. 25 (7) of C. P. Municipalities Act (2 [II] of 1922), at instance of Municipal Committee is competent — Commissioner dismissing appeal as being incompetent — Revision petition lies to Provincial Government against order of Commissioner under S. 58, C. P. Municipalities Act read with S. 39, C. P. Land Revenue Act (2 [II] of 1917) — Municipal members voting for resolution for filing such revision petition and for its expenses on advice of experienced lawyer act with due care and attention and in good faith and are not grossly negligent—C. P. Municipalities Act (2 [II] of 1922), Ss. 25, 49 and 58.

One W who was in the service of Arvi Municipality on a salary of Rs. 90 p. m. was removed from service by a resolution of the municipality. This order was set aside on appeal by the Deputy Commissioner. The municipality filed an appeal before the Commissioner which was dismissed on the ground that the appeal was not competent. The Municipal Committee consulted T., a senior lawyer of the place who advised the committee to file a revision petition to the Provincial Government against the order of the Commissioner as the same was wrong. Accordingly resolutions were passed by the committee sanctioning the filing of the revision petition and Rs. 60 for the expenses of the revision petition. The revision petition was dismissed by the Provincial Government on the ground that no revision petition was maintainable as W was drawing a salary less than Rs. 200 p. m. The Examiner of Local Fund Accounts submitted a report under S. 8, C. P. Local Fund Audit Act objecting to the expenditure of Rs. 60. The Commissioner by his order held that the members voting for the resolution sanctioning the filing of the revision petition acted in a grossly negligent manner—thus causing an unnecessary expenditure of Rs. 60 and charged that sum against the members voting for the resolution under S. 10, C. P. Local Fund Audit Act :

Held that in view of the change of language in R. 2 (iii) of the Rules framed under S. 25 (7), C. P. Municipalities Act it is now arguable that sub-rr. (ii) and (iii) contemplate a second appeal to the Commissioner against the order of the Deputy Commissioner whether filed by an employee or by the Municipal Committee. Sub-rule (iii) as it now stands does not restrict that an appeal shall lie at the instance of the employee and not at the instance of the Municipal Committee. Reading S. 58, C. P. Municipalities Act and S. 39, C. P. Land Revenue Act together the Provincial Government is empowered to exercise the powers of revision against the order of the Commissioner in matters connected with the C. P. Municipalities Act unless it is otherwise provided in the Act, or in the rules made thereunder. No power has been conferred by the statute on the Provincial Government to divest itself of its responsibility in the matter or to frame rules providing that no revision shall lie in particular cases. Rule 3 of the Rules framed under S. 25 (7) dealing with revision is in excess of the rule making-power and to that extent it is ultra vires. T was thus justified in advising the Municipal Committee that the order of the Commissioner was wrong and that a revision petition to the Provincial Government was competent. The members who voted for the resolution sanctioning the filing of the revision petition acted with due care and attention and in good faith as they acted on the advice of the senior and experienced lawyer who was justified in giving his advice which he did and could not be made liable for the action they took in sanctioning the resolution for filing the revision petition. (b) C. P. Municipalities Act (2 [II] of 1922), S. 25 —Sub-sections (6) and (7) of S. 25 are contradictory to each other.

Sub-sections (6) and (7) are contradictory. Sub-section (6) gives an unqualified and unrestricted right of appeal against an order of the Municipal Committee dismissing an officer or servant of the committee. Sub-section (7) purports to qualify the general right leaving it to the Provincial Government to make rules as to the classes or grades of officers and servants who shall have the right of appeal under sub-s. (6). [Para 6]

(c) C. P. Municipalities Act (2 [II] of 1922), S. 49 —Standard of care expected of municipal member is not higher than that of trustee.

The standard of care expected of a municipal member is not higher than that of a trustee who is required under S. 15, Trusts Act, 1882 to deal with the trust property as carefully as a man of ordinary prudence would deal with such property if it were his own.

Judgment. — This is an appeal by Nemichand under S. 14 (3), Central Provinces Local Fund Audit Act, 1933, to set aside the order dated 28th August 1944 passed by the District Judge, Wardha, in Miscellaneous Judicial Case No. 4 of 1944 upholding the order of the Commissioner, dated 22nd December 1943.

[2] The relevant facts which led to the present appeal are briefly these. Govind Suryabhan Wankhede was a Water Works Overseer employed by the Municipal Committee, Arvi and was drawing Rs. 90 p. m. as his salary. He was removed from service by the resolution of the Municipal Committee passed on 30th August 1937. This order was set aside on appeal by the Deputy Commissioner, Wardha, on 2nd May 1938. The Municipal Committee filed an appeal before the Commissioner, Nagpur Division which was dismissed on 29th October 1938 on the ground that the appeal was not competent. The Municipal Committee consulted Mr. Thengdi, an advocate, whether a revision application should be filed before the Provincial Government against the order of the Commissioner. Mr. Thengdi was of the opinion that the order of the Commissioner was wrong and advised the Municipal Committee to file a revision application. Accordingly a resolution was passed by the Municipal Committee on 7th December 1938 sanctioning the filing of a revision application. At that meeting eight municipal members were present and Nemichand the appellant, was one of them. On 19th January 1940 another resolution was passed by the Municipal Committee sanctioning the expenditure of Rs. 60-2-0 for the expenses of the revision application made to the Provincial Government. The revision application made to the Provincial Government was dismissed on the ground that no revision application was maintainable as Wankhede was drawing a salary less than Rs. 200 p. m. A copy of the minutes of 19th January 1940 has not been filed and it is not clear whether the appellant was one of the persons who were present at the meeting of the 19th and voted for the resolution sanctioning the expenditure of Rs. 60-2-0 The Examiner of Local Fund Accounts submitted a report under S. 8, C. P. Local Fund Audit Act objecting to the expenditure of Rs. 60-2-0. The Commissioner, Nagpur Division by the order dated 22nd December 1943 held that the members voting for resolution No. 598, dated 7th December 1938, acted in a grossly negligent manner thus causing unnecessary expenditure of Rs. 60-2-0 which must be considered to be a loss to the municipal fund and charged that sum against the eight municipal members who voted for the resolution in equal proportions, i. e., each one of them was made liable to pay Rs. 7-8-3. The appellant was thus made liable for the payment of Rs. 7-8-3 under the order of the Commissioner. The members who were made liable for the payment of Rs. 7-8-3 filed applications to set aside the order of the Commissioner. All these cases were consolidated by the order of the District Judge, Wardha, who upheld on 28th August 1944 the order of the Commissioner. It is against the order of the District Judge that the present appeal has been filed.

[3] It may be noted at the outset that the members who voted for the filing of an appeal before the Commissioner against the order of the Deputy Commissioner, Wardha, dated 2nd May 1938, were not made liable for the filing of an appeal befor the Commissioner or for voting for the expenditure on account of the appeal; nor does it appear that any objection was taken at the time an appeal had been filed previously before the Commissioner Nagpur Division against the order of the Deputy Commissioner, dated 23rd September 1936.

[4] The defence of the appellant was that the municipal members acted with due care and attention and in good faith in order to protect the interest of the Municipal Committee, Arvi. Nemichand has supported his case by his evidence. Mr. Thengdi was examined as witness 2 for the applicant, and he fully supported the evidence of Nemichand. Mr. Thengdi is an advocate and a senior and an experienced lawyer of Arvi and had put in about 26 years practice at the Bar and is considered one of the leading lawyers of the place. He stated that the secretary, Municipal Committee, Arvi and Nemichand, the appellant, a municipal member, had consulted him whether a revision application should be filed. He deposed that he gave his opinion that the order of the Commissioner was not legal and advised the Committee to file a revision application before the Minister and that there was a fair chance of success on merits. He was cross-examined and he stated that a second appeal lay against the order of the Deputy Commissioner and that the order of the Commissioner was incorrect and could only be remedied by a revision to the higher authority. No cross-examination was directed to elicit the grounds on which he held the opinion that a revision application against the order of the Commissioner was competent.

[5] The learned District Judge accepted the evidence of Mr. Thengdi to the effect that his advice was sought by the Municipal Committee before the revision application was filed before the Provincial Government.

[6] Section 25, C. P. Municipalities Act, 1922, deals with appointment, duties and conditions of service of officers and servants of the Municipal Committee. Sub-sections 6 and 7 of S. 25 are reproduced below:

"(6) An appeal shall lie from any decision of the Committee dismissing an officer or servant otherwise than under sub-section (5).

(7) The Provincial Government may make rules under this Act as to the classes or grades of officers and servants who shall have the right of appeal under sub-section (6), and the authorities to whom and the conditions subject to which such appeal shall lie."

It may be noted that the two sub-sections are contradictory. Sub-section (6) gives an unqualified and unrestricted right of appeal against an order of the Municipal Committee dismissing an officer or a servant of the committee. Sub-section (7) purports to qualify the general right leaving it to the Provincial Government to make rules as to the classes or grades of officers and servants who shall have the right of appeal under sub-section (6).

[7] The relevant rules framed under sub-s. 7 of S. 25 are reproduced below:

"2. (i) The following classes of employees shall have no right of appeal:—

(a) Employees referred to in proviso to sub-s. (1) of S. 25.

(b) All other employees drawing less than Rs. 10 per mensem.

(c) All employees who are temporary or on probation.

(ii) Employees drawing Rs. 10 per mensem and above shall have a right of appeal to the Deputy Commissioner. The Deputy Commissioner's order shall be final in the case of employees drawing less than Rs. 30 per mensem and shall not be subject to revision.

(iii) A second appeal shall lie to the Commissioner in case of employees drawing Rs. 30 per mensem or over. Except as provided in rule 3, the Commissioner's order shall be final.

3. Revision of the Commissioner's order shall lie to the Local Government in the case of employees drawing Rs. 200 per mensem and above."

[8] The Commissioner Nagpur Division rightly pointed out in his order dated 29th October 1938 (EX. N. A. 2):

"The two sub-ss. (6 and 7) are inconsistent with one another and as a result it is difficult to say whether R. 2 of the rules framed under sub-s. (7) is or is not ultra vires. An amendment of the Act so as to make these two sub-sections consistent with one another is certainly desirable."

[9] The contention of Mr. Thengdi that a second appeal was competent to the Commissioner seems justified by the terms in which the rules have been framed. In R. 2 (i) the classes of employees who shall have no right of appeal have been stated. Rule 2 (ii) states that the employees drawing Rs. 10 per mensem and above shall have a right of appeal to the Deputy Commissioner. In these two sub-rules what is stated is that employees have a right of appeal. The language of R. 2 (iii) has been changed and is no longer that an employee drawing Rs. 30 per mensem or over shall have a right of appeal to the Commissioner. The language is that a second appeal shall lie to the Commissioner in case of employees drawing Rs. 30 per mensem or over. It is arguable in view of the change of the language that these two sub-rules contemplate a second appeal whether filed by an employee or by the Municipal Committee.

[10] Under S. 175 the Provincial Government has been empowered to frame rules consistent with the Central Provinces Municipalities Act. Under S. 176 in addition to any power specially conferred by this Act, the Provincial Government may make rules generally for the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of this Act. Sub-section (2) enumerates, without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing power, that the Provincial Government may make rules as regards certain matters Item NO. (vii) runs thus: "as to cases in which, and the authorities to whom, and the conditions subject to which, orders and decisions given under any provisions of this Act, and not expressly provided for as regards appeal, shall be appealable."

[11] The Municipal Committee is vitally interested in the proper administration of the Municipality and in exercise of its power it can appoint and dismiss a servant whom it considers inefficient or undesirable. Sub-sections 6 and 7 of S. 25 protect the officers and servants of the Municipal Committee from unjust dismissal, and safeguards have been provided.

[12] It is conceivable that the Municipal Committee may be dissatisfied with the order of the Deputy Commissioner setting aside the order of dismissal passed by the Municipal Committee. Rule 2 (iii) gives a right of appeal to the Commissioner. It does not restrict that an appeal would lie only at the instance of an employee and not at the instance of the Municipal Committee. The rule in its wide terms goes beyond the terms of S. 25 (7) but can be supported by invoking the powers under S. 176 which the Provincial Government undoubtedly had as regards the right of appeal to the Municipal Committee against the order of the Deputy Commissioner.

[13] The question whether an appeal to the Commissioner was competent or not is not relevant at this stage because the Municipal Committee has not been made liable for the filing of an appeal before the Commissioner or for sanctioning the expenses for the appeal. The question however is relevant only for the purpose of showing that the advice given by Mr. Thengdi, Advocate, to the effect that the order of the Commissioner was wrong, was justified.

[14] Rule 3 deals with revisions. The sub-section did not confer any power on the Provincial Government to frame rules about the filing of revision application and the rule framed is in excess of the rule making power and to that extent it is ultra vires.

"In all matters connected with this Act, unless it is otherwise provided for in this Act, or in the rules made thereunder, the Provincial Government shall have and exercise over the Commissioners and Deputy Commissioners, and Commissioner shall have and exercise over the Deputy Commissioners, the same authority and control as they respectively have and exercise over them in the general and revenue administration."

[15] Section 39, C. P. Land Revenue Act, confers the powers of revision on superior Revenue Officers from the orders of the inferior officers. These two sections have to be read together and it leaves no doubt that the Provincial Government has been empowered under statute to set aside the order of the Deputy Commissioner or the Commissioner in matters connected with the C. P. Municipalities Act, unless it is otherwise provided for in the Act or in the rules made thereunder. No power has been conferred by the statute on the Provincial Government to divest itself of its responsibility in the matter or to frame rules providing that no revision shall lie in particular cases.

[16] Mr. Thengdi was thus justified on the terms of the Municipalities Act in advising the Municipal Committee that a revision application to the Provincial Government was competent. The learned District Judge erred in thinking that the advice of Mr. Thengdi was given carelessly and recklessly in this case.

[17] The liability of a municipal member is defined in S. 49 (1) and (2), C. P. Municipalities Act, which is in these terms:

"(1) If any member, officer or servant of a committee makes or directs to be made any payment or application of any money or other property belonging to or under the control of such committee to any purpose not authorized by or under this Act, or assents to, or concurs or participates in any affirmative vote or proceedings relating thereto, he shall be individually liable to such committee for the loss or damage caused thereby, unless he proves that he acted in good faith and with due care and attention.

(2) Every member or officer or servant of a committee shall be liable to such committee for the loss of any money or the loss of, or damage to, other property belonging to it or under its control, if such loss or damage is a direct consequence of his negligence or misconduct."

[18] The appellant consulted Mr. Thengdi, an advocate, and under his legal advice the Municipal Committee sanctioned the resolution for the filing of a revision application. The appellant as well as the other members who voted for the resolution sanctioning the filing of a revision application acted with due care and attention. There can be no doubt that they acted honestly and it has not been suggested that the members did not act honestly in voting for the resolution.

[19] A thing shall be deemed to be done in 'good faith' where it is in fact done honestly, whether it is done negligently or not: S. 2 (22), C. P. General Clauses Act. The standard of care is that of a man of ordinary prudence. Tindal, C. J. in (1837) 132 E. R. 490[1] observed:

"Instead of saying that the liability for negligence should be co-extensive with the judgment of each individual, which would be as variable as the length of the foot of each individual, we ought rather to adhere to the rule which requires in all cases a regard to caution such as a man of ordinary prudence would observe."

[20] In (1856) 11 Ex. 781[2] at p. 784 'negligence' is defined in these terms:

"Negligence is the omission to do something which a reasonable man, guided upon those considerations which ordinarily regulate the conduct of human affairs, would do, or doing something which a prudent and reasonable man would not do."

As Winfield in his Law of Torts, Edn. 2, p. 444 has happily put:

"He is 'the man on the Clapham omnibus.' He has not the courage of Achilles, the wisdom of Ulysses or the strength of Hercules."

[21] Under S 10, C. P. Local Fund Audit Act, 1933, the liability is imposed for the loss caused by gross negligence of a person who is sought to be made liable. The Commissioner has found that the appellant and other members of the Municipal Committee acted in a grossly negligent manner and has not found them guilty of misconduct. The expression 'gross negligence' denotes a high degree of careless conduct: vide Charlesworth's Law of Negligence, 1938 edition, page 5, and I. L. R. (1945) Nag. 218[3] at p. 222.

[22] The standard of care expected of a municipal member is not higher than that of a trustee who is required under S. 15, Trusts Act, 1882, to deal with the trust property as carefully as a man of ordinary prudence would deal with such property if it were his own.

[23] After careful consideration of the circumstances under which the revision application was filed by the Municipal Committee, Arvi, to the Provincial Government, I hold that the members who voted for the resolution acted with due care and attention and in good faith, as they acted on the advice of a senior and experienced lawyer who was justified in giving his opinion which he did.

[24] The learned District Judge relied on I. L. R. (1938) Nag. 409,[4] and A. I. R. 1933 Lah. 568[5] which are not apposite. In these cases appeals had been filed in the proper Court after limitation had expired. The question was whether the appeal should be admitted under S. 5, Limitation Act. After the period for filing an appeal has expired a valuable right accrues in favour of the party in whose favour a decree has been passed and that right cannot be displaced unless good and sufficient cause is shown for not filing an appeal in time.

[25] In 12 C. W. N. 28[6] it was held that a person does not become the agent of another merely because he gives him advice in matters of business. When Mr. Thengdi gave his advice to the Municipal Committee he did not act as an agent of the Municipal Committee.

[26] The principle stated in the above cases is that where a litigant employs an agent or a lawyer and loses limitation on account of the wrong advice he must suffer and the fact that he acted on their advice is no ground for admitting the appeal after the expiration of limitation. That is not the position here. The question here was whether a revision application should be filed against an order of the Commissioner. That was a matter for a lawyer to decide. The municipal members consulted Mr. Thengdi as they would have consulted in a matter affecting their private interest and after they took that care and caution they are protected and are not liable for the action they took in sanctioning the resolution for filing a revision application.

[27] The appeal is allowed with costs. The order of the District Judge is contrary to law and is set aside. The amount of Rs. 7-8-3 already paid by the appellant be refunded to him. Counsel's fee Rs. 30.

Criminal Revn. No. 45 of 1946, Decided on 28-6-1946, against order of District Magistrate, First Class, Mandla, D/- 7-11-1945.

(a) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 110 — Object — Use of section as indirect means of securing conviction.

The object of S. 110 is preventive and not punitive. The section is intended to deal with and control ex-convicts or habitual criminals and dangerous and desperate outlaws and to secure the interest of the community from injury at their hands. It is not intended to provide an indirect means of securing conviction in cases where a prosecution for a substantive offence is likely to fail. The section should be used with caution and discretion otherwise it might become an engine of oppression: 25 A. I. R. 1938 Mad. 35 and 15 A. I. R. 1928 All. 682, Rel. on. [Paras 5, 6]

(b) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 110 — Proceedings under — Nature of — Accused must be told as to under which particular sub-section he is charged.

The proceedings under S. 110 are judicial and not executive and the Court is expected to follow the procedure strictly: 6 A. I. R. 1919 Mad. 633, Rel. on. [Para 6]

When a person is sought to be proceeded against under S. 110 it must be made clear to him as to which particular sub-section he is charged under. Mere assertion that a person is of criminal tendencies or of tyrannical habits is not enough. It must be specifically stated under which of the categories specified in S. 110 the accused is alleged to come : 13 A. I. R. 1926 Lab. 45, Rel. on. [Para 6]

The fact that a man is by temperament quarrelsome and that he occasionally gives threats does not make him a desperate character or one who is dangerous to the community. The owner of a forest, which served the needs of a large group of adjacent villages, who used threats to prevent evasion of his dues cannot be denounced as a dangerous or desperate character ; 18 A.I.R. 1931 All. 437, Rel. on. [Para 7, 17]

Order. — This is a reference under S. 438, Criminal P. C., by the District Magistrate, Mandla, with the recommendation that the order of discharge passed by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate in proceedings under S. 110, Criminal P. C., should be set aside and further enquiry be ordered.

[2] The non-applicant Vijaidatta is the malguzar of a number of villages including Bhawartal. This village has a large area of forest which is used for purposes of nistar by the residents of the surrounding villages. It was alleged that in the year 1941, the non-applicant got into heavy debts to satisfy which he had to part with two of his villages and ever since he had been endeavouring to augment his income by taking recourse to harassing and bullying the villagers who used the Bhawartal forest for nistar, that he was in the habit of extorting money from ignorant villagers by bringing unlawful pressure on them by forcibly impounding their cattle or by wrongfully detaining the villagers and their carts and subjecting them to mal-treatment such as tying them by their necks and tramplig them under his horse and threatening their lives with a gun. He struck terror in the hearts of the villagers by declaring that he was exempt from punishment for the offence of murder. He also threatened to implicate innocent villagers in false cases and refused to pass receipts for the amounts which he received from the villagers.

[3] The proceedings under S. 110, Criminal P. C., were started on a report received by Mr. Hyde, the then District Magistrate. An enquiry was made by Mr. B. S. Choukse, Magistrate, First Class, Mandla, who was also the Sub-Divisional Magistrate. Both parties examined a number of witnesses and the learned Magistrate after a careful scrutiny of the evidence came to the conclusion that the circumstances did not justify an order calling upon the non-applicant to enter into a bond for good behaviour in terms of S. 110, Criminal P. C.

[4] The learned District Magistrate regards the case as one of administrative nature designed to secure protection of tenants from oppression by malguzars and points out that the effect of this decision is likely to affect adversely the already low morale of poor tenants, and to strengthen the hands of the bullies amongst the the malguzars. It is stressed that the Sub-Divisional Magistrate overlooked some important decisions of the civil Court filed by the prosecution and that he gave undue prominence to some part of the evidence and ignored the significance of another part, and that he was wrong in allowing himself to be misled by the defence evidence and that the case as between the harassed tenants and tyrannical malguzars was not viewed in proper perspective. Lastly it is emphasized that the Sub-Divisional Magistrate failed to appreciate the attempt of the police to secure protection for the oppressed tenantry as honest and bona fide.

[5] Before proceeding to deal with the facts of the case, it may be observed that the object of S. 110 is preventive and not punitive as the very terms of the section show, that it is intended to control the activities of persons who are by habit robbers, house-breakers, thieves, or forgers, receivers of stolen property or those who habitually protect or harbour thieves or aid in the concealment or disposal of stolen property, or those who habitually commit or attempt to commit, or abet the commission of the offence of kidnapping, abduction, extortion, cheating or mischief, or who are in the habit of committing or getting involved in the commission of offences involving a breach of peace, or generally those who are so desperate and dangerous as to render their being at large without security hazardous to the community.

[6] As pointed out in A. I. R. 1938 Mad. 35[1] S. 110 is intended to deal with ex-convicts, or habitual criminals, and dangerous and desperate outlaws who are so hardened and incorrigible that the ordinary provisions of the penal law and the normal fear of condign punishment for crime are not sufficient deterrents or adequate safeguards for the public. The section is not intended to provide an indirect means of securing conviction in cases where a prosecution for a substantive offence is likely to fail : see 51 ALL. 459.[2] The section is really intended to curb the dangerous activities of hardened criminals, and to secure the interest of the community from injury at their hands. If it is not used with caution and discretion it might easily become an engine of oppression. It may further be pointed out that the proceedings under this section are judicial and not executive : A. I. R. 1919 Mad. 633[3] at p. 634 and the Court is expected to follow the procedure strictly. When a person is sought to be proceeded against under this section it must be made clear to him as to which particular sub section he is charged with. Mere assertion that a person is of criminal tendencies or of tyrannical habits is not enough. It must be specially stated under which of these categories of cases the accused is alleged to come : A.I R. 1926 Lah. 45.[4]

[7] When the evidence for the defence is at least as good as that for the prosecution there can be no order under S. 110, Criminal P. C. : see A I.R. 1930 Lah. 1051[5] The fact that a man is by his temperament quarrelsome and that he occasionally gives threats does not make him a desperate character or one who is dangerous to the community : A.I.R. 1931 ALL 437[6]

[8] The facts of the case are that on 30th

August 1944 Mr. Hyde, the then Deputy Commissioner, received complaints from the cultivators of the village Amdongri to the effect that the non-applicant who was the malguzar of Bhawartal seized their cattle from the area of Amdongri, drove them to his own village Bhawartal and kept them in his enclosure and that when the owners of the cattle demanded their release he compelled them under the threat of a gun to pay annas 10 per head of cattle as grazing charges. Mr. Hyde caused a report to be sent to the police through his reader whereon the police began to collect material for initiating proceedings under S. 110, Criminal P. C. The police officers went round and got as many as 21 reports from the villages round about Bhawartal.

[9] Most of the reports are of 14th or 19th september 1944 and one is of November 1944. Some of the reports e. g., Exs. P-4, P-9 and P-18, do not bear any date. The persons who have been examined to substantiate the allegations contained in the reports are from the villages Khari, Amdongri, Bijegaon, Manga and Lafra.

[10] The general story told by them is that when they were peacefully grazing their cattle within an area in Government villages under their licences, or when they entered the non-applicant's village Bhawartal, for purposes of nistar their cattle were impounded and when they protested they were threatened with a gun, or with being trampled over by his horse or with being tied with rope. There is no evidence, however, of any man having suffered from the trampling of the horse or the firing of the gun, or even whether the gun was loaded when the gun was pointed at them. Except the complaint made by the residents of Amadongri to Mr. Hyde the complaints related to the happenings nearly two years before the incident.

[11] Going to the particulars it would appear that the witnesses spoke about the incidents at Khari, Bijegaon, Lafra, Manga and Bamni, besides the main incident at Amadongri which form the basis of the Deputy Commissioner's report. As the last one is most prominent I may consider it first.

[12] According to Laxman (P. W. 2) the cattle were grazing near Paniwala tree within the boundary of Amadongri when they were unlawfully seized by Vijaidutta. As against the witnesses examined for Crown P. W. 9 to P. W. 18 there are witnesses for the defence D. w. 13, D. w. 16, 17, 21, 22, 23, 27 and 28 who say that the cattle at Amadongri were grazing in the forest of Bhawartal. There is no evidence for the Crown as to the exact boundary between the forest of Amadongri and Bhawartal, and it is extremely difficult to say on the evidence on record that the cattle were not grazing in the Bhawartal forest and we have it from Mulchand patwari (P. W. 60) that even the people of Amadongri admitted that their cattle were grazing in the Bhawartal jungle although they complained that the cattle were impounded by the malguzar and that the people were forced to agree to pay compensation. There is ample evidence on record to show that the malguzars owning these forests levy some charges by way of penalty or compounding fee or compensation for the damage done to the forest on those who graze or take any forest produce without licence. Amadongri people were in the wrong and because the cattle were caught trespassing they had to agree to the compensation.

[13] The gun seems to have played no prominent part in the affair. It is not even known whether it was loaded so as to strike terror in the hearts of the people. Even assuming the story to be true the circumstances show that but for that threat the people would have taken away their cattle by force. Whether the threat given by Vijaidutta was justified or not there could be no extortion if Amadongri people were the culprits and liable to pay compensation according to the usual custom. There is nothing on record to help the determination of the question whether compensation that was demanded by Vijaidutta and agreed to be paid by the Amadongri people was reasonable or excessive. Even assuming that it was excessive it would only show that Vijaidutta was inclined to be harsh with people invading his right in the jungle.

[14] The lower Court's finding that the cattle of the complainants from Amadongri were found grazing in Bhawartal forest is fully sustained by the weight of the evidence on the record, apart from the fact that the finding is not open to question in revision : 33 Mad. 85.[7]

[15] The main complaint which was the immediate cause of the initiation of proceedings against Vijaydutt having collapsed it is unnecessary to look into the complaints which relate to stale incidents that had occurred 2 or 3 years before the proceedings were started. In the first instance, they are robbed of much of their gravity because they were elicited by the police long after the parties concerned had forgotten about the incidents. It is not improbable that when the police took the initiative the complainants would try to magnify petty happenings of the daily life in the forest villages and add some embellishments to make their stories pass muster. They would at all events try to show themselves in the right and Vijaydutt in the wrong. As they are the interested parties their word would naturally not carry the weight which would normally be attached to the word of a disinterested witness. Apart from general considerations, there is concrete material on the record which casts a cloud of suspicion on the complaints. The Brijgaon incident illustrates the point. The report relating to the village is EX. P-11. It said that the cattle were taken from the Government forest to Bhawartal. But P. W. 19 Pardeshi states that Vijayutt declared the cattle to have trespassed into Bhawartal forest and threatened with the gun if they tried to take them away by force without payment of the customary compensation. This witness eventually had to admit that all of them had lathis and that they were mistaken in starting to drive their cattle without permission. Reading between the lines, the case was that the party of the owners whose cattle trespassed into Bhawartal were armed with sticks and were driving their cattle home by show of force. Would not Vijayadutt be justified in using threats which in fact proved effective? Pointing of a gun only constitutes the offence of assault, and it is unlawful only when it is done without lawful excuse : see 1946 A.L.J. 206[8] at p. 208.

[16] I have carefully read the evidence, adduced on both sides, bearing on the incidents of Khari, Manga, Lafra and Bambni and I find nothing in these incidents except a bona fide dispute between the parties as to the place where the cattle were grazing. No credence can be attached to such cock and bull stories—stale as they were—as that the people were threatened with being trampled over by horse and with being tied with ropes. It is remarkable that even the complainant's witnesses admit that Vijayadutt troubled no one who grazed his cattle under a licence.

[17] One thing prominently emerges from the evidence as a whole. It is that Vijayadutt purported to act in defence of his property and levying compensation as penalty for invasion of his rights as owner of the forest. Right or wrong, the custom was respected even by the trespassers as they used to pay the charges levied according to it. Even granting for the nonce that Vijayadutt who was the owner of the forest which served the needs of a large group of adjacent villages used threats to prevent evasion of payment of his dues, he cannot rightly be denounced as a dangerous or desperate character within the meaning of that expression used in S. 110, Criminal P. C. He had to take recourse to them for the more efficient management of his property. On the evidence there is no case of extortion for the reason that he was not making any illegal gain to himself or causing illegal loss to others and there is overwhelming evidence of persons including responsible officers of Government to disprove the allegation that Vijayadutta is a man of dangerous and desperate character. The bulk of the witnesses are indeed malguzars, though there are some cultivators also, but even if all the witnesses were malguzars, why should their evidence be rejected? A man is best judged by his own peers.

[18] I find there was intrinsically nothing in the case to justify initiation of proceedings under S. 110, Criminal P. C. The case acquired adventitious importance by the fact that the report was made to the police by the Deputy Commissioner. I see no ground to justify acceptance of the reference. I discharge the reference.

Judgment. — The defendant-appellant owns a malikmakbuza field, Khasra No. 19, in mouza Bharatwada in Nagpur district. At the last settlement in 1914, it was bounded on the north by the southern bank of what may be described as a small and shallow river. Subsequently, there was an accretion because of the subsidence of this river, and this accretion which measured. 09 acres is shown by the dotted red line in the map. Later, there was a considerably larger accretion shown by the solid redline in the map. The second accretion has been numbered as Khasra No. 16/3 and has an area of 2 08 acres. The river-bed, which was given Khasra No. 16 at the settlement admittedly belongs to the landlord. The present river-bed is khasra No. 16/1.

[2] This suit was brought on behalf of the landlord to recover possession of these two areas .09 and 2.08 acres, which have emerged on the northern boundary of the defendant's field, and the question is whether under the Bengal Alluvion and Diluvion Regulation, 1825, this forms an accretion to the defendant's field. At first sight, cl. 1 of S. 4 of that Regulation appears to favour the defendant's contention that this land must be considered an increment to his field. That clause runs as follows:

"When land may by gained by gradual accession, whether from the recess of a river or of the sea, it shall be considered an increment to the tenure of the person to whose land or estate it is thus annexed."

A limitation however has been placed on the application of this clause by the Judicial Committee. In 13 M. I. A. 467,[1] they remarked

"when the whole words are looked at, not merely of that clause, but of the whole Regulation, it is quite obvious that what the then legislative authority was dealing with, was the gain which an individual proprietor might take in this way from that which was part of the public territory, the public domain not usable in the ordinary sense, that is to say, the sea belonging to the State, a public river belonging to the State."

That decision was approved by the Judicial Committee in 6 Pat. 481.[2] In A.I.R. 1939 ALL. 626[3] at p. 629 the law deduced from these decisions was that if the land in dispute is identifiable with rerefence to its physical features, land marks or by measurement, it should be deemed to continue to belong to the former owner. The decision in 90 I. C. 1010[4] is precisely in point, and it was there held, following the decisions in 24 W. R. 317[5] and 26 I. C. 406,[6] that if the bed of a river is the property of a private individual when it is submeged it remains his property when it emerges from the water. There is a decision to the contrary in 45 I. C. 929[7] but with great respect the decision in 90 I. C. 1010[4] appears to be in accordance with the decision of the Judicial Committee. If Cl. 1 of S. 4 of the Regulation is to be limited in the sense they have laid down, it cannot apply in the present case, and there is then no reason why land forming part of the river bed that belonged to the landlord when submerged should cease to be his when it ceases to be sub merged. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs. Counsel's fee Rs. 15.

Civil P. C. (1908) O. 2, R. 3—Claim for pre-emption and in the alternative for declaration of title — Vendee and rival pre-emptor made parties—Maintainability of suit.

W sold certain joint family property to D. One H claimed to pre-empt the property. Pending the suit of H for pre-emption sons of W brought a suit against D and H. The plaintiffs claimed possession on pre-emption as the main relief and possession on declaration that the sale was not binding on them for want of legal necessity as an alternative relief:

Held, that there was no joinder, much less a misjoinder of causes of action in the suit. Assuming, however, that two causes of action were joined, such joinder was perfectly unobjectionable as it would not render the suit in any way vexatious or harassing to the defendants: Case law referred. [Para 11]

Held further that there was no misjoinder as to defendants also, as H was a necessary party to the suit and was interested in both the reliefs claimed alternatively by the plaintiffs. [Para 12]

Order.—This revision by the plaintiffs (hereinafter called applicants) arises out of an order passed by the Court of the Sub-Judge, 1st Class, Daryapur, holding their suit as framed was multifarious, involving misjoinder of defendants and causes of action and requiring them either to elect or to withdraw the suit. The lower Court also observed that the plaintiffs have no right to claim pre-emption until the sale of the property in question by their father is set aside.

[2] On 29-7-1943, Wamanrao, father of the plaintiffs, transferred by sale entire land in subdivision No. 10/2 (a) in favour of Deorao, the father of the present non-applicant 1, Ganesh, for Rs. 300. Deorao, in his turn, sold away the same in favour of non-applicants 2 and 4, viz. Bajirao and Namdeo. Non-applicant 3 Haribhau was jointed in the suit only on the ground that he claimed to pre-empt the property sold and that his suit for pre-emption (Civil Suit No. 324A of 1943) was pending.

[3] The plaintiffs contended that the property in suit was their joint family property, acquired by their father, Wamanrao, on 29.12.1942 out of joint family nucleus in his hands and the sale of property by Wamanrao was not binding on them for want of legal necessity. They also contended that the consideration of Rs. 300 was inadequate. The plaintiffs claimed that they, as sons of the vendor, Wamanrao, have a preferential right to pre empt and that they be allowed to pre-empt for Rs. 300, which amount they were willing to pay to the vendee. They further claimed in the alternative that in the event of their being not allowed to pre-empt, the sale be held not binding on them and they should be put in possession of the property either on pre-emption or on declaration as stated above.

[4] The plaintiffs' claim was denied by all the defendants (non-applicants) but the only plea that is relevant for this revision is contained in the written statement of defendant 3 in these words:

"The sale deed dated 29-7-43 stands till it is set aside by a properly instituted suit. No suit for pre-emption lies till then. The relief of setting aside the sale or the possession on the ground of absence of legal necessity and the claim of pre-emption cannot be claimed in this suit. There is a misjoinder of causes of action and defendants."

This objection was accepted by the lower Court and the plaintiffs were ordered either to elect or withdraw the suit and this is the order sought to be revised.

[5] In 8 W. R. 15[1] Sir Barnes Peacock, C. J. observed:

"Such a joinder in one suit of distinct causes of action against different defendants, each of whom is unconnected with the cause of action against the other, complicates the case before the Judge, and renders it exceedingly difficult for him in dealing with the case of each defendant to exclude from his consideration those portions of the evidence which may not be admissible against him, though admissible against one or more of the others. Moreover, it is vexatious and harassing to the different defendants."

This is the basic principle why suits involving misjoinder of causes of action and parties are regarded bad and the plaintiff is required to elect.

[6] The learned counsel for the applicants contended that what the plaintiffs claim in the present suit is possession of property and the cause of action for this relief is furnished by the fact that the property is the joint family property in which the plaintiffs have vested interest and that this property has been sold away by their father without legal necessity. Under Hindu law, the plaintiffs are entitled on proof of these facts to the restoration of possession as held in 9 N. L. R. 18[2] and subsequent cases following it. Under the provisions of the Berar Land Revenue Code they are entitled to pre-empt preferentially, as on account of their status as co-parceners, they are in the position of co-occupants. I notice that the plaintiffs have claimed in their plaint possession on pre-emption as the main relief and possession on declaration that the sale was not binding against them for want of legal necessity as an alternative relief. This is, however, not very material, as the grant of proper relief is under O. 7, R. 7, Civil P. C., always within the discretion of the Court. It is quite possible that even on the grant of declaration the plaintiffs may ask for and be permitted to pre-empt the share of their father in the property sold as is open for them to do under the Berar Land Revenue Code.

[7] According to I. L. R. (1942) Nag. 325[3] the sons in a joint Hindu family have a right of pre-emption as they are not in the position of a vendor in the sale effected by their father. This case is distinguished by Pollock J. in the unreported decision in Misc. S. A. No. 311 of 1943[4] in which the learned Judge further observed that the pre-emptor can challenge the vendor's title to sell part of the property sold as he cannot claim to be placed in possession of the property which is his in substitution for the vendee. In another case, Civil Revn. No. 544 of 1944, dated 5-7-1946[5] Puranik J. observed as under:

"Under the terms of S. 183, Berar Land Revenue Code itself the Court is bound to examine the transaction and cannot say that it will not go into the question of lease which, it has been asserted, has been introduced in the sale deed by the defendants with a view to defeating the rights of the pre-emptor as stated by him in the plaint. On pre-emption the plaintiff is entitled to be placed in possession of the property, and it is but proper that he should have good title on payment. If, as the plaintiff says, the lease is bogus, and if defendant 1 himself is in possession, defendant 2, being merely a benamidar, the plaintiff is entitled to have that point cleared up in this very suit instead of being driven to another suit. There is nothing in the Berar Land Revenue Code stating that an inquiry of the nature contemplated by the plaintiff in this suit should not be held. Inasmuch as defendant 2 is a necessary party to such an inquiry, and as that inquiry must be held in his presence the plaintiff is right in joining him as a party. The Court below had jurisdiction to hold the inquiry in this very suit. Assuming that the plaintiff in this suit for pre-emption is joining a claim for a declaration regarding the lease deed, which is a distinct cause of action, I am clearly of the opinion that in the circumstances of the case and on the allegations made in the plaint the plaintiff ought to be permitted to join the same and not be driven to a separate suit."

[8] Even according to the learned lower Court the plaintiffs cannot claim pre-emption until they get the sale set aside and still he wants them to have the same done by a separate suit with the possible result that by the time such a declaration is obtained by the plaintiffs their claim for pre-emption would be barred by time. This itself should have convinced the learned Judge that an inquiry into the binding nature of the sale deed must be gone into in this very suit even for the purpose of granting to the plaintiffs the relief of pre-emption.

[9] In 60 Cal. 918[6] cause of action is defined as meaning every fact which, if traversed, would be necessary for the plaintiff to prove in order to support his right to the judgment of the Court. In other words, it refers to the media upon which the plaintiff asks the Court to arrive at a conclusion in his favour. In the present case the only facts on which the plaintiffs ask the Court to give judgment in their favour are that the property sold away by their father is their joint family property in which the plaintiffs have a share and that the sale by their father is not binding on them. These facts being established, the plaintiffs would be entitled to a judgment in their favour, and the Court shall grant appropriate relief which on the facts proved they would be found entitled to in law.

[10] The main contention of the learned counsel for the non-applicants is that the plaintiffs cannot in the same suit claim alternative reliefs on inconsistent facts. I do not see much force in this contention. The facts on which the plaintiffs' suit is based are the same though the reliefs claimed are inconsistent and this is permissible in law. In 36 ALL. 476[7] their Lordships of the Allahabad High Court held that where a plaintiff sues to recover a part of the property sold by the vendor as owner and the remaining part of the property on the ground that he is entitled to pre-empt, such a suit is not bad for misjoinder of causes of action and the owner (plaintiff) can be allowed to pre-empt on payment of proportionate price. It is now well established that the pleas of ownership and easement though inconsistent can be put forward in the alternative in the same suit: vide 29 N. L. R. 330.[8] The Full Bench of the Bombay High Court in a case reported in A. I. R. 1946 Bom. 266[9] has after an exhaustive discussion of the point observed at page 270:

"It is certainly open to a party to raise inconsistent defences in the alternative, but at the time when evidence is led he has got to elect as to which of the two alternative inconsistent defences he is going to prove. If he relies on the plea of ownership and leads evidence on that point and fails in doing so, and if he thereafter relies on the same evidence for easement rights, he will be met with a serious difficulty in establishing a claim of easement because of the plea of ownership for which he led evidence and failed. However, it does not necessarily follow that, if a person makes inconsistent pleas he should not be allowed to lead evidence on those pleas. A party, if he chooses, is entitled to lead evidence on both the alternative pleas; and it is for the Court to decide whether he is entitled to succeed on either of the pleas. Certainly he cannot succeed on both."

[11] In my opinion there is no joinder and much less a misjoinder of causes of action in this suit. Assuming, however, that two causes of action are joined in the suit, such joinder is perfectly unobjectionable as it would not render the suit in any way vexatious or harassing to the defendants. The rule that a pre-emptor should not be permitted to deny the title of the vendor is as already shown above not rigid; otherwise the right of pre-emption could be successfully defeated by a vendor by fraudulently including in the sale deed some property which did not belong to him and belonged to the pre-emptor himself. Order 2, R. 1, Civil P. C., requires that every suit shall, as far as practicable, be so framed as to afford grounds for final decision upon the subject in dispute and to prevent further litigation concerning it. It is moreover neither necessary nor even advisable that the plaintiffs should be obliged to file separate suits when in those suits common questions of fact and law would arise.

[12] It is further contended by the non-applicant (defendant 3) that the suit as framed involves a misjoinder of the defendants as he is not concerned with that part of the plaintiffs' claim in which they claim possession on the ground that the sale deed by their father was not binding on them. The contention is not sound. Defendant 3 has instituted a suit for pre-empting the entire property sold by the plaintiffs' father. He is faced with two objections, firstly that he cannot pre-empt at all as the plaintiffs are entitled to pre-empt preferentially and secondly that he can pre-empt, if at all what Wamanrao, the plaintiffs' father, could validly convey to his vendee. He is thus interested in both the reliefs claimed alternatively by the plaintiffs though to justify his joinder it is not necessary that he should be interested in the entire claim of the plaintiffs. Defendant 3 claims to be substituted by pre-emption to the right, title and interest of defendants 1, 2 and 4 and he is therefore not only a proper but also a necessary party to a suit in which the right, title and interest of the vendee whom he desires to pre-empt are to be determined. Undoubtedly as a rival pre-emptor he is a necessary party to the plaintiffs' suit.

[13] Thus the plaintiffs' suit as framed is not bad on the ground that it is multifarious. It does not involve, according to me, either misjoinder of causes of action or misjoinder of defendants and the plaintiffs cannot therefore be called upon to elect or to withdraw the suit. It may be that the plaintiffs may be well-advised to amend the plaint in order to clarify and to set out the reliefs claimed in proper order but this is a matter which I leave to the plaintiffs.

[14] That the order of the lower Court in so far as it has refused to try the suit as framed amounts to a denial of jurisdiction vested in it. It is necessary with a view to shorten litigation and to save unnecessary costs that the order of the lower Court should be interfered with at this initial stage of the suit.

[15] I therefore allow this revision with costs. Counsel's fee Rs. 25. The order of the lower Court requiring the plaintiffs to elect or to withdraw the suit is set aside and the case is sent back to the lower Court for trial on merits.

PURANIK AND POLLOCK JJ.

Misc. Second Appeal No. 265 of 1943, Decided on 21-3-1946, from order of District Judge, Amraoti, D/- 23-7-1943.

* (a) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 21, R. 2— Adjustment of decree—Modes of—Variation of decree—Execution.

Agreements to compromise a claim to execute a decree may be divided into three classes. In the first class, the decree-holder agrees to give up all his rights under the decree on the judgment-debtor's doing something or other, and there is no adjustment until the judgment-debtor has done whatever he promised. The second class of agreement is where the decree-holder agrees to give up all his rights under the decree in return for a promise by the judgment-debtor to do something or other; on the recording of such an adjustment, the decree becomes fully satisfied and the decree-holder can enforce the fulfilment of the judgment-debtor's promise only by a separate suit. It is now well settled that such an agreement amounts to an adjustment of the decree: 20 A. I. R. 1933 Mad. 28; 28 A. I. R. 1941 Lah. 149 (F.B.); 22 A. I. R. 1935 Bom. 303 and 26 A. I. R. 1939 P. C. 80, Rel. on. [Para 4]

The third class of agreement is one in which the parties agree that the decree shall be modified in some way or other and that the decree-holder shall be entitled to execute the decree as modified but not the original decree. The question of the class in which the compromise falls is a question of fact. [Para 4]

Where the decree-holder, by the compromise never intended to give up his right to execute the decree (for money) merely in return for a promise by the judgment-debtor to put him in possession of the judgment-debtor's bungalow at some future date, but the handing over of possession to the decree-holder was an essential term of the compromise, and in execution the judgment-debtor did not contend that the compromise had fallen through because he had not fulfilled, and was not willing to fulfil, his promise to put the decree-holder in possession but demanded that the adjustment should be recorded and the application for execution be dismissed as fully satisfied:

Held the agreement fell within the third class and it was intended that decree-holder should have the right to execute the decree as modified. [Para 5]

It is within the power of parties to a decree by agreement to vary that decree and ask the Court to record such an agreement and the Court will then have jurisdiction to execute that agreement: 16 A. I. R. 1929 Cal. 687; (1874) L. R 5 P. C. 516; 15 Beng. L. R. 383 (P. C.); 23 A. I. R. 1936 Cal. 518; 26 A. I. R. 1939 P. C. 80 and 12 A. I. R. 1925 Nag. 49, Rel. on; 15 A. I. (b) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 21, R. 2—Enquiry whether decree has been adjusted—Decree-holder if can withdraw application for adjustment.

Upon filing the petition of compromise of decree signed by both the decree-holder and judgment-debtor, the Court may record that the decree has been satisfied. But where before it deals with the application the decree-holder objects to the recording of satisfaction, the Court can enquire whether the decree had been satisfied. There is nothing in O. 21, R. 2 to prevent the decree-holder from withdrawing or modifying his application for adjustment before the adjustment is recorded: 29 A. I. R. 1942 Bom. 59, Rel. on; 18 A. R. N. Padhye and N. B. Chandurkar — for Appellant.

Dr. D. W. Kathalay and K. V. Brahma — for Respondent.

Judgment. — In Civil Suit No. 36 of 1929 Sadaram obtained a decree against Kesarimal, the respondent in this Court, and took out execution, apparently early in 1932. Kesarimal put in an application to the executing Court on 19-4-1932 asking that the attachment of his bungalow in the Amraoti Civil Station should be postponed as a marriage was to be performed there in May. The attachment was accordingly postponed, and on 2-5-1932 Kesarimal took advantage of the postponement to execute a document by which he purported to sell this bungalow to Meghraj, the appellant in this Court, for Rs. 15,000 with a right to re-purchase within five years. On 3-5-1932 Kesarimal executed another document by which he purported to take the bungalow on lease on a rent to Rs. 111 per month. It was Meghraj's son who was to be married to Kesarimal's niece. Sadaram subsequently attached the bungalow, and Meghraj, after an unsuccessful objection to the attachment, filed a suit under O. 21, R. 63, Civil P. C., to establish his title to the bungalow. That suit failed, and an appeal to this Court, First Appeal No. 17B of 1935, was compromised on 6th April 1939. By this compromise Meghraj undertook to pay Rs. 7000 to Sadaram in part payment of Sadaram's decree against Kesarimal, this sum to be a charge on the bungalow; in return Sadaram recognized Meghraj's title to the bungalow and reserved his right to recover from Kesarimal the rest of the money due under this decree. In the meantime Meghraj had instituted a Civil Suit No. 51B of 1938 against Kesarimal for the rent of the bungalow, and on 17th October 1939 he obtained a decree for Rs. 4692-11-3 and costs.

[2] On 15th January 1941 Meghraj took out execution of his decree against Kesarimal. On 4th February 1941 Sadaram, Meghraj and Kesarimal, with the help of their legal advisers, came to an agreement among themselves. They agreed that Meghraj should pay Rs. 7000 to Sadaram and that Sadaram should get his decree against Kesarimal certified as fully satisfied. It was also agreed that Meghraj should give up his claim against Kesarimal to the amount due to him under his decree and to all rent accured since and should also give up his right to recover Rs. 7000 from Kesarimal on account of the payment he (Meghraj) had made to Sadaram, and that Kesarimal should put Meghraj at once in possession of the bungalow and should disclaim all interest in the bungalow henceforth. Meghraj paid Rs. 7000 to Sadaram on that day, and Meghraj and Kesarimal signed a document in which the terms of the compromise between themselves were embodied. It was stated in that document that possession of the bungalow had been given to Meghraj, though admittedly it had not been given: Kesarimal had however promised to give it within four days. This petition of compromise was filed in the executing Court. The case was fixed for hearing in the executing Court on 5th February 1941, but nothing was done on that day as Meghraj was absent. By the next date, 8th March 1941, a dispute had arisen because possession had not been given, and the case was adjourned on two occasions to allow the parties to settle the dispute. Eventually however on 3rd July 1941 Meghraj put in an application stating that he had agreed to the compromise on the distinct understanding that he would be given immediate possession of the bungalow and asking that either he should be put in possession or that he should be allowed to execute his decree. Kesarimal, with unblushing dishonesty merely contended that it was not open to the executing Court to inquire into the allegation that possession had not been delivered and demanded that the application for execution should be dismissed as fully satisfied.

[3] The point was a short one and there was little evidence to be recorded in the matter, but the executing Court proceeded in a most leisurely manner and eventually ordered on 18th September 1942 that Meghraj be put in possession of the bungalow and that the decree should be recorded as fully satisfied. Against that decision Kesarimal appealed, and the learned District Judge held that the executing Court could not enforce the promise of Kesarimal to deliver possession of the bungalow and that that promise must be enforced by a separate suit. He accordingly ordered that the application for execution should be struck off as fully satisfied. Against that decision Meghraj has preferred this second appeal.

[4] Agreements to compromise a claim to execute a decree may be divided into three classes. In the first class of agreement, the decree-holder agrees to give up all his rights under the decree on the judgment-debtor's doing something or other, and there is no adjustment until the judgment-debtor has done whatever he promised. The second class of agreement is where the decree-holder agrees to give up all his rights under the decree in return for a promise by the judgment-debtor to do something or the other; on the recording of such an adjustment, the decree becomes fully satisfied and the decree-holder can enforce the fulfilment of the judgment-debtor's promise only by a separate suit. It has in some cases been doubted whether such an agreement termed an "executory agreement," could amount to an adjustment of the decree, but it is now well settled that it can; see for example, 56 Mad. 198,[1] 22 Lah. 383[2] and A. I. R. 1935 Bom. 303,[3] where the point has been discussed at length, and also 14 Luck. 192.[4] The third class of agreement is one in which the parties agreed that the decree shall be modified in some way or other and that the decree-holder shall be entitled to execute the decree as modified but not the original decree. The question of the class in which the compromise falls is a question of fact.

[5] In the present case, we think it is quite clear that Meghraj never intended to give up his right to execute the decree merely in return for a promise by Kesarimal to put him in possession at some future date. The evidence shows that handing over possession to Meghraj was an essential term of the compromise. It might have been open to Kesarimal to contend that the compromise had fallen through because he had not fulfilled, and was not willing to fulfil, his promise to put Meghraj in possession. He did not however take that line, but demanded that the adjustment should be recorded and the application for execution be dismissed as fully satisfied. It therefore appears to us that the agreement falls within the third class and that it was intended that Meghraj should have the right to execute the decree as modified.

[6] The question then remains whether the parties to a decree can, by agreement, vary that decree and ask the Court to record such an agreement and whether the Court will then have jurisdiction to execute that agreement. In 56 Mad. 198,[1] Anantakrishna Ayyar J. remarked:

"The Court would not accept that new contract as a satisfaction of the decree when in essence it purports to vary the terms of the decree with a view to enable the parties to carry out in execution something contrary to the provisions of the decree."

For that remark, which was obiter, the learned Judge relied on the decision of the Judicial Committee in 24 Mad. 1,[5] but that decision does not, in our opinion, support that proposition. It was a case in which the title of the plaintiff, who was suing for possession of an estate, was admitted by defendants 1 and 4 and contested by defendants 2 and 3. After the plaintiff had obtained a decree and died, his widow came to an agreement with defendant 3 by which she accepted a sum of money from him and agreed to give up her claim against him. This was embodied in the decree and their Lordships of the Judicial Committee stated that the High Court had no power to alter its own decree except under the provisions of either S. 206 (now S. 152) or S. 623 (now O. 47, R. 1), Civil P. C. They went on however to say:

"A plausible explanation of the extraordinary order made by the High Court is that it was really based on an agreement between all the parties to the litigation including defendants 1, 2 and 4 as well as defendant 3 who made the compromise to which effect was given by the order. But no such agreement was proved or even suggested."

And subsequently they stated:

"The petition asked only that the razinama might be placed on the files of the Court, and the decree amended accordingly, i. e., so as to give effect to the compromise between the appellant and defendant 3 only. It was no doubt erroneous in asking for any amendment of the decree, and the only order which should have been made on it was to make the razinama a rule of Court, and stay all further proceedings on the decree against defendant 3 except for the purpose of enforcing the compromise."

This does not indicate that the decree, as modified, cannot be executed.

[7] In 57 Cal. 789[6] where the parties to the decree agreed that the decree should be payable by instalments and it should be open to the decree-holder to recover these instalments by execution, a Division Bench, relying on (1874) L. R. 5 P. C. 516[7] and 2 I. A. 219,[8] held that it was open to the parties, by agreement, to arrange their own procedure and give jurisdiction to the Court to adopt that procedure and that the parties should be held to their agreement and the questions between them should be heard and determined by proceedings quite contrary to the ordinary cursus curiæ. A similar view was taken by another Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court in A. I. R. 1936 Cal. 518.[9] A contrary view had been taken in A. I. R. 1928 Cal. 527[10] and in A. I. R. 1937 Cal. 222.[11] Ameer Ali J. expressed the view that a decree once passed is immutable and cannot be varied by an agreement between the parties but that there would be much injustice in departing from the view that a subsequent adjustment could be executed if the parties had agreed that it should be, and he left the point open. Though it is unnecessary and perhaps improper for a Court to amend the decree whenever an adjustment is recorded, yet it is clear that every such adjustment does in effect vary the decree: see 20 N. L. R. 122.[12]

[8] More recently, in 1939, the Judicial Committee again considered the matter in 14 Luck. 192.[4] In repelling the argument that the original decree cannot be altered or varied by the parties even with the sanction of the Court and that in any case mere consent of the parties cannot confer such a jurisdiction on the executing Court, their Lordships remarked:

"This line of reasoning is not without support from other decisions of Indian High Courts though authority and practice to the contrary is also to be found. On this difficult and important question their Lordships are not in agreement with the view taken by the Chief Court. They do not consider that it takes sufficient account of the facts that the Code contains no general restriction of the parties' liberty of contract with reference to their rights and obligations under the decree and that if they do contract upon terms which have reference to and affect the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree, the provisions of S. 47 involve that questions relating to such terms may fall to be determined by the executing Court .... If it appears to the Court, acting under S. 47, that the true effect of the agreement was to discharge the decree forthwith in consideration of certain promises by the debtor, then no doubt the Court will not have occasion to enforce the agreement in execution proceedings, but will leave the creditor to bring a separate suit upon the contract. If, on the other hand, the agreement is intended to govern the liability of the debtor under the decree and to have effect upon the time or manner of its enforcement, it is a matter to be dealt with under S. 47. In such a case to say that the creditor may perhaps have a separate suit is to misread the Code, which by requiring all such matters to be dealt with in execution discloses a broader view of the scope and functions of an executing Court. Their Lordships are in agreement with the statement in 54 All. 573[13] at p. 583 that 'in numerous cases a compromise between the decree-holder and the judgment-debtor entered into in the course of execution proceedings, which was duly recorded, has been enforced' and they are not of opinion that the practice, which is both wide-spread and inveterate, is contrary to the Code."

We are, therefore, of opinion that it was open to the parties to the decree in this case to agree that the decree should be executed by placing Meghraj in possession and that the executing Court therefore had jurisdiction to place him in possession.

[9] The point has been taken that when the petition of compromise was filed in the executing Court on 4th February 1941, then under O. 21, R. 2, Civil P. C. the Court had no option but to record that the decree had been satisfied. The Court might have recorded satisfaction on 4th February 1941; but before it dealt with the application the decree-holder objected to the recording of satisfaction, and the Court was therefore correct in enquiring whether the decree had been satisfied. We agree with the view taken in I.L R. (1942) Bom. 132[14] that there is nothing in O. 21, R. 2 to prevent the decree-holder from withdrawing or modifying his application for adjustment before the adjustment is recorded, and we respectfully dissent from the view in A. I. R. 1931 Rang. 332[15] that once an application has been put in by the decree holder the Court must record the decree as adjusted, whatever happens between the putting in of the application and the recording of the adjustment. We see no reason why amendment should not be allowed in cases where it is equitable to allow it. The decision of the executing Court was, in our opinion, correct, and the appeal will therefore be allowed with costs throughout. The order of the executing Court will be restored. Counsel's fee Rs. 100.

Misc. Case No. 161 of 1942, Decided on 30-7-1946, from order of Extra Asst. Commissioner (with revenue appellate powers), Nagpur, D/- 30-10-1943.

(a) C. P. Municipalities Act (2 [II] of 1922), S. 66 (1) (k)—Assessment on agricultural lands.

Lands lying within the municipal limits must pay the general water-rate under S. 66 (1) (k) and the byelaws thereunder irrespective of whether the water is used by the occupier or not. The fact that the lands are agricultural and already assessed to land revenue does not make any difference as the Municipalities Act contains no prohibition against double taxation and the present use of the lands for agricultural purpose does not eschew use of the land for domestic purpose or consumption of water for a domestic purpose'

[Paras 3, 4, 5 & 6]

(b) C. P. Municipalities Act (2 [II] of 1922), S. 66 (1) (k)—Assessment on well.

There can be no assessment of water rate only on a well under S. 66 (1) (k) and the byelaws thereunder but where a piece of land contains a well and by reason of that well an increase in value of the land results, assessment can be made on the land taking into account the increased value of the land due to the well.

[Para 7]

(c) C. P. Municipalities Act (2 [II] of 1922), S. 66 (1) (a) — Assessment on agricultural lands.

Agricultural lands lying within the municipal limits and already assessed to land revenue or rent under the C P. Land Revenue Act are liable to be assessed to municipal taxes under S. 66 (1) (a); 37 Cal. 697, Rel. on; 20 N. L. J. 238 and 25 Mad. 627, Disting.

(d) C. P. Municipalities Act (2 [II] of 1922), Ss. 66 (1) (a) and 81 — Recovery of tax from occupier.

Though the property tax must be assessed on the owner, the municipality can also recover it from the occupier who is entitled in his turn to recover it from the owner unless there is a contract to the contrary.

Order.—These are two references made by the Extra Assistant Commissioner with revenue appellate powers, Nagpur, under S. 83 (2), C. P. Municipalities Act. References cover four separate questions arising out of the assessment of water rate and property tax. It is convenient to take these matters separately.

[2] With regard to the water rate the questions which have been referred are these :

(1) Whether agricultural lands lying within municipal limits of Nagpur, and already assessed to the land revenue under the C. P. Land Revenue Act are liable to be assessed to water tax under clause (k) of S. 66, C. P. Municipalities Act, and the bye-laws thereunder and

(2) Whether a private well belonging to the private individuals but used by the public within the municipal limits is liable to be assessed with water rate under the above provisions.

The first question as framed is a limited one, but the arguments ranged over a considerable field involving adjudication on facts. It was pointed out to the learned counsel that the reference does not involve any adjudication on facts, and the question is, therefore, considered purely as a matter of law irrespective of facts or equity involved in any particular case.

[3] The power to assess water-rate is claimed by the municipality by virtue of S. 66 (1), clause (k) which reads thus :

"A committee may, from time to time, and subject to the provisions of this chapter, impose in the whole or in any part of the municipality any of the following taxes, for the purposes of this Act, namely .....
(k) a water-rate, where water is supplied by the committee."

At the outset, an argument was advanced that the assessment of water-rate is dependent upon the supply of water by the Committee, and admittedly as these agricultural lands are not receiving a supply of water from the municipality they cannot be assessed to the general water-rate. The assessment of water-rate is not dependent upon the consumption of the water by the assessee but upon the supply of water by the municipality in the area under its administration. Under S. 50 (1) (k) the municipality is under a duty of providing a supply of water proper and sufficient to prevent danger to the health of the inhabitants and their domestic cattle. Where the municipality fulfils its statutory duties rules have been framed to enable it to collect water-rate from the public. Under the rules framed under this section, it has been provided inter alia that water-rate is assessable even on every building or land which may not be provided a supply from the municipal waterworks but which is situated within 200 yards from a public water standard or main pipe. Where the building or land is rented the amount of water-rate is calculated on the basis of a schedule given in the Rules, and where the building or land is not rented but is occupied by the owner himself it is calculated on the annual letting value. It is admitted by the assessees that the water standards or main pipes are situated within 200 yards of their lands. They, however, contend that they are not liable to the water-rate because (a) the land is agricultural land and (b) they do not take any water from the main pipes. The question of not taking water from the main pipes was considered in I. L. R. (1940) Bom. 667[1] by Beaumont C. J. and the reasoning there is applicable here also. It makes no difference whether water is taken or not so long as the water-main-pipe or standard is found within 200 yards of the land in question. The words "where water is supplied by the committee" do not refer to supply of water to individuals but refer to committees which have undertaken the supply of water to the areas controlled by them. A comparison of the other clauses of this section shows this clearly. The learned counsel for the assessees questioned the wisdom of charging a tax from persons who do not avail themselves of the privilege but it may be pointed out that it is not possible to consider the policy underlying the rules because so long as the rules are intra vires the question of policy cannot be considered. It was held in A. I. R. 1935 Nag. 224[2] by one of us that the rules form part of the statute and they are as unquestionable on the ground of policy as the statute itself. In our opinion, therefore, lands lying within the municipal limits which are within 200 yards of a water standard or main pipe must pay the general water-rate irrespective of whether the water is used by the occupier or not. Since the municipality is under a statutory obligation to supply water and is compelled to embark upon an expensive venture, there is nothing prima facie unfair in its claim for a contribution in the shape of a general water-rate from all the owners of buildings or lands to whom water is made available whether they take it or not.

[4] The next question is: Is there any difference because these lands are agricultural lands and are already assessed to land revenue? It was urged that this would amount to double taxation. This contention has no force, as the Municipalities Act contemplates the levy of taxes on properties which are already paying other taxes and contains no prohibition against double taxation. The contention founded upon these lands being agricultural has some plausibility but as will be shown presently there is little force in it. Under the rules, water-rate is assessable only if the main pipe is situated within 200 yards of assessee's land and the expression "main pipe" has been defined as meaning any municipal pipe from which connections can be allowed for private consumers for domestic purposes or for other public purposes. The question need not be considered from the point of view of public purpose as ex hypothesi the lands, though agricultural, are private property. It is argued that agriculture cannot be described as a domestic purpose. In support I. L. R. (1939) Nag. 330[3] is cited. The words "domestic purpose" were defined by one of us in this case, and it was held that the true test was whether or not the water was used for a purpose which could be described as "domestic." The word "domestic" ordinarily means pertaining to one's home or one's household or family. Now water used for agricultural purpose, i.e., for irrigating the land, can hardly be called water used for domestic purpose.

[5] On this view, it would appear to follow that neither the owner of the agricultural land is entitled to the supply of water from the main pipe nor can the municipal committee be compelled to supply water so that the presence of the main pipe within the specified area would have no legal significance. The contention so formulated, plausible as it looks, involves the fallacious assumption that there could be no supply, even potentially, for domestic purpose. If the owner of the land were to build a farm house for his residence on the farm, he would be entitled to ask for water supply to the farm house, i e., for domestic consumption. It must also be presumed prima facie that all vacant lands lying within the limits of the municipality are potentially building sites. It is also on this presumption that the owners of vacant lands may be made liable to pay the general water-rate irrespective of the use to which the land is put, provided the land is situated as the rules lay down. It is not the actual use but the potential use that is material for consideration in construing the rule relating to the general water-rate. The present use of the land for agricultural purpose does not eschew use of the land for domestic purpose or consumption of water for a domestic purpose. The rule is meant to enable the water rate to be assessed, and the use of the words "domestic purpose" in a definition clause does not introduce any exception in favour of persons who are not, for the time being, using any water for domestic purposes; and if a water main pipe or standard be located within the stated distance, assessment can take place on the assumption that a connection for water for domestic purposes is not entirely precluded.

[6] It was further argued that just as there is an exemption in respect of the conservancy cess so also there ought to be an exemption in respect of water-rate when the land is used exclusively for agricultural purposes. The argument is based upon rules framed under S. 66 (1), cl. (b), Municipalities Act. There a note is appended to these rules which reads as under:

"(ii) The tax under cls. (a) and (b) shall not be assessed on any land which is used exclusively for agricultural purpose."

It was argued that similar considerations apply to the assessment of water-rate on agricultural property. We do not see how that follows. If Provincial Government has chosen to give an exemption in respect of conservancy tax on agricultural lands it does not follow that the Provincial Government is compelled to give a similar exemption in respect of the water-rate. Nor can we read the exemption into rules where no such exemption is specifically stated. Further if Provincial Government exempts one and not the other it must be presumed that the discrimination was intentional. It is not competent to any Court to assume that the Legislature or legislative authority made a mistake, there being a strong presumption that the Parliament does not make mistakes. No provision which is not in the statute can be implied to remedy an omission, in the absence of any ground for thinking that such a course is necessary to carry out the intention of Parliament. (See Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. 31, P. 497, Hailsham Edition.) The same rule must apply to any legislative body, authority or agency. In the present case the omission could not be a mistake, for the reason that water-rate unlike conservancy cess is not a service tax. This is clear from the wording of cls. (h) and (k) of S. 66, Municipalities Act: latrine or conservancy tax is "payable by an occupier, upon private latrines" whereas water-rate is payable "where water is supplied by the Committee". The water-rate is not limited to any occupier. The fact is that for supply of water the municipal committee has to incur capital expenditure for providing water supply to the town as a whole, whereas in the case of latrine tax it has only to maintain a conservancy staff according to the extent of the demand for scavenging. We would, therefore, answer the first question in the affirmative.

[7] The second question is whether, under the above provisions, water-rate can be assessed on a private well within the municipal limits belonging to a private individual but used by the public? We have examined cases which have been sent to us along with these references, but we have not been able to find a case in which assessment was entirely on a well. Now, the assessment for water-rate follows a schedule based upon the annual letting value of the property. The annual value of the property will certainly be fixed taking into account the existence of a well on the land. The existence of a well increases the value of the property and consequently its annual letting value. In assessing the water-rate, there may be an indirect assessment on the well but that appears permissible. We have not found any case in which there has been an assessment only on a well. Our answer, therefore, to the second question would be that where a piece of land contains a well and by reason of that well an increase in value results, assessment can be made taking into account the increased value of the land due to the well.

[8] The second set of questions are connected with the levy of property tax and the first question referred is:

"(1) Whether agricultural lands lying within the municipal limits of Nagpur, and already assessed to the land revenue or rent under the C. P. Land Revenue Act, are liable to be assessed to municipal taxes under S. 66 (1) (a) of the Municipal Act ?"

We have already indicated that there is no prohibition against double taxation in the Municipal Act. The power to levy property tax is provided in S. 66 (1) (a) and it does not in terms make any distinction between agricultural and non-agricultural lands. It is argued that the words "a tax payable by the owners of the building or land situated within the limits of the municipality" indicate that the land must be either part and parcel of a building, or at any rate, a building site. It is said that the term 'land' must be interpreted as excluding agricultural lands. Reliance is placed on 20 N. L. J. 238.[4] That case has no bearing upon this matter. There is no warrant for putting such a restricted meaning upon the term "land." It is to be noticed that in some municipalities agricultural land is exempted by a specific provision of law. Thus we find that in the Local Government Act, 1929 (19 Geo. V, Chap. 17) S. 67, relief is given in respect of the valuation by providing in sub-s. (2) that "for the purposes of valuation lists in force at the appointed day, agricultural land and agricultural buildings shall be deemed to have no rateable value."

Similarly, as we find that in 25 Mad. 627[5] at p. 629 under a Madras statute lands which were solely used for agricultural purposes were exempt from taxation by reason of a special provision. However, in 37 Cal. 697[6] it was held that the word "holding" in the Bengal Municipal Act of 1894 was wide enough to cover arable land which was liable to be assessed under the provisions of the Calcutta Act. In that case it was argued that the Legislature must have contemplated municipal taxation only in respect of some sort of habitation and residence and therefore, purely agricultural holdings were outside the scope of the Act. In interpreting the language of the statute, their Lordships negatived this contention and said that in the absence of any qualifying words used in the statute they must give the words of the statute their plain meaning. The word "land" must, therefore, be construed in its widest sense. Land does not cease to be land because it is put to agricultural use. The proximity of the word "building" does not place any restraint upon the generality of the meaning of the word "land." In the Act before us, we find that the language admits of no limitation and, therefore, we are of the view that agricultural lands are liable to be assessed to municipal taxes under S. 66 (1) if they lie within the municipal limits.

[9] The next question is :

"(2) When the land is in possession of the lessee, is lessee not primarily liable to pay the tax, or can the Municipal Committee recover the tax from the owner or the holder of the land when he is not in actual possession of the land ?"

So far as collection of the tax is concerned, S. 81, C. P. Municipalities Act, gives a complete answer because under that section any tax or sum leviable under this Act from the owner may be recovered from the occupier and in such a case occupier shall, in the absence of any contract to the contrary, be entitled to recover the same from the owner and may deduct the same from any rent then or thereafter due by him to the owner. The property tax is really leviable from the owner who should be assessed as the words of S. 66 (1) (a) and the rules made thereunder clearly show. The answer to this question, therefore, would be that though the tax must be assessed on the owner, the Municipality can also recover it from the occupier who is entitled in his turn to recover it from the owner unless there is a contract to the contrary. There will be no order as to costs.

Judgment.—This is a Letters Patent Appeal from a judgment of Stone C. J., in Second Appeal No. 494 of 1940 decided on 10th April 1942. The suit out of which this appeal arises was brought by two plaintiffs who were the sons of one Abdul Wahab (also called Aboo) against seven defendants, the first five of whom were the legal representatives of one Moulvi Munawar Khan and the last two the legal representatives of one Munshi Mohammad Azimullah Khan On 29th September 1915, Munawar Khan was appointed by the District Judge, Saugor, guardian of the property of the plaintiffs who were then minors, and Azimulla Khan was his surety in the sum of Rs. 4000 and both the guardian and the surety executed a bond which is Ex. P-5 in the case.

[2] The suit was filed on 15th June 1939 on the bond, which was assigned by the District Judge to the present plaintiffs on 16-6-1936 under S. 35, Guardians and Wards Act. The plaintiffs alleged that Munawar Khan was placed in charge of property worth about Rs. 6500, and they claimed that this property should be returned to them and that the defendants 1 to 5 should be asked to give account of all the property and its income received by Munawar Khan. If defendants 1 to 5 were held responsible but could not meet the demands of the plaintiffs it was prayed that a decree should be passed also against defendants 6 and 7 who were the legal representatives of the surety. Defendant 5 in the suit was one Mt. Asha Bi who was appointed guardian of the plaintiffs after the death of Munawar Khan in 1924.

[3] Defendants 1 to 5 denied liability. Defendants 6 and 7 said that Azimulla Khan had died in the year 1922 and must, therefore, be deemed to be discharged from his liability under the bond. They further said that after Munawar Khan's death in 1924 Mt. Asha Bi (defendant 5) was appointed guardian of the property of the minors, and that this also resulted in the discharge of the surety. These defendants also pleaded that the suit was barred as not having been brought within the requisite period required by law. Defendants 2, 3 and 4 pleaded that they were not liable to render accounts as accounts had already been explained and further that there were no assets of the deceased Munawar in their hands; nor had they any property belonging to the minors. They also pleaded that the suit was barred under the Limitation Act.

[4] The trial Court decided on the authority of 60 Bom. 1027[1] that the suit was within time. It further decided on the authority of 55 Cal. 154[2] that the death of the surety did not make any difference to the liability arising under the continuing guarantee indicated by the terms of the bond, Ex. P-5. Since the bond itself made a mention of the legal representatives of the surety it was held that it formed an exception to the rule contained in S. 131, Contract Act. The learned trial Judge, therefore, passed a preliminary decree against all the defendants and ordered :

"In the proceedings hereafter the dates of death of Munawarkhan and Azimulla Khan shall have to be found out. It shall also have to be found out as to what Munawarkhan received in respect of the property of the plaintiffs and what expenses he incurred and what money or property he (Munawarkhan) failed to account for or spent or disposed of in contravention of the orders of or without the sanction of the District Judge. After doing all this the liability of Munawarkhan can be determined. It would be useful to find out the liability of Munawarkhan before the death of M Azimulla Khan and the liability incurred after his (M. Azimullakhan's) death."

[5] From this judgment and decree only defendants 6 and 7 appealed. The other defendants did not appeal. The learned Additional District Judge held that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover the property left to them though he held that the plaintiffs were not entitled to have the accounts explained to them inasmuch as such accounts were periodically filed before the District Judge. He also held on the authority of 60 Bom. 1027,[1] that the suit was not barred by limitation but was within time.

[6] The learned appellate Judge, therefore, set aside the decree for accounts passed by the Court of first instance against defendants 6 and 7 and he also extended the benefit of his judgment and decree to the remaining defendants 1 to 5, even though these defendants had not appealed. The learned Judge further ordered the case to be remanded for the determination of the liability of the defendants for the return of the property which was in the hands of Munawar Khan at the time of his death. No specific mention was made as to the liability of defendants 6 and 7 but it would be correct to assume that their responsibility was also to be determined.

[7] The plaintiffs alone appealed against this judgment and decree. The learned counsel for the appellants appended a note to his memorandum of second appeal which reads thus:

"The appellants do not object to the order of remand as in fact it is only sending back the case for final decree proceedings. In any case the appellants are not aggreived by the order of remand."

The note is somewhat inaccurate inasmuch as the case was not sent for final decree proceedings but was sent for the trial of an entirely new issue which had not been decided by the trial Judge but which perhaps arose upon a true construction of the plaint and the pleadings in the case. That issue was whether defendants 1 to 5 were liable to return any property which Munwar Khan might have had in his hands at the time of his death and which belonged to the then infants (plaintiffs). On reading the grounds of appeal, it is apparent that the grievance of the plaintiffs was that the decree against defendants 1 to 5 was set aside without any appeal on their part, that defendants 6 and 7 were discharged from all liability to account and that there was no direction that the enquiry ordered by the first appellate Court was also to be directed against defendants 6 and 7.

[8] The case was heard by Stone C. J., who passed an order on 25-3-1942 dismissing the appeal. It is convenient to reproduce it in extenso here.

"25-3-42. ORDER.

The appeal fails because (whatever may be the result of argument on the grounds of appeal) of the limitation point. That went in favour of the appellants in the lower Court. The lower Court followed 60 Bom. 1027.[1] That decision has since been overruled by the Privy Council in I.L.R. (1941)Bom. 202.[3] As a consequence the claim should have been dismissed as out of time. In all the circumstances, costs in this Court are not pressed for and the appeal is dismissed; no order as to costs. The suit would appear to have to be dismissed as time barred.

Adjourned to Tuesday morning next for counsel to consider the position.

Sd/- Gilbert Stone, Chief Justice.

[9] The learned Chief Justice then heard arguments in the appeal on the point as to whether the appeal or the entire claim should be dismissed and pronounced a judgment on 10-4-1942 at the same time granting leave to the appellants to file an appeal under the Letters Patent.

[10] At the hearing on 25-3-1942, the learned counsel for the appellants prayed for permisson to withdraw their appeal. That application is on record. It is now argued that the learned Chief Justice, having dismissed the appeal by his order dated 25-3-1942, could not consider whether the suit was liable to be dismissed on the point of limitation. It was also pointed out that the decree of the first appellate Court could not be set aside as these defendants had not appealed against that decree.

[11] We say (with all due respect) that the somewhat unusual course adopted by the learned Chief Justice in first dismissing the appeal by an order and then proceeding to judgment on the merits of the question of limitation, has caused a certain amount of difficulty. The learned Chief Justice decided in his judgment dated 10th April 1942 that the suit was ex facie time-barred in view of the reversing decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in I. L. R. (1941) 65 Bom. 202,[3] in the very case on which the two lower Courts had relied. The learned Chief Justice dismissed the suit as against defendants 6 and 7 on the authority of the Privy Council case referred to here. He, however, held that the effect of the order of the Additional District Judge was to set aside the decree and order a retrial and that the trial was of a new issue and one which might affect defendants 1 to 5 and might affect also defendants 6 and 7. Whether it would affect defendants 6 and 7 depended upon the bond and the limitation. The learned Chief Justice commented upon these questions and said:

"It is now clear that because of limitation they cannot be successfully sued," and be further held that the question of limitation was not concluded but was open. This is apparent from the following sentence:

"I am accordingly of the opinion, on the special facts here present, that the question of limitation is not concluded but is open."

[12] It is obvious from this that the learned Chief Justice upheld the order of remand upon the grounds on which remand was ordered by the learned Additional District Judge. But he dismissed the entire suit against defendants 6 and 7 on the point of limitation.

[13] The learned counsel for the appellants contends that defendants 6 and 7 (respondents here) have been enabled to get a decision in their favour without filing an appeal in the case. His contention is that S. 3, Limitation Act does not apply after a decree has been passed unless the decree is challenged by way of an appeal and in this case there was no appeal against the decision of the first appellate Court, by defendants 6 and 7. He argued that the learned Chief Justice could not either suo motu or on objection by the respondents invoke S. 3, Limitation Act and dismiss the suit against these defendants and thus nullify a decree which had not been challenged. He also contended that the learned Chief Justice could not pronounce any opinion on the question as the matter was not open for consideration after the counsel for the appellants had withdrawn the appeal and the learned Chief Justice had dismissed the appeal by his order dated 25th March 1942. The last point does not arise as the order dated 25th March 1942 expressly reserved the consideration of the question of limitation.

[14] It is obvious that defendants 6 and 7 had succeeded in their appeal in so far as the taking of accounts was concerned and they could not appeal on the point. The point of limitation was decided against them and they could have appealed if they had chosen to do so. The question is not one of the rights of the parties but of the duties and powers of Courts. In S. 3, Limitation Act it is provided that:

"Subject to the provisions contained in Ss. 4 to 25 (inclusive), every suit instituted . . . after the period of limitation . . . . shall be dismissed, although limitation has not been set up as a defence."

This section was considered by the Judicial Committee in 57 ALL. 242[4] and their Lordships said:

"In their Lordships' opinion it is impossible to hold that, in a matter which is governed by the Act, an Act which in some limited respect gives the Court a statutory discretion, there can be implied in the Court, outside the limits of the Act, a general discretion to dispense with its provisions. It is to be noted that this view is supported by the fact that S. 3 of the Act is peremptory and that the duty of the Court is to notice the Act and give effect to it, even though it is not referred to in the pleadings."

The logical result of this observation is that the Act lays a duty upon Courts to Act suo motu in all cases where the suit is instituted beyond the statutory period and that the fact, that parties may have thought differently or may not have noticed the point, does not make the slightest difference.

[15] It was argued that this may be true while the suit lasted but once a decree had been passed it became absolute and the appellate Court could not take action unless the party adversely affected filed an appeal against the judgment and decree passed in the suit. In 8 Bom. 535[5] and 15 ALL. 123[6] such a view was taken but these cases were distinguished in later cases, because, in those cases, the bar of limitation was not patent upon the proceedings. Where a statute plainly lays down the duty of Courts, it is for the Courts to apply the provisions of the Act concerned. In 13 ALL. 300[7] at p. 304 their Lordships said:

"This objection to the award was apparently not brought to the notice either of the Subordinate Judge or the High Court. But the statute is there, and the Judges were bound to take judicial notice of it."

The cases in 8 Bom. 535[5] and 15 ALL. 123[6] were not followed in 8 N. L. R. 174[8] at p. 176 and bar of limitation was held to be fatal even though the benefit went to a defendant who had not appealed. Stanyon A. J. C. said:

"The plaintiff has now made this second appeal, and the only ground which is, and can be, urged on his behalf is that, upon the appeal of the plaintiff as to a part of his claim which had been dismissed, the lower appellate Court has reversed even the partial decree which the appellant had obtained, and moreover has done so upon a ground not raised by the defendants in either Court. On the face of it, this argument seems to carry force, and in many cases would be irresistible. But that is not the position here. The decision of the lower appellate Court is quite correct. The bar of limitation is patent upon the face of the record. Therefore S. 3, Limitation Act, 1908, applies, and the dismissal of the whole suit was compulsory. Even if O. 41, R. 33, Civil P. C., 1908, had not been in existence, the application of the statutory mandate as to limitation could not have been avoided by applying any rules of pleadings."

In I. L. R. (1944) Nag. 419,[9] Bobde J. said:

"Courts have not been given power to devise their own technique for saving claims from the bar which the statutes of limitation create."

The statute must be applied at whatever stage it is found applicable provided it is before a final order or decree is passed. In 5 N. L. R. 50,[10] Skinner A. J. C. held:

"I have been asked on his behalf to treat Major Morris' decision of the question of limitation as final since it was not appealed against. I am clear, however, that under S. 4, Limitation Act I am bound (as held by a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in 12 All. 461[11] to take cognizance of the question of limitation, even if the respondent is precluded from raising it."

[16] In 53 Mad. 881[12] and I. L. R. (1944) Mad. 147[13] it has been pointed out that the powers of the appellate Court under O. 41, Rr. 33 and 22 are very wide. It is, however, not necessary to go to these provisions. Upto date there is no decree in favour of anybody. All that the Court has decided is to remand the case for the trial of a fresh issue which properly arises upon a true construction of the pleadings. In so far as defendants 6 and 7 are concerned, the suit is patently time-barred. This point can be decided without any evidence being taken, and it matters not whether these defendants have or have not appealed. It was, with great respect, in our opinion, the duty of the learned Chief Justice to take judicial notice of the law and to dismiss the suit as against these defendants. There is no room for interference and the appeal must, therefore, fail. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

First Appeal No. 40 of 1943, Decided on 14-10-1946, from decree of Addl. Dist. Judge, Hoshangabad, D/- 31-12-1942.

(a) Hindu Law—Maintenance—Decree for—Suit for variation of amount — Retrospective effect.

When the amount of maintenance is fixed in a decree the figure of amount stands until it is varied by a second decree in a separate suit brought for the purpose unless the original decree on the face of it provides machinery for its own variation. The decree-holder has a right to the figure fixed in the decree down to the date of the bringing of the suit for variation. Whatever is decided in the subsequent suit takes effect only from the date of that suit. Hence, there can be no retrospective variation of the figure either up or down : 26 A. I. R. 1939 Nag. 249 and 27 A.I.R. 1940 Nag. 163, Rel. on. [Para 7]

(b) Hindu Law — Maintenance decree — Subsequent partition — Right of decree-holder to proceed against family estate.

Once the maintenance is fixed and a charge declared, whether by a decree or otherwise, a floating charge over the property is created which crystallises month by month as each arrear falls due and the principles which enable a creditor to proceed against the family estate in respect of a pre-partition debt in the case of crystallised charges apply with equal force in the case of a floating charge of this character. [Para 10]

(c) Hindu Law—Widow— Maintenance—Charge decree—Enforceability against whole family estate after partition.

When a Hindu widow obtains a charge decree for her maintenance and in a subsequent partition a fair share of the estate is assigned to the branch of the family to which the widow belongs and to which alone she is entitled under the law to look for her maintenance, the person who represents her husband's branch of the family takes his place and the other members are freed from further liability ; but where the partition is not between the widow's branch of the family and the others but between the others inter se the widow's right to have the charge on the whole family estate is not affected : 31 A.I.R. 1944 Bom. 235 and 26 A.I.R. 1939 Mad. 781 (F.B), Disting. [Paras 14 and 15]

(d) Contract Act (1872), S. 43 — Decree charging number of properties—Right of decree-holder to proceed against any item—T. P. Act (1882), S. 60.

Where there is a decree charging a number of properties, the charge-holder can proceed to enforce his charge against any item of property he pleases, whether the charge be divisible or indivisible. [Para 12]

(e) Hindu Law — Maintenance decree — Suit for reduction of amount — Relevant considerations — Sale of property in execution of maintenance decree.

When a suit asks for reduction of the amount fixed in a maintenance decree the plaintiff must prove substantial alteration in the fortunes of the family. The fact of the sale of some of the properties, in execution of the maintenance decree resulting in a loss of income is not a relevant consideration, the diminution being due to the plaintiff's default in not paying the maintenance charges : 8 Mad. 94 and 24 Bom. 386, Rel. on. [Paras 8 and 31]

(f) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 7, R. 18 — Production of account books at late stage.

Where in a suit for reduction of amount fixed in a maintenance decree the account books are not mentioned in the list of reliance and no copies of the relevant entries of the books are filed with the plaint, the production of the original account books not for refreshing the memory of a witness but for proving them would not justify their admission, at a late state: 15 A.I.R. 1928 P.C. 80, Disting. [Paras 24 and 25]

Judgment. — This appeal by the plaintiff arises out of a suit which asks that the amount fixed in a maintenance decree be reduced. A genealogical tree will be necessary :

TULSIRAM

Rameshwardas wife Kundanbai (Deft. 1)	Shaligram
	Shrinarayan wife Godawaribai (deft. 2)
	Sheonarayan wife Savitribai (Plff.)

[2] Defendant 1, Kundanbai, who died during the pendency of the appeal, obtained a decree against Shaligram in the year 1895. This decree, which has been the subject-matter of much litigation in the family, will be found set out, or rather the relevant portion of it will be found at p. 516 of I. L. R. (1941) Nag. 513.[1] It was unfortunately (see p. 538) construed to be merely declaratory and inexecutable by the Court of the Judicial Commissioner in Second Appeal No. 565 of 1935. Accordingly Kundanbai was driven to filing a succession of suits for recovery of the maintenance decreed to her, the decree having declared her right (see p. 531). The decree awarded her Rs. 250 a month which was reduced by agreement to Rs. 200 a month in 1916.

[3] When Shaligram died, the burden of maintaining Kundanbai, in accordance with the decree, fell on his sons, Shrinarayan and Sheonarayan. They are said to have partitioned but as they made no arrangement for payment of Kundanbai's dues she is entitled to ignore it. In due course the sons died and were succeeded by their respective widows.

[4] One of the numerous suits which Kundanbai was forced to file came up to this Court, and the decision will be found in the case we have just cited. In the course of that suit Savitribai, who was a defendant, asked that the Rs. 200 be reduced still further. The Division

Bench held that the sum having been fixed in a decree could not be varied in proceedings brought by Kundanbai for the purpose of enforcing the rights declared to her by the previous decree. That could only be done in a separate suit (see pp. 536 and 557). Savitribai has accordingly brought the present suit and asks that the maintenance be reduced to Rs. 50 a month with retrospective effect from 5-2-1930 when the circumstances are said to have changed. The suit was filed in 1933.

[5] The plaint also asks that this sum be apportioned between Godavaribai and herself, and that each be made liable for half, that is for Rs. 25 a month. The plaint also asks, somewhat impudently in our opinion, seeing that Kundanbai has never been paid a pie of her money unless she sued for it and enforced her decrees by execution, that an injunction be issued against her restraining her from filing any more suits after 5-2-1930.

[6] The only question we have to decide is whether the circumstances have changed in such a way as to justify any further reduction as we have said the amount was reduced from Rs. 250 a month to Rs. 200 a month by consent in 1916. The lower Court finds that this has not been proved and so dismisses the plaintiffs' suit.

[7] The law on this point has been dealt with by a Division Bench in I. L. R. (1941) Nag. 437.[2] So far as the plaint seeks reduction with retrospective effect from 5-2-1930, that relief cannot, according to the previous decision, be given. The Division Bench held at p. 449 that the Court has to see whether the right to the figure stated in the plaint existed at the date when the cause of action accrued. It is true these remarks had reference to a suit by the maintenance-holder, but the principle is, we think, the same when the other side sues for reduction. According to this decision, at p. 449 and again at page 537 in I. L. R. (1941) Nag. 513[1] when the figure is fixed in a decree the figure stands until it is varied by a second decree in a separate suit brought for the purpose unless the original decree on the face of it provides machinery for its own variation. Therefore, down to the bringing of the suit for variation the decree-holder has a right to the figure fixed in the decree. It follows that in such case there can be no restrospective variation either up or down. Whatever is decided in the subsequent suit takes effect only from the date of that suit. To that extent the plaintiff's claim must fail in any event.

[8] On the merits the plaintiff has to prove a substantial alteration in the fortunes of the family. We agree with the lower Court that she has not done this. One of the circumstances on which she relies is a partition in the family after Shaligram's death: see p. 449 of I. L. R. (1941) Nag. 437.[2] When there is a partition in the family the rule is that the creditor is not affected in respect of a pre-partition debt, particularly when no provision is made for the payment of the debts. The creditor can, in such a case, enforce his claim just as if there had been no partition, subject only to this proviso, that he must join the person to whom the property has fallen if he desires to proceed against that particular item. The reason for this is that the father, or other representative of the family, ceases to represent the others after partition, and so the others can no longer be reached through the father or manager as before: see Mullu's Hindu Law, Edn. 9, p. 337 and Mayne's Hindu Law, Edn. 10, page 438. In our opinion, the same rule applies when a creditor seeks to enforce a charge settled on the family property.

[9] It was argued that this is not so because, in the first place, the decree created no debt. There was no charge until the cause of action for each month's maintenance accrued. Until then there was only a possibility of a charge coming into existence. Therefore, there being no debt in respect of maintenance accruing after the partition of 1916, the rule does not apply.

[10] We are unable to agree. Once the maintenance is fixed and a charge declared, whether by decree or otherwise, a floating charge over the property is created which crystallises month by month as each arrear falls due. The family is as much bound to take note of this at partition as of any other debt, and the principles which enable a creditor to proceed against the family estate despite the partition in the case of crystallised charges apply with equal force in the case of a floating charge of this character.

[11] It was then argued that the charge must be apportioned. It was said that the plaintiff is not in possession of all the family property so the charge must be divided and distributed proportionately over the various items of property. The contention was based on the assumption that a charge decree does not come under S. 100, T. P. Act, and, therefore, S. 60 which contains the rule of indivisibility does not apply. (See I. L. R. (1941) Nag. 513[1] at p. 519). As it does not apply, the plaintiff has a right to ask that the charge be apportioned; and in any case the Court has power to do that when it would be just and equitable.

[12] We need not consider the question of law implicit in this contention because Judges have differed on this point. It is enough for us to say that even if all that the plaintiff's counsel contends be true we can see no justification for apportionment in this case. Here we have a decree charging a number of properties. Whether the charge be divisible or indivisible the ordinary rule is that the charge-holder can, in such a case, proceed to enforce his charge against any item of property he pleases, just as he can against any person who is liable to him for a debt jointly with another. It has been held in mortgage cases that a mortgagee who releases one of several mortgagors has the right to proceed against the rest for the whole debt, and the same rule applies if he releases part of the mortgaged estate. This is not only because a mortgage is indivisible, though that is an additional consideration in mortgage cases. The rule is more broadly based and is to be found in S. 43, Contract Act. Section 43 does not apply to this case any more than S. 60, Transfer of Property Act, but the principle is the same. Once it is conceded that there are charges which do not fall under S. 100 then it becomes necessary to determine the rules which govern them. In some cases, like decrees, there are special rules which apply, such as the doctrine of estoppel by record and the rules which govern parties and privies, but over and beyond that the general principles set out in the Transfer of Property Act and in the Contract Act also apply except in so far as the more special rules applicable to the special cases exclude them.

[13] Reliance was placed on I. L. R. (1944) Bom. 604[3] which holds that a widow's claim for maintenance cannot be claimed personally against any member of the family except her sons. All she is entitled to is to be maintained out of her husband's share in the property. Accordingly, it was argued that since the partition she can only claim a charge against such property as would have been assignable to her husband's share if he had been alive. Reference was also made to I. L. R. (1939) Mad. 877.[4] [14] In our opinion, neither of these cases is in point because in each it was possible to say with certainty what property would have gone to her husband's share had he been alive. The position in those cases can be stated thus.

X

Son D

The widow C obtained a charge decree against B for her maintenance. Subsequent to this B, and C's son D partitioned. It was held that she could only look for her maintenance, after the partition, to the property falling to her son's share. That is understandable when a fair share of the estate is assigned at the partition to the branch of the family to which the widow belongs, and to which alone she is entitled under the law to look for her maintenance. In that event the person who represents her husband's branch of the family takes his place and the other members are freed from further liability. But until that occurs, as the Madras Full Bench observe (their remarks are in respect of prepartition arrears for maintenance), the charge has to be on the whole family estate.

[15] In the present case the partition was not between the widow's branch of the family and the others, but between the others inter se. In such a case we do not think the widow's rights are affected. Whatever rights Kundanbai had against Shaligram stand in tact, not only against Shaligram but also against all who represent him. The position would be different if Shaligram's estate had been divided, not only between those who represent him but also between members belonging to the widow's husband's branch of the family, who on partition are under the sole obligation to maintain her. The Bombay case expressly agrees with the following proposition which the Madras Full Bench enunciated :

"But if before a partition is effected, she gets her right declared, defined and reduced to a certainty by a decree of Court her rights cannot be taken away by any subsequent partition effected among the members of the family."

In the circumstances, we see no reason to modify Kundanbai's rights under the decree even if we have the power to do so; nor does the conduct of those members of the family call for the exercise of any special consideration on their behalf.

[16] As regards the merits, the plaintiff studiously avoided furnishing particulars of the estate except when forced to do so and has done all she can to hide the true position from the Court. In her plaint she stated definitely:

"The plaintiff does not file any papers herewith. Hence list A is a blank.

In support of her claim the plaintiff relies on the papers mentioned in list B."

List B consisted of (1) a judgment in Civil Suit No. 26 of 1946, (2) the decree in that suit, (3) "jamabandis of various mouzas" (no details given), (4) "other documents" (no details given). Actually, she filed no documents of any kind—not even the judgment and decree referred to.

[17] Exception was taken to this vagueness, and on 18-1-1940 (two years after the suit had been launched), the Court said :

"The plaintiff has not given any description of the property and what was the previous income and what is the present income . . . . . The plaintiff should give all the particulars asked for and referred to in para. 21 of the written statement of defendant 1 within 20 days or the suit shall stand dismissed."

Among the particulars asked for by the defendant were the extent of the properties and the gross income therefrom in 1894 and the state of affairs at the date of suit. The plaintiff was also asked to furnish particulars about the arrears of rent, the income and expenditure of the home farm lands and the debts. In addition, she was asked to furnish particulars about the Bhopal property.

[18] The twenty days, expired, and on 15-2-1940 the Court noticed that some schedules had been filed. These were examined on 29-3-1940 and were found to be unverified and defective. They were also incomplete. The plaintiff was given a month to rectify these errors, and the Court added :

"If the full particulars are not supplied now and all schedules properly verified the plaintiff shall not get any further adjournment."

[19] On 24-6-1940 there was further trouble and the Court observed :

"The particulars in their present form therefore cannot be accepted ..... This is the last adjournment which is allowed. For 26-6-1940."

On 6-9-1940 the Court observed :

"The plaintiff has been given sufficient time and I do not think there is any justification for grant of further time."

[20] Next, certain interrogatories were served on the plaintiff's counsel on 26-9-1940 and the plaintiff was ordered to reply to them within 20 days on 30-9-1940. On 4-12-1940, this order had not been properly complied with and the plaintiff was given a week to furnish her affidavit.

[21] On 11-12-1940, the plaintiff brought a large number of account books to Court, and the order-sheet states :

"They are not necessary at this stage and the plaintiff is allowed to take them back."

[22] It will be remembered that the books are not mentioned in the list of reliance and are not entered either in list A or list B which were filed with the plaint. No copies of the relevant entries were produced, and there was no application for their admission as evidence. Not even a list of the books produced was furnished. In the circumstances, we are unable to say the order was wrong. There was nothing else the Judge could have done in these circumstances except to direct that they be left in Court, but there was no need for that. Nothing further was done regarding this for 2 years.

[23] On 17-12-1942, the plaintiff endeavoured to use some of these books during the examination-in-chief of P. W. 6. She was not allowed to do so, and the Court remarked :

"It was for plaintiff to file relevant entries of account-books with the plaint or at the most when schedules were filed. Mere production of original account-books on that date (i. e. on 11-12-1940) would not justify their admission at this stage. The application, therefore, is disallowed."

[24] With this order we find ourselves in agreement. A party who, with her predecessors, has behaved towards Kundanbai as the plaintiff has, is not entitled to special consideration. She had already been given far more latitute than she deserved. The trial of a simple issue had dragged on for three years already. It would have been impossible for the other side to cross-examine witnesses on the strength of books stretching over 46 years, if they were all in order, without copies of the entries and so forth. A long adjournment would have been necessary, and it would have been a wrong exercise of discretion to grant it. Incidentally, P. W. 6 was called with reference to the Bhopal property alone and so he would not in any case have carried the matter far.

[25] Reliance was placed on A. I. R. 1928 P. C. 80[5] at p. 81, where their Lordships say that a witness should be allowed to refresh his memory from account books even if they are produced late, that being a matter which will touch the weight of his evidence and not the admissibility of the books for the purpose. That of course we accept, as we must, but the position which arose in their Lordships' case did not arise here. The witness here did not want to refresh his memory. He appears to have done that before he came to Court and had no difficulty in giving the figure which, he said, would be found in the books. We are prepared to accept this fact and are prepared to assume that if he had refreshed his memory he would have given the same evidence. But that leads us nowhere because this late production of the books in the face of all we have shown throws so much suspicion on them, and on this man's evidence, that we are not prepared to believe him. This is particularly so as the plaintiff said in an answer to one of the interrogatories served on her that she could not say whether her books were regularly kept or not. We stress again that no prejudice has been caused to the plaintiff here. The witness did not want to refresh his memory and was able to give the figure without reference to the books; therefore the attempt was not to refresh the witness' memory but to prove the books. That distinguishes this case from the one before their Lordships.

[26] The oral evidence on the point is worthless and has not been accepted by the Judge who recorded the evidence. P. W. 1 is the plaintiff Savitribai. She has very little personal knowledge, and all she says can be discounted at once when we find her saying that "for the last 20 years I am not getting any profit from cultivation, on the other hand I have to pay cesses."

The schedules filed in the course of the case show that there are 11 villages in the plaintiff's possession alone in addition to another 4 in the Bhopal State. We find it impossible to believe that for a space of 20 years, some of them boom years, there has never been any profit from cultivation. In addition to this, the plaintiff says in an answer to an interrogatory that she has never received any siwai income from any of her villages from 1900 to 1929. This also we cannot accept.

[27] P. W. 6 (Imratlal) has already been referred to. He speaks about the Bhopal property. We do not believe him. P. W. 10 (Dwarkaprasad) is the plaintiff's brother and he prepared the schedules which the plaintiff filed, but he has no personal knowledge. He admits that Schs. A to D were prepared from lists furnished by the plaintiff and on the information given by her. The original lists have not been filed, and as we have shown the plaintiff knows next to nothing personally. Therefore, these schedules have no greater value than the plaintiff's testimony.

[28] As regards the other four schedules, the witness says they were prepared on the strength of information supplied by one Mishrilal and the plaintiff. Mishrilal has not been called, and the plaintiff we have already commented on.

[29] This is all the evidence except for D. W. 3 (Umraobeg) who says that there has been a diminution in income generally during the last 15 or 20 years. But that takes us back to 1922, and until we have the basis on which the original decree of 1894 was reduced to Rs. 200 a month in 1916 this does not carry us much further. Anyway, prices have risen again. It all comes down to this. Without furnishing any details, the plaintiff makes statements which we cannot believe and says that she has received no profits from cultivation for 20 years and no siwai income for 10; and P. W. 6 says that the Bhopal property is run at a loss of Rs. 250 to Rs. 200 a year. On these two bare statements we are asked to infer a change of circumstances justifying a reduction in a decree from Rs. 200 a month to Rs. 50 a month. We are unable to do so.

[30] An argument was addressed to us to the effect that Kundanbai's needs are less now that she has grown older, but that is not a circumstance we are prepared to act on here. In the first place, we are not satisfied that they are less. She was a widow in 1894 and also in 1916 and is still a widow. She was alone in those years, as she is now, and the figures of Rs. 250 and Rs. 200 were fixed with reference to those circumstances. Moreover, they were fixed when there were male members of the family alive on the other side of the family. Now, there are only two widows like the plaintiff herself. We do not consider this will justify a reduction in the sum decreed even if it is a relevant circumstance.

[31] Next, it is said that we must take into consideration that villages have been sold in execution of the decree and that therefore that has resulted in a loss of income. But this is not a relevant consideration. As regards this we are in respectful agreement with the learned Judges in 8 Mad. 94[6] at p. 96 and 24 Bom. 386.[7] The diminution is due to the plaintiff's default and that of her predecessor in not paying the plaintiff's charges.

[32] We agree with the findings of the lower Court and hold that no case has been made out for an alteration of the consent decree of 1916. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Judgment. — This appeal was heard along with First Appeal No. 40 of 1943,* in which we have written a separate judgment. The facts of the case will be found in the other judgment. In this case Kundanbai sues to enforce her charge decree of Rs. 200 a month against the plaint properties in the defendant's hands.

* Since reported in ('48) 35 A. I. R. 1948 Nag. 44.

[2] It was first contended that the sum fixed in the consent decree of 1916 should be further reduced because of an alteration in the circumstances of the family. We have already held in the other judgment, following I. L. R. (1941) Nag. 437[1] and I. L. R. (1941) Nag. 513[2] that in the case of a decree such reduction can only be made by a decree obtained in a separate suit filed for the purpose, unless the decree provides machinery for its own alteration; also that the reduction can only have effect from the date of the plaint in the suit so filed. The suit out of which this appeal arises is not such a suit. First Appeal No. 40 of 1943 is the suit instituted for that purpose, and that suit we have dismissed. Accordingly, nothing more need be said on this point.

[3] The point argued about the divisibility of the charge decree has also been dealt with in the other judgment. For the reasons given there, we see no reason to apportion the sum due over the various properties and we hold that the charge-holder is free to realise her money from any portion of the charged property and is not bound to proceed against the rest of it if she does not want to do so. The transferees are accordingly not necessary parties.

[4] The argument regarding the effect of the partition between Shrinarayan and Shivanarayan has also been decided in the other appeal. For the reasons given there, we hold that Kundanbai is entitled to disregard the partition and enforce her charge in the way she seeks to do in this case.

[5] The only question which arises here and which did not arise in the other cases relates to the plaintiff's claim for interest. It is relevant to note that interest was decreed in the previous suits which the plaintiff was forced to file. It is said that this operates as res judicata, but we need not proceed on that ground because we agree with 15 Luck. 537,[3] that the Interest Act of 1839 applies. As the learned Judges said there:

"The claim in the present case is for a certain sum payable at a certain time, that is monthly allowance of guzara impliedly payable at some time in every month for that month," and again,

"In our opinion a monthly maintenance or allowance made payable under a compromise in a suit comes within the scope of this provision."

It was argued that a decree is not an "instrument" within the meaning of the Act. We find, however, that the word "instrument" is used in various senses, in some it includes a decree, in others it does not. Thus, S. 17 (1) (b), Registration Act makes non testamentary "instruments" of the type set out there compulsorily registrable. Sub-section (2) exempts a number of documents, deeds and so forth from the scope of S. 17 (1) (b), among them certain decrees in sub-cl. (v). There would have been no need to exclude these decrees if the word "instrument" did not cover a decree. It is to be observed that certain compromise decrees are not exempted. Therefore, they are "instruments" for the purpose of the Registration Act. We see no reason why we should limit the use of the word in the Interest Act. Accordingly, we hold that the term is wide enough to cover a decree.

[6] That apart, the proviso extends the Act to all cases in which interest is "now payable by law." The Privy Council say at page 79 in I. L. R. (1938) 2 Cal. 72[4] that this applies to cases in which a Court of equity exercises jurisdiction to allow interest. We are of opinion that we are exercising equitable powers in maintenance cases where a charge has been created by a decree. We consider that a Court of equity would, and should, allow interest in a case of this kind where for over 50 years this unfortunate plaintiff — we are speaking of the original plaintiff Kundanbai—has not been paid a pie of her money without interminable litigation in which the same matter is fought and contested at every stage over and over again. In our opinion, interest was rightly allowed. But we think that 6 per cent. per annum is too high. We reduce it to 3 per cent. per annum and accordingly reduce the figure claimed to Rs. 1827-8-0. The decree of the lower Court will be modified accordingly.

[7] In addition, we allow interest on the decretal amount at the same rate from the date of suit to the date of payment.

[8] Except for this modification, the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs. We see no reason to allow the defendants any costs because of the comparatively small modification we have made in the lower Court's decree. The costs will be paid out of the estate and not personally.

C. P. Kalele — for Appellant.
N. B. Chandurkar — for Respondents.

Order. — Two questions arise for decision at this stage : (1) whether the appeal was filed within time, and (2) if not whether the appellant had made out sufficient cause for admission of the appeal under S. 5, Limitation Act.

[2] The decree against which the present appeal was filed was passed on 24th July 1945. The appeal was filed on 12th November 1945. i. e., on the 111th day. 11th November 1945 was Sunday and if the limitation expired on that date, the appeal filed on the next day, i. e., 12th November 1945 would have been within time. The office put up a note that the appeal was barred by limitation by two days and in computing the period of limitation it allowed 19 days as the time requisite for obtaining the copy and stated that the appeal was barred by two days.

[3] The counsel for the appellant filed an application on 29th November 1945 under S. 5, Limitation Act, stating reasons why the appeal was not filed earlier. The application was supported by an affidavit of the counsel. The reason assigned was that while reading the endorsement in column 8 of the table on the back of the certified copy of the judgment he read '28-9-1945' as '25-9-1945' and he made calculation accordingly. The figure '8' in '28' has been so written in the endorsement on the judgment that it could be mistaken for '25'. I accept the explanation of the counsel as true and hold that the mistake was a bona fide one and that sufficient cause had been made out under S. 5, Limitation Act, for admission of the appeal.

[4] The limitation for filing an appeal to this Court is 90 days from the date of the decree or order appealed from: (see Art. 156, Limitation Act). In computing the period, the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the decree appealed against has to be excluded: (see S. 12 (2), Limitation Act).

[5] The application for copy was made on 3rd September 1945. In column 7 '18 9-1945' is noted as the date on which an intimation was sent to the appellant to supply funds. In column 8, '28 9-1945' is noted as the date on which funds were supplied. The copy was delivered on 1st October 1945. The appeal was filed on 12th November 1945. The office has allowed 19 days' period from 3rd September 1945 to 18th September 1945 and from 29th September 1945 to 1st October 1945 as the time requisite for obtaining a copy. The learned counsel for the respondent supported the objection made by the office that the appeal was barred by limitation.

[6] The contention of the learned counsel for the appellant is that he was entitled to '28th September 1945' when the amount was paid in computing the period requisite for obtaining a copy, and if that is allowed the applicant is entitled to exclude 20 days as the time requisite for obtaining a copy. The appeal would be within limitation as in that case the limitation expired on Sunday the 11th November and the appeal filed on the next day was within limitation.

[7] In 49 Cal. 999[1] it was held that no period could be regarded as 'requisite' under S. 12 (2), Limitation Act, which need not have elapsed if the appellant had taken reasonable and proper steps to obtain a copy of the decree or order. If that test is applied the appellant is entitled to exclude 28th September 1945 as he took reasonable and proper steps in obtaining a copy of the decree because he paid the funds on that day.

[8] In 6 Rang. 302[2] it was held that the word 'requisite' was a strong word and it means something more than the word required ; it meant 'properly required,' and it throws upon the appellant necessity of showing that no part of the delay beyond the prescribed period is due to his default.

[9] In some cases the applicant has been allowed the entire period from the date on which demand is made for funds and on which the funds were paid and the intervening period. In 17 Lah. 429[3] at p 448 it was held that an applicant is entitled to exclude from the prescribed period of limitation the period between the date of presentation of the application and the date on or by which the full costs of preparing the required copy is deposited, provided he deposits with reasonable diligence the aforesaid amount as and when required by the Copying Department.

[10] In I. L. R. (1941) 1 Cal. 536[4] the applicant had applied for copies on 18th March and had duly furnished stamps and folios on 19th

March when 25th March was fixed for delivery of copies. On 20th March the Copying Department notified by the necessary entry in the prescribed register that further stamps and folios would be required. The appellant came to know of this on March 25th. March 26th to 29th were holidays. On 30th March the appellant supplied the additional stamps and folios and copy was delivered on 31st March. It was contended that the period between 20th to 31st March was not period requisite for copy and should not be excluded in computing limitation. It was held that the entire period from 18th March 1937 to 31st March 1937 was time requisite for obtaining copies and that period should be deducted. In that case, the applicant was held entitled to exclude the entire period i.e., the date on which he came to know of the deficiency, the date on which the amount was paid and the intervening period.

[11] The rules framed by various High Courts are different and decisions of one High Court on the question of period which an applicant is entitled to exclude as time requisite for obtaining a copy may not be very helpful in deciding a case in another Court where the rules are different. In this case, it has not been disputed that the applicant is entitled to the date on which a demand was made for funds from the appellant. The dispute in this appeal is whether the appellant is entitled to exclude under S. 12 (2), Limitation Act, the date on which he paid the funds. That the applicant was entitled to exclude that date has been so held in the cases cited above. The question whether the appellant is also entitled to the intervening period is not before me and I refrain from expressing my opinion on that point.

[12] In I. L. R. (1944) Nag. 725[5] Bose J., held that an applicant is not entitled to deduct under S. 12, Limitation Act, the day on which he pays the subsequent advance demanded though he is entitled to deduct the day on which he is informed of the insufficiency of the amount already deposited by him. This is a direct authority in support of the contention of the office and of the learned counsel for the respondent that the appellant was not entitled to exclude 28th September 1945 in calculating the time requisite for obtaining a copy.

[13] I respectfully dissent from the decision. Law does not take into consideration the fraction of a day and it is not permissible to exclude the day on which funds are supplied in computing the time requisite for obtaining a copy on the supposition that the funds may have been supplied late and it may not have been possible for the Copying Department to start the work of copying on that date.

[14] If there had been no decision to the contrary, I would have been bound to refer the case to the Honourable the Chief Justice for constitution of a Bench for reconsideration of that decision as I respectfully disagree with it. The decision in I. L. R. (1944) Nag. 725[5] was based on I. L. R. (1940) Nag. 312.[6] In that case copying had been stopped for want of funds on 28th January 1935. The appellant came to know that more funds were required on 2nd February 1935 and he supplied the necessary funds on 7th February 1935 and the copy was delivered to him on 9th February 1935. The period between 2nd February 1935 and 7th February 1935 was allowed at the time requisite for obtaining a copy and was not taken into consideration in calculating the period of 30 days within which an appeal had to be filed in the District Court. The ratio decidendi of the case was that the applicant was entitled to the date on which he paid the necessary funds. This was also the view taken by Niyogi J. in Civil Revn. No. 21 of 1946.[7]

[15] I prefer the view taken in I. L. R. (1940) Nag. 312[6] and in Civil Revn. No. 21 of 1946[7] and hold that the appellant was entitled to deduct under S. 12, Limitation Act, the day on which he paid the funds as part of the time requisite for obtaining a copy. The appellant was consequently entitled to deduct 28th September 1945—the day on which he paid the money—in computing the period of limitation. The appeal consequently was filed within limitation.

[16] In view of my finding that the appeal was within limitation, the question about admission of the appeal under S. 5, Limitation Act, does not arise. As I had accepted the affidavit of the counsel and held that there was sufficient cause for not filing the appeal earlier I would have admitted the appeal under S. 5, Limitation Act, if I had held that the appeal was otherwise barred by limitation.

Civil Revn. No. 236 of 1945, Decided on 8-10-1946, from order of Dist. Judge, Nimar, D/- 27-4-1945.

(a) Limitation Act (1908), Art. 166—Applicability.

Article 166 as amended by the Act of 1927 is quite general and governs every application by a party to set aside a sale, whether under S. 47 or O. 21, Rr. 72, 89, 90 or 91, Civil P. C: 7 A. I. R. 1920 Cal. 165, Rel. on. [Para 8]

Annotation : ('42-Com.) Lim. Act, Art. 166, N. 2, Pt. 1.

(b) Limitation Act (1908), Art. 166—Void sale.

Article 166 does not apply when the sale is void or a nullity. No application is required to set aside what is a nullity and there is no limitation for declaring that a sale which is already void is a nullity and does not affect the property which is put to sale: 11 A. I. R. 1924 Mad. 431 (F.B.) and 32 Cal. 296 (P.C.), Foll. [Para 9]

(c) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 151—Setting aside sale—Fraud practised on Court—Civil P.C., O. 21, R. 90.

The practice of fraud on the Court is a serious matter and it renders void everything which is founded on such fraud. It is not only within the powers but it is the duty of the Court to take notice of such fraud when detected or brought to its notice. The Court cannot permit a party guilty of a fraud on the Court to enjoy what it has secured thereby. [Para 12]

Where a decree-holder got the venue of a sale changed by practising fraud on the Court:

Held, that the sale was void and the Court had inherent power to set aside the sale even after confirmation. [Paras 12 and 13]

Annotation: ('44-Com.) Civil P. C., S. 151, N 6.

(d) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 151 — Setting aside sale.

The Court has inherent powers to set aside an auction sale when it was held contrary to the express orders or directions of the Court: 18 A. I. R. 1931 Lah. 344 and 20 A. I. R. 1933 Mad. 399, Rel. on. [Para 11]

R. S. Dabir — for Applicant.

K. B. Tare and P. K. Tare — for Non-Applicants.

Order. — This is a revision petition by the decree-holder auction-purchaser against the appellate order confirming the order of the executing Court setting aside the auction sale held on 1-9-1944 and confirmed in the applicant's favour on 7-10-1944.

[2] The few relevant facts are these. The decree obtained by the applicant against the non-applicants was transferred for execution to the Court of the Sub-Judge. Execution was sued upon and the judgment-debtors' property i. e., a 6 anna share of mouza 'Soundhal' area 409.37 acres, jama Rs. 43-2-0 was attached. The sale notices were served. On 19-4-1944 the decree-holder applied that the auction sale be held at Khandwa in court-house rather than at the spot which is far away from Khandwa. The executing Court on 19-4-1944 ordered notices of this application to issue for 6-5-1944 as it was thought inadvisable—particularly in view of instructions issued in that behalf—to deviate from the ordinary rule of holding the auction sale at the spot, at least without hearing the judgment-debtors. On 6-5-1944, it was found that the decree-holder failed to apply for the issue of notices as ordered by the Court and no explanation was offered at any stage for non-compliance. The executing Court therefore, in effect, rejected the decree-holder's prayer for holding the auction sale at Khandwa and ordered proclamation of sale to issue for holding the auction sale on the spot on 17-7-1944. The proclamation was accordingly prepared and was signed by the Judge. The process-server to whom it was entrusted for execution however fell ill and it was found on 4-7-1944 that the proclamation remained unexecuted with the process-server. The Judge therefore ordered on 4-7-1944 that proclamation and warrant of sale be issued on the same process for sale to be held on 1-9-1944.

[3] In the proclamation that was actually issued, the clerk changed the date of sale and in addition he also changed the place and time of sale. According to the corrected proclamation the sale was to be held on 1-9-1944 at the court house at Khandwa at 3 P. M. These corrections are signed by the clerk himself and it appears that this corrected proclamation was never placed before the Judge and it was issued on the strength of the Judge's signature on it when it was prepared for holding the sale on spot on 17-7-1944.

[4] It is alleged that the corrections as to place and time were made on the strength of the alleged order of the Court contained in the order-sheet dated 8-7-1944. This order-sheet is wholly written by the clerk himself and signed by the Judge. The decree-holder had applied for permission to bid and the order was that his bid should not be below Rs. 500.

[5] The sale was accordingly held on 1-9-1944 and the decree-holder was the highest bidder; his bid was for Rs. 525. This bid list is not signed by the Judge in acceptance of the highest bid. The judgment-debtors did not put in appearance and did not object to the sale within 30 days and the sale was confirmed on 7-10-1944.

[6] On 3-11-1944 the judgment-debtors put in an application purporting to be one under Ss. 47 and 151, Civil P. C., to set aside the sale. They accused the decree-holder of having committed a fraud in bringing into existence collusively and fraudulently the order sheet dated 8-7-1944 and securing the signature of the Judge thereon. The decree-holder thereby fraudulently secured a change in the place of holding the sale in spite of the Judge's prior order which, in effect, rejected that prayer. The auction sale, according to the judgment-debtor, was void and was liable to be set aside under the inherent powers of the Court. This application was hotly contested by the decree-holder auction-purchaser. The executing Court wrote a very elaborate order and set aside the auction sale and this order is confirmed in appeal. Both the Courts have treated the application as one under S. 47 read with S. 151, Civil P. C.

[7] In a very careful argument, Mr. Dabir, Advocate for the applicant, put forth mainly the following points: (i) That the application for setting aside the sale whatever may be the grounds and whether it was under O. 21, R. 90 or S. 47, Civil P. C., is governed for the purposes of limitation by Art. 166, Limitation Act. Article 181 had no application and the application of the judgment-debtors filed on 3-11-1944 was thus barred by time. (ii) That no application for setting aside sale lies after the sale is once confirmed. (iii) That the fraud alleged in the application is not established and even if it was established it would at best render the sale voidable and can be set aside only on a proper application under O. 21, R. 90, Civil P. C., filed within 30 days of sale. (iv) That the judgment-debtor's should have raised an objection to the place of sale before the sale was held. Under the proviso to O. 21, R. 90, this objection cannot be taken after the sale.

[8] Article 166, Limitation Act, as amended by the Act of 1927, is quite general and it governs every application by a party to set aside sale, whether the application falls under S. 47 or under O. 21, Rr. 72, 89, 90 and 91, Civil P. C.: vide 46 Cal. 975[1] at p. 977; 45 Bom. 174[2]; 51 Cal. 1014[3] at p. 1018; 2 Pat. 65[4] and I. L. R. (1942) Lah. 559.[5] The judgment-debtors could not therefore avail themselves of the remedy open to them under the Code of Civil Procedure to have the sale set aside. The remedy was barred by limitation. The sale was moreover confirmed on 7-10-1944 long before the judgment-debtors' application to set it aside.

[9] Article 166, Limitation Act does not however apply when the sale is void or a nullity. No application is required to set aside what is a nullity; vide 47 Mad. 288.[6] It does not also apply to the exercise of the Court's inherent powers under S. 151, Civil P. C. Nor is the Court deprived of its powers to exercise inherent powers merely because the sale is confirmed in ignorance of the ground rendering it void: 17 Cal. 769;[7] 45 ALL. 316.[8] As held by their Lordships of the Privy Council in 32 Cal. 296[9] there is no limitation for declaring that a sale which is already void is a nullity and does not affect the property which is put to sale.

[10] The two Courts have come to a conclusion that the decree-holder got the venue of sale changed by practising fraud on Court and by abusing the process of the Court. Fortunately the Judge who passed the original order was himself the subject of the alleged fraud and he has very frankly and honestly put down what actually happened. What he stated is fully corroborated by the record and inferences therefrom and this surely constitutes a legal evidence in proof of the alleged fraud. The learned Judge on 19-4-1944 refused to change the venue of sale merely at the request of the decree-holder. In fact he regarded the matter so important as not to pass any order in that respect without hearing the other side and ordered notices to issue. The decree-holder did not carry out, for reasons best known to him, this order of the Court. On 6-5-1944 the Judge decided to hold the sale on the spot and the proclamation was ordered to be issued accordingly. It is thus clear that the Judge was not ready to have the sale held at the Court house far away from the spot, at least without hearing the other side and the decree-holder was fully aware of this fact. In these circumstances, we find that without any fresh application to the Court the clerk writes an order-sheet dated 8-7-1944 changing the venue of sale, contrary to the previous order of the Court, and a proclamation already signed by the Judge was issued after making corrections not initialled by the Judge and presumably without his knowledge. The order-sheet dated 8-7-1944 no doubt bears the signature of the Judge but he has explained that his signature was obtained on the representation that the several papers put up for signature of which this order-sheet was one contained nothing but formal orders in uncontested cases. I fully believe the explanation of the learned Judge, and I agree with the Courts below that the order regarding the change of venue of auction sale was secured by the decree-holder by practising fraud on the Court. There is thus no judicial order for holding the auction in Court premises on 1-9-1944 and the previous order of the Court to hold it on the spot was the operative order. It follows that the sale held in Court premises on 1-9-1944 was against the express orders of the Court and this fact was brought to the notice of the Court by the judgment-debtors' application dated 3-9-1944.

[11] 'Fraud' said De Grey C. J. vitiates the most solemn proceedings of Courts of justice.' Lord Coke says it avoids all judicial acts ecclesiastical and temporal. In applying this rule, it matters not whether the judgment impugned has been pronounced by an inferior or by the highest Court of judicature in the realm, but in all cases alike it is competent for every Court, whether superior or inferior, to treat as a nullity any judgment which can be clearly shown to have been obtained by manifest fraud: vide Kerr on Fraud and Mistake, Edn. 6, p. 425. In (1844-58) 2 H. L. C. 281[10] it is observed that if a case of fraud is established, the Court will set aside all transactions founded upon it, by whatever machinery they may have been effected, and notwithstanding any contrivance by which it may have been attempted to protect them. Even apart from fraud the Court has inherent powers to set aside an auction sale under its inherent powers when it was held contrary to the express orders or directions of the Court: vide A. I. R. 1931 Lah. 344[11] and A. I. R. 1933 Mad. 399.[12]

[12] The practice of fraud on a Court is a serious matter and it must render void everything which is founded on such fraud. It is not only within the powers of the Court but in fact it is the duty of the Court to take notice of such fraud whenever detected or whenever it is brought to its notice. The Court cannot permit a party guilty of fraud on a Court to enjoy what it secured thereby. The Court could have acted suo motu and declared the sale a nullity under its inherent powers and this is what the Courts below have done. The mere fact that the applicants (judgment-debtors) brought the fraud to the notice of the Court does not in the least change the legal position.

[13] The learned Advocate contended correctly that the Court cannot exercise its inherent powers in matters governed by a specific provision in the Code. He relied on several cases in support of this proposition. I need not refer to them as the proposition, is in general, beyond dispute. These cases furnish however no authority for the proposition that the Court is incompetent to set aside something which has been brought into existence contrary to its express orders and directions or as a result of fraud practised on it. The present case proves the necessity of the existence and the exercise of the inherent powers of Courts.

[14] None of the points raised by the learned Advocate affect the exercise of the inherent powers of the Court in declaring that the sale held on 1-9-1944 at Khandwa was a nullity and these powers are, in my opinion, properly exercised in the present case. At any event, I do not feel justified in exercising in favour of the applicant (decree holder) the revisional powers which are only enabling and which are to be exercised in furtherance of justice. The result of the orders of the Courts below is to leave the parties where they were before 8-7-1944 and the decree-holder (auction-purchaser) should not feel aggrieved thereby. The applicant who has only a money decree in his favour is yet free to realize it. The orders of the Court below are in the circumstances of the present case quite just and proper and I do not interfere with them. The revision is therefore dismissed with costs. Counsel's fee Rs. 30.

Civil P. C. (1908), O. 9, R. 9 — Minor plaintiff if entitled to indulgence—Absence of agent.

There is no distinction between a minor plaintiff and any other plaintiff in so far as R. 9 is concerned: 22 A. I. R. 1935 Mad. 565, Approved. [Para 2]

Though no difference is made in the Code in the case of a minor still in practical operation it is to be remembered that a minor is unable to protect his interests except through agents, and unless it can be shown that the agent was either grossly negligent or that there was a manoeuvring on his part to gain some advantage in the case, the case of the minor must be looked at somewhat indulgently. [Para 3]

The suit of the minor plaintiff was called at 12-48 p. m. and as nobody appeared for the plaintiff the suit was dismissed. The plaintiff's agent came by train at 11-22 a. m. for attending the Court but lingered on somewhere till 12-48 when the suit was called, but attended the Court thereafter;

Held that the negligence on the part of the agent was not so gross as to disentitle the minor plaintiff from having his case restored to file. The suit should be restored subject to payment of costs to the defendant. [Para 3]

G. S. Padhye—for Applicant.

D. T. Mangalmoorti—for Non-Applicant.

Order. — This is an application for revision of the order dated 25-4-1945 passed by Mr. S. N. Raina, First Subordinate Judge, Second Class, Nagpur, in Misc. Judicial Case No. 86 of 1944. The applicant-plaintiff who is a minor had sued through next friend, mother, the present non-applicant, on a bond. The order-sheet dated

28-3-1944 shows that the defendant had filed a written statement alleging that the amount was not due. The plaintiff wanted time for amendment of his plaint. Time was granted, and the case was fixed for 1-5-1944. On that date the suit was called three times at 12-48 P. M. The defendant was present but nobody appeared for the minor plaintiff. The suit was, therefore, dismissed. The plaintiff applied for restoration of the suit and an affidavit was sworn on the same day though it was filed on 3-5-1944. In the application for restoration of the suit as well as the affidavit, the agent of the plaintiff alleged that he was delayed in reaching the Court because the train from Kamptee arrived late. Parties led evidence in the case. Plaintiff examined two witnesses. Ghasilal, the agent of the plaintiff, entered the box and said

"the train reached the Nagpur station at 12-30 p. m. or even after that. I rushed to the Court and found that the suit was dismissed."

The other witness, Mahadeo, said "the train had come to Nagpur at about 12 that day." On behalf of the non-applicant, S. K. Ghosh, Number Taker of the Railway, was examined and he brought the registers from the Nagpur Railway Station. In them the time of the arrival of the train was shown as 11-22 A. M. It is obvious that if the agent rushed to the Court, as he says he did, he could have reached before 12-48 P. M. when the suit was dismissed. On this evidence the learned Judge of the trial Court declined to restore the suit to the file. Hence this revision.

[2] In the revision petition it is urged that the plaintiff is a minor and some concession should be shown to him. There is no distinction between a minor plaintiff and any other plaintiff in so far as O. 9, Civil P. C. is concerned. It is true that some High Courts treat the case of an infant more liberally, the earlier Madras view being that the minority of a plaintiff is a sufficient cause if the next friend or guardian is found to be negligent. That view has now been modified by the Madras High Court itself in 58 Mad. 929.[1] The earlier view of the Madras High Court has not been accepted in the Oudh Chief Court and in certain other High Courts. I have been unable to find anything which would differentiate the case of a minor plaintiff from that of any other plaintiff.

[3] Technically speaking, therefore, the learned Judge of the lower Court was right. The question is whether the discretion which he exercised against the minor plaintiff was a judicial discretion. He has not given a finding that there was any indirect purpose in the failure of the agent to be present at the time the case was called. The fact remains that the agent did travel that day from Kamptee to Nagpur and he was actually in Court the same day and he prepared an affidavit and swore it before a Judge. He may be wrong in the timings he has given, and he has probably not made a clean breast of the matter and shown where he lingered from 11-22 A. M. (the time of the arrival of the train) to 12-48 P. M. But the negligence is not so gross as to disentitle the plainitiff who is a minor from having his case restored to the file. Though no difference is made in the Code in the case of a minor still in practical operation it is to be remembered that a minor is unable to protect his interests except through agents, and unless it can be shown that the agent was either grossly negligent or that there was a manœuvring on his part to gain some advantage in the case, the case of the minor must be looked at somewhat indulgently. The law allows the Court to visit laches of this kind with other punishments. In my opinion the Court should have considered whether this was not a proper case in which to visit the plaintiff with some other punishment than the dismissal of his whole claim. I think the failure to consider this in its appropriate setting is a failure to exercise the discretion on judicial lines. I, therefore, allow the application for revision and order that the suit will be restored to the file subject to a payment of Rs. 75 as costs to the defendant. The revision is allowed, the applicant will bear his own costs and will pay the costs of the other side. Pleader's fee Rs. 25.

First Appeal No. 4 of 1941, Decided on 3-1-1947 against decree of 2nd Addl. Dist., Judge, Yeotmal, D/- 30-1-1940.

(a) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 97—Appeal against preliminary decree — No appeal against final decree — Effect.

There is no provision in the Code making an appeal filed against the preliminary decree infructuous if an appeal against the final decree is not filed. The function of a final decree is merely to restate and apply with precision what the preliminary decree has ordained and the decree being in the same suit the Court in appeal from the preliminary decree, as it has power to reverse or vary the preliminary decree, has also power to affect the final decree. A passing of a final decree subsequent to the institution of the appeal will not affect the maintainability of the appeal against the preliminary decree : Case law referred. [Paras 8, 9]

(b) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 34, R. 1—Appeal against decree for foreclosure — All mortgagors not impleaded as parties — Effect.

Order 34, R. 1 is a rule of procedure and is subject, among other things, to O. 1, R. 9. Hence, where a mortgagee has obtained a preliminary decree for foreclosure and in appeal against that decree by one of the mortgagors the other mortgagors are not joined as parties the appeal does not fail for non-joinder of other mortgagors if it is possible to work out the right of the appellant mortgagor in the appeal : Case law referred. [Para 13]

The fact that in the absence of the other mortgagors it may not be permissible for the appellant to ask for change of the decree from one for foreclosure to one for sale has nothing to do with the competency of the appeal. [Para 14]

(c) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 34, Rr. 2 and 3—Appeal against preliminary decree — During its pendency final decree passed—Appeal dismissed—Necessity of fresh preliminary decree.

Where during the pendency of an appeal against a preliminary decree in foreclosure suit, a final decree is passed and subsequently the appeal against the preliminary decree is dismissed, it is not necessary that a fresh preliminary decree, after the dismissal of the appeal, should invariably be drawn up, fixing a fresh date for payment after making calculation of the amount payable under the decree : 20 A. I. R. 1933 Nag. 236, Dissent.; 13 A. I. R. 1926 P. C. 93, Explained. [Paras 17, 21 and 23]

(d) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 34, R. 2 (2)—Extension of time.

The Court has no jurisdiction to extend time for payment, in case of a preliminary decree for foreclosure, unless good cause is shown : 15 A. I. R. 1928 P. C. 137, Rel. on. [Para 19]

V. V. Kelkar and P. R. Padhye—for Appellant.

B. R. Mandlekar — for Respondent 1.

Judgment. — This appeal arises out of a mortgage suit. Paikaji and his sons executed a mortgage on 24-5-1929 in favour of respondent 1, Eknathrao for Rs. 20,000. Four of his sons, Ghularam and others, defendants 1 to 4, were majors and executed the document as such. The other three sons including the appellant, Madhorao defendant 5, were minors and the mortgage was executed on their behalf by their father Paikaji as their guardian.

[2] The consideration of Rs. 20,000 was stated to be for payment of antecedent debts to the creditors of the mortgagors to the extent of Rs. 16,000, Rs. 200 for the expenses of stamp and registration of the mortgage and Rs. 2800 for expenses of cultivation and for advance to agricultural servants. Interest was agreed to be paid at the rate of 0-14-0 per cent. per mensem and the entire amount together with interests was payable on 24-5-1934. In default of payment of the amount due with interest on the due date, the mortgage amount was payable at the rate of

1 per cent. per mensem till realisation. The property mortgaged was 0-16-0 of Chaparda Ijara, tahsil and district Yeotmal. One of the terms of the mortgage was that the mortgagee had the option to sue either for foreclosure or for sale in default of the payment of the money due on the mortgage.

[3] The mortgagors paid Rs. 2000 to the mortgagee on 21-11-1929 and thereafter nothing was paid towards the mortgage. After the due date for payment had expired on 24-5-1934, respondent 1, the mortgagee, filed Civil Suit No. 8A of 1938 on 28-11-1938 in the Court of the Additional District Judge, Yeotmal, to enforce the mortgage dated 21-5-1929. Paikaji had died and his sons were impleaded as defendants 1 to 7 and his grandsons were impleaded as defendants 8 to 13. The grandsons were born subsequent to the execution of the mortgage. The plaintiff exercised the option which he had under the mortgage and claimed a decree for foreclosure in default of the payment of the amount due on the mortgage.

[4] Separate written statements were filed on behalf of the different defendants. The trial Court passed a preliminary decree for foreclosure on 30-1-1940. The date fixed for payment was 30-7-1940 and the amount payable inclusive of interest and costs was Rs. 31,524-8-8.

[5] Madhorao, defendant 5, alone filed First Appeal No. 4 of 1941 on 24-6-1940 against the preliminary decree and impleaded the mortgagee and Gunwant and Mukunda, two of the brothers of the appellant, who were co-mortgagors with him. The other defendants did not file an appeal against the preliminary decree for foreclosure, nor have they been made parties in this appeal.

[6] The decree holder made an application on 11-9-1940 for a final decree for foreclosure. The appellant made an application in this Court on 7-11-1940 for stay of proceedings in the trial Court for making the decree final, but before this application could be disposed of, the trial Court passed a final decree for foreclosure on 23-11-1940. This Court rejected the application for stay on 3-1-1941.

[7] The learned counsel for the mortgagee (respondent 1) raised a preliminary objection as regards the competency of the appeal. The first ground urged by him was that as no appeal had been filed by the mortgagors against the final decree for foreclosure, the appeal against the preliminary decree for foreclosure had become infructuous. The learned counsel did not cite any authorities in support of his contention. Presumably, his contention was based on Calcutta cases which had been overruled in 57 Cal. 1013[1] and had not been followed in 27 N. L. R 197.[2]

[8] Under S. 97, Civil P. C. where any party aggrieved by a preliminary decree does not appeal from such decree, he is precluded from disputing its correctness in any appeal which may be preferred from the final decree. There is no provision in the Code making an appeal filed against the preliminary decree infructuous if an appeal against the final decree is not filed. The function of a final decree is merely to restate and apply with precision what the preliminary decree has ordained and the decree being in the same suit the Court in appeal from the preliminary decree, as it has power to reverse or vary the preliminary decree, has also power to affect the final decree.

[9] All the High Courts in India are agreed that a passing of a final decree subsequent to the institution of the appeal will not affect the maintainability of the appeal against the preliminary decree : see 36 ALL. 532,[3] A. I. R. 1938 Bom 222;[4] 57 Cal. 1013;[1] 17 Lah. 53,[5] 37 Mad. 29;[6] 37 Mad. 455[7] ; 27 N. L. R 197[2] and A. I. R. 1916 Pat. 370.[8] The first ground, therefore, fails.

[10] The second ground urged was that as all the mortgagors have not been impleaded as parties in this appeal, the appeal is not maintainable. The learned counsel relied on I. L. R. 1938 Nag. 370[9] at p. 372. That was a case where the respondent-mortgagees had obtained a preliminary decree for foreclosure and one of them died during the pendency of the appeal filed by the mortgagors. No legal representative of the deceased mortgagee was brought on the record. The question for decision was whether the appeal abated in its entirety. The decision was based on S. 45, Contract Act and on the principle that as the mortgage was one and indivisible and as the legal representative of the mortgagee had not been brought on record, the appeal abated as a whole. This case has no application.

[11] Under S. 43, Contract Act, when two or more persons make a joint promise, the promisee may, in the absence of express agreement to the contrary, compel any one or more of such joint promisors to perform the whole of the promise. This is not a case where a promise is made by two or more persons.

[12] Under S. 45 of the Act when a person has made a promise to two or more persons jointly, then unless a contrary intention appears from the contract, the right to claim performance rests, as between him and them, with them during their joint lives, and, after the death of any of them, with the representative of such deceased person jointly with the survivor or survivors, and after the death of the last survivor, with the representatives of all jointly. The mortgagee filed a suit against all the mortgagors and obtained a preliminary decree for foreclosure and subsequently a final decree for foreclosure. The defendants other than the appellant did not file any appeal against either of the decrees and are bound by it. The appellant has a right of redemption and if he succeeds in this appeal, he will be entitled to redeem the property on payment of the amount which may be found binding on him.

[13] Order 34, R. 1, Civil P. C., is in these terms :

"Subject to the provisions of this Code, all persons having an interest either in the mortgage-security or in the right of redemption shall be joined as parties to any suit relating to the mortgage."

The explanation has not been reproduced as not necessary for the purpose of the disposal of the appeal. This rule is a rule of procedure and is subject, among other things, to R. 9 of O. 1 of the Code which enacts that no suit shall be defeated by reason of the non-joinder of parties, and the Court may in every suit deal with the matter in controversy so far as regards the rights and interests of the parties actually before it. That O. 34, R. 1 is subject to O. 1, R. 9 of the Code has been well-established by judicial authorities : see 52 ALL. 134,[10] 10 Luck. 70,[11] 15 Luck. 399,[12] 60 Cal. 87,[13] 10 Pat. 341,[14] A. I. R. 1937 Pat. 414[15] and 18 Pat. 141.[16] It is possible to work out the right of the appellant in this appeal even though some of the mortgagors are not parties to this appeal. The appeal, therefore, does not fail for non-joinder of the other mortgagors.

[14] The last point urged was that in the absence of the other mortgagors, it was not permissible for the appellant to ask for change of the decree from one for foreclosure to one for sale. This point is based on a misapprehension. The competency of appeal is one thing and the question whether the appellant is disentitled to any relief by reason of absence of necessary parties is a different matter. The appeal is competent, though the point urged may be a valid ground for disallowing the appellant relief claimed, even though he may otherwise be entitled to it, as he has not made the other persons affected by the decree parties to this appeal. The third ground has also no substance. The preliminary objection as regards the maintainability of the appeal is overruled.

[15] The last point urged was that even if the appeal failed on merits, a fresh preliminary decree for foreclosure be passed. The learned counsel argued that as a matter of law he is entitled to a fresh decree for foreclosure notwithstanding the dismissal of the appeal. The learned counsel relied on three Privy Council cases, 29 N. L. R. 130[17] and A. I. R. 1934 Mad. 65[18] in support of his contention.

[16] The first Privy Council case relied on was 53 I. A. 197 : 6 Pat. 24.[19] In that case the decree-holder had applied for a final decree for sale. The application was made more than three years after the expiry of the date fixed for payment in the preliminary decree for sale but within three years from the date of the decree of the appellate Court dismissing the appeal filed by the decree-holder against the preliminary decree. Article 181, Limitation Act governed the case. Under that article an application has to be made within three years from the date when the right to apply accrues. The point for decision was whether the time ran from the expiry of the time fixed by the original preliminary decree or from the date when on appeal against that decree the appeal was dismissed. Their Lordships of the Judicial Committee approved of the decision in 39 ALL. 641,[20] affirmed the decree of the Patna High Court reported in 1 Pat. 444[21] and held that an application for a final decree under O. 34, R. 5 (2), Civil P. C., has to be made within three years from the date of the decree of the appellate Court and not from the expiry of the time for payment fixed by the preliminary decree and that the application of the decree-holder for a final decree was within limitation. This view of the law was re-affirmed by the Privy Council in the subsequent case 54 I. A. 52 : 8 Lah. 253.[22]

[17] The question whether the mere filing of an appeal against the preliminary decree without an order for stay from the appellate Court ousts the jurisdiction of the trial Court to pass a final decree was not raised and decided in either of these two cases. Their Lordships of the Judicial Committee did not lay down the proposition that even where a final decree had been passed by the trial Court during the pendency of an appeal against a preliminary decree, a fresh preliminary decree after the dismissal of the appeal should invariably be drawn up, fixing a fresh date for payment after making calculation of the amount payable under the decree.

[18] In 18 Lah. 245[23] a fresh decree was drawn up as the appeal had been allowed. As stated by Rankin C. J., in 57 Cal. 1013[1] at page 1039, when a preliminary decree is set aside, the final decree is superseded, whether the appeal was brought before or after the passing of the final decree and that, an appellate Court, when setting aside or varying a preliminary decree, can, and indeed should give directions for the setting aside or varying of the final decree, if the existence of the final decree is brought to its notice.

[19] Under O. 41, R. 5, Civil P. C., an appeal does not operate as a stay of proceedings under a decree or order appealed from except so far as the appellate Court may order. In the present case, no order for stay had been granted by the appellate Court. Under O. 34, R. 2 (2) in the case of a preliminary decree for foreclosure and under R. 4 (2) in the case of a preliminary decree for sale, the Court may on sufficient cause extend time for payment. The Court, however, has no jurisdiction to extend time for payment unless good cause is shown : see 24 N. L. R. 182.[24] Where a payment is not made in accordance with the preliminary decree and time for payment has not been extended, the Court shall, on an application made by the decree-holder, pass a final decree for foreclosure under O. 34, R. 3 of the Code, or a final decree for sale under O. 34, R. 5, as the case may be. The trial Court has jurisdiction to make a final decree notwithstanding that an appeal against a preliminary decree is pending in a higher Court: see 51 ALL. 640,[25] 53 ALL. 283,[26] I. L. R. (1939) 1 Cal. 477,[27] 10 Lah. 132,[28] A. I. R. 1937 Mad. 421,[29] I. L. R. 1939 Mad. 828[30] at p. 832, 6 Pat. 780[31] and 13 Pat. 379.[32]

[20] Where an appeal is filed against a preliminary decree and the appeal is subsequently dismissed, the question of limitation becomes material in two cases: (1) when the decree-holder applies for a final decree and (2) when he applies for execution of the final decree. As regards the first case, it is governed by Art. 181, Limitation Act, and a decree-holder has to apply within three years from the date when the right to apply arises. There was a divergence of judicial opinion as regards the starting point of limitation for an application for a final decree in a mortgage suit. It is now settled law after the decisions of their Lordships of the Privy Council in 6 Pat. 24[19] and 8 Lah. 253[22] that the decree-holder has a right to apply for a final decree after the appeal is decided. In cases where he has already obtained a final decree for foreclosure, the question of limitation will not arise. In the present case the mortgagee has already obtained a final decree for foreclosure and it is not necessary for him to apply for a final decree. In the case of an application for execution of a decree, Art. 182 is clear and the several clauses in col. 3 of the article give separate starting point for limitation and if the application for execution is made within any of these dates mentioned therein, the application for execution will be within limitation. Where an appeal has been filed against the preliminary decree or final decree in a mortgage suit, the starting point for limitation is the date of the decree or order of the appellate Court: see cl. 2, col. 3 of Art. 182.

[21] In 29 N. L. R. 130,[17] Macnair J. C. laid down that notwithstanding the dismissal of an appeal from a preliminary mortgage decree, it is necessary for the appellate Court to pass a fresh decree fixing a fresh date for payment and making a fresh calculation of the amount which will be due on that date. The decision purports to be based on 6 Pat. 24.[19] We respectfully disagree with the decision of Macnair J. C. as, in our opinion, their Lordships of the Judicial Committee did not lay down any such proposition in 6 Pat. 24.[19]

[22] The decision in A. I. R. 1934 Mad. 65[18] is inconsistent with the later cases in A. I. R. 1937 Mad. 421[29] and I. L. R. (1939) Mad. 828,[30] and cannot be supported on principle. In A. I. R. 1934 Mad. 65[18] it was held that in cases where there has been a final decree in pursuance of the preliminary decree of the lower Court pending the appeal, that final decree is valid and binding to the extent but only to the extent to which it is not altered by the appellate decree, and a decree of the appellate Court confirming after judicial consideration the preliminary decree of a lower Court is for this purpose one altering it. We accept the first part of the proposition as correct, but we respectfully dissent from the second part.

[23] As a final decree for foreclosure has already been passed in this case, we do not consider it necessary to pass a fresh preliminary decree for foreclosure.

[24] The appeal fails and is dismissed. Ordinarily costs shall follow the event. As frivolous objection regarding the maintainability of the appeal was raised on behalf of respondent 1, we disallow respondent 1 his costs of the appeal. Parties to bear the costs in this Court as incurred.

Mt. Hasinabai w/o Fakarduddin and another — Defendants — Appellants v. Shrikisandas Tikamdas—Plaintiff—Respondent.

Second Appeal No. 93 of 1940, Decided on 8-8-1946, from appellate decree of Addl. Dist. Judge, Nimar, D/- 17-11-1939.

(a) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 22, Rr. 3 and 4—Suit by trustee — Legal representative of trustee, who is—Civil P. C., (1908), S. 2 (11) — Trusts Act (1882), Ss. 73 and 75.

There is no need to read the definition of "legal representative" from Civil Procedure Code into the Trusts Act. The words "legal representative of the trustee" in S. 73, Trusts Act, mean his legal representative in his personal capacity, and not qua trustee. On the other hand, for the purposes of a suit the words "legal representative" mean the successor in office on whom the trust property devolves. In S. 2 (11), Civil P. C., the legal representative is the successor to the trusteeship and the trust property under S. 75, Trusts Act. In S. 73 the person who makes the appointment is the legal representative of the trustee in his individual and personal capacity. Therefore, a person who is nominated as a trustee by the legal representatives of the sole surviving trustee is a legal representative of such trustee for the purposes of O. 22 and can be substituted as a respondent on the death of such trustee.

(b) Negotiable Instruments Act (1881), S. 7—Promissory note—Trustee named as payee—Trust for community—Right of suit.

A sale deed which created a trust in favour of a certain community was executed in favour of three persons as wahiwatdars and karindas of that community. Two of the wahiwatdars acting for and on behalf of the community were payees under a promissory note the consideration for which came out of the trust. In a suit upon the promissory note by the sole living wahiwatdar :

Held that the plaintiff was a trustee of the trust and not an agent of the community; that a trustee can be a payee and since the plaintiff was named in the promissory note he was a payee within the meaning of S. 7 and there was no uncertainty in the matter and that, therefore, the plaintiff had a right of suit. [Para 10]

(c) Interpretation of statutes—Construction making statute logical is to be preferred. [Para 5]

(d) Negotiable Instruments Act (1881), S. 78 — Promissory note—Payment to third person—Validity of discharge.

A payment to any person other than the person mentioned in S. 78 would not give a valid discharge to the promisor unless the payee or the holder (as the case may be) accepts the payment as valid and to himself. Where the payee serves a notice on the promisor before the payment to the third person and shortly afterwards files a suit on the promissory note it cannot be said that the payee has accepted the payment and consequently there is no valid discharge in respect of that payment. Judgment.—This is a second appeal from the judgment and decree passed by Mr. J. N. Haksar, Additional District Judge, Nimar on 17-11-1939 in Civil Appeal No. 10B of 1939, reversing the decision of the trial Court. The suit was based upon a promissory note, dated 11-5-1932 (Ex. P-1) and the plaintiff brought the suit as the sole surviving trustee of a trust. In the plaint the plaintiff is described as "trustee, by virtue of a sale-deed dated 6th June 1921, executed by Mt Radhabai, wife of Kishan Das, and others, Panch and Wahiwatdar of Gujrathi Mod Community, Burhanpur."

[2] The defendants denied the right of the plaintiff to bring the suit and the trial Court dismissed the suit. The first appellate Court reversed the decree of the trial Court. Hence the defendants filed this appeal.

[3] The only question upon merits is whether the plaintiff has a right of suit as the defendants do not deny execution or consideration. Before this part of the case is taken up, there is one other point in connection with the death of the plaintiff and the substitution of Seth Shrikishandas, son of Tikamdas of Burhanpur as the respondent which needs decision. It is argued that Seth Shrikishandas who is nominated by the legal representatives of the late Seth Thakurdas (plaintiff) as a trustee is not the legal representative of Seth Thakurdas for the purposes of O. 22, Civil P. C.

[4] Section 73, Trusts Act (2 [II] of 1882) provides for the appointment of a trustee, when the last surviving trustee either dies, or is unfit or refuses to act. In such circumstances (inter alia) the legal representatives of the last surviving and continuing trustee can nominate the successor. Mr. Fida Hussain refers to S. 2 (11), Civil P. C., which reads :

" 'Legal representative' means a person who in law represents the estate of a deceased person, and includes any person who intermeddles with the estate of the deceased and where a party sues or is sued in a representative character the person on whom the estate devolves on the death of the party so suing or sued" and argues that because a trustee sues in a representative capacity we have first to find out the person on whom the trust property has devolved and it is that person who is the legal representative and who alone can make the nomination of the successor under S. 73, Trusts Act. He says that the law is defective because it is obvious that the devolution of the trust property cannot take place till a successor is appointed.

[5] There is no need to read the definition from the Civil Procedure Code into the Trusts Act. The trust property has devolved upon the present respondent (Seth Shrikishandas) under S. 75, Trusts Act as he has been legally appointed by the legal representatives of the sole surviving and continuing trustee. The words "legal representative of the trustee" in S. 73, Trusts Act, mean his legal representative in his personal capacity, and not qua trustee. On the other hand for the purposes of a suit the words 'legal representative' mean the successor in office on whom the trust property devolves. Sir Dinshaw Mulla's comment under S. 2 (11), Civil P. C., at p. 12 of his Edn. 11 is quite clear :

"Thus on the death of a trustee or of a shebait of a mutt, his successor in office and not his executor or heir is the legal representative, and the suit would be continued by or against the successor under O. XXII, R. 3 or 4."

In S. 2 (11), Civil P. C. the legal representative is the successor to the trusteeship and the trust property under S. 75, Trusts Act. In S. 73 the person who makes the appointment is the legal representative of the trustee in his individual and personal capacity. It is a well known rule of interpretation of statutes that if one construction leads to absurdity and another makes the statute logical, the latter construction is to be preferred, for every effort should be made to make sense and not nonsense of legislation. In our opinion, therefore, the meaning of the two provisions is quite clear and we hold that Seth Shrikisandas has been properly brought on record.

[6] The next point is whether the plaintiff Thakurdas had a right of suit on the promissory note. The defendants' argument is that the payee in the pronote is 'the Sakal Panchas Gujrati Mod' and as there cannot be a 'wahiwatdar' (agent) of the Sakal Panchas Gujrati Mod, the present plaintiff is neither a payee nor a holder of the promissory note. He contends that inasmuch as the pronote is in the name of a community with a fluctuating membership, a suit could only be brought if the plaintiff had been authorised by the whole community or under the provisions of O. 1, R. 8, Civil P C.

[7] This matter was even previously the subject of some controversy and the High Court by its order in Misc. Appeal No. 70 of 1935[1] had upheld the order of the District Judge who had remanded the case for a rehearing after the trial Court had dismissed the suit. In upholding the order of the District Judge Stone C. J., and Bose J. held :

"The learned District Judge came to the conclusion, we think rightly, that a community cannot have an agent and that the truth was that this community in respect of this transaction was represented by Seth Thakurdas as trustee. He also expressed the view that Ex. P-1 was a promissory note the payee in which was the community. As to this latter question, we leave the matter open, the matter not having been argued before us, though we observe that prima facie it would seem obvious that Seth Thakurdas is the payee, though when paid he would hold the proceeds as trustee. The proposed amendment which the plaintiff has declined to make, is we think, one that cannot be required and we incline to the view that as the plaint stands at present, so far as its entitling is concerned, it is right."

[8] The matter, therefore, is one of construction of the document and if the present plaintiff is one of the payees then he has a right of suit. The words of the pro-note are :

"Promissory note likhwalene walle Sakal Panch Gujrati Mod Ki taraf se wahewatdar Sethjee Thakurdas Goverdhandass wa Khemchand Bisandass etc."

The payees under the promissory note are obviously the two wahiwatdars who were acting for and on behalf of the Sakal Panch Gujarti Mod. The promissory note makes the two persons named there as the payees and it is not denied that Thakurdas alone is now alive. A great deal of dispute has arisen in this case due to the use of the word 'wahiwatdar' because a community like the Sakal Panch Gujrathi Mod cannot have an agent. Reference in this matter is made by both sides to a 'sale' deed which is the basis of a trust out of which this money had come. That sale deed was executed on 6-6 1921 by six persons in favour of (a) Shree Bechar Mata temple, (b) Shree Gujrathi Mod Wadi, (c) (i) Seth Thakurdas Gordhandas (ii) Seth Ghanshyamdas Javerchand (iii) Seth Khemchand Bisan Das (iv) Mulchand son of Lalchand Gujrathi Mod wahiwatdars and Karindas of Sakal Panch Gujrathi Mod community.

[9] The property sold consisted of two houses and the vendors by the same deed stipulated that out of the consideration of Rs. 10,000 the vendees would pay off the debts mentioned in the sale-deed and meet the marriage expenses of the one Mt. Sunder Bai and the expenses of maintaining some infants. The balance was to be disposed of as follows :

"The caste people will be invited and fed, each year on Miti Baisakh Vadi 8, in the names of Javerchand and Mobanchand (and) Naraindas (unintelligible) Bhagwatwallas, with the amount of interest, whatsoever accrues on the balance which will be left after paying off the debts of the creditors and kept in deposit as principal. Every member of Gujrathi Mod community is authorised to make efforts himself for the arrangement of feeding the people of the community and get (the same) done. Every member of our community is also entitled to examine the accounts thereof."

It is said that a point emerges from this : that the vendees being six, even excluding the Gujrathi Mod, at least two other trustees are named viz. the Bechar Mata temple and the Shri Gujrathi Mod Wadi. But we are not concerned with whether these are also trustees or not; what we are concerned with is the payee under the pro-note. A trustee can be a payee. It has been held in 41 Mad. 353[2] that a trustee can sustain a suit in his name when a promissory-note is taken in his name as a trustee. In this ruling even the successor of the trustee was allowed to sue. The reason given was that the Negotiable Instruments Act does not affect devolution of rights by operation of law. A trustee can certainly be the payee and if authority is needed we cite (1865) 1 Q. B. 376.[3] In 4 I. C. 293[4] there was a promissory-note made payable to 'the members for the time being of the firm of R. M. A. R. R. M.' This was held not to indicate a certain person within the meaning of the Negotiable Instruments Act. Bell J. who pronounced the judgment of the Full Bench, however, went on to say :

"If it were merely the inclusion of 'representatives' in the expression 'the creditor' that had to be considered, I do not think any difficulty would arise, for then I think on the true construction of the instrument the money would be payable in the first instance to the members of the firm, and their representatives would be merely their agents to receive payment on their behalf.

This clearly would be the case under the English Common Law, as appears from inter alia (1865) 1 Q.B. 376[3] and (1863) 32 L. J. Ex. 137[5] and it seems to me that the paragraph quoted above from S. 5, Negotiable Instruments Act merely reproduces English Common Law with respect to the certainty of person required in the case of the payee of a note or bill. I have the less hesitation in so regarding this paragraph, as the same view of its effect is taken by the learned draftsman of the English Bills of Exchange Act. (Chalmer's Negotiable Instruments Act, page 42, 3rd Edition.)"

It is to be noticed that the promissory note in (1865) 1 Q. B. 376[3] ran as follows :

"On demand I promise to pay to the trustees of the W. Chapal or their treasurer for the time being etc."

The plaintiffs in the action were the surviving trustees, there being in the first instance four other persons besides the plaintiffs as the original trustees. Cockburn C. J., said that 'the treasurer would have no authority to sue in his own name but only to receive the money on behalf of the trustees'. This did not introduce any uncertainty as to the payees and the surviving trustees could sue. See also 59 M. L. J. 548.[6]

[10] Since the plaintiff is named in the promissory note he is a payee within the meaning given by the definition of a payee in S. 7, Negotiable Instruments Act, and there is no uncertainty in the matter. We are further of the opinion that Seth Thakordas was a trustee of the trust out of which this money came. This was in effect also the finding of Stone C. J., and Bose J. and we are fortified in our conclusions by the earlier finding though it was then tentatively given. The case is, therefore, covered by the decision in 41 Mad. 353.[2] We accordingly hold that the plaintiff had a right of suit.

[11] There are two small matters which, it was said, call for interference. The Court of appeal below, decreed the claim of the plaintiff for Rs. 3300 with interest from 11th May 1931 at 9 per cent. per annum till 20th July 1938 and thereafter at 4 per cent per annum. The learned Judge of the Court below lost sight of the fact that credit for Rs. 594 towards interest was given in the plaint. The decree of the lower appellate Court will be modified by making this allowance.

[12] The defendants (appellants) claim credit for Rs. 297 which were paid to the Sakal Panch Gujrathi Mod on or about 18th May 1934 through Chhotelal Gulabchand, Manakchand Bhookandas, and Moti Munshi for holding the annual feast. The plaintiff denied the payment as it was not paid to the promisees named in the promissory note or another person at their instance.

[13] Defendants rely on receipt dated 22nd July 1934 (Ex. 1 D-8) and have examined Manakchand (D. W. 1) and Chhotelal (D. W. 2). The defendants further rely on the copies of account books (Ex. 1 D-9). The matter falls to be considered under S. 78, Negotiable Instruments Act. This section provides that :

"Subject to the provisions of S. 82, Cl. (c) payment of the amount due on a promissory note, bill of exchange or cheque must in order to discharge the maker or acceptor be made to the holder of the instrument."

A payment to any other person would not give a valid discharge to the promisor unless the payee or the holder (as the case may be) accepts the payment as valid and to himself. The plaintiff had already served notices on the defendants before the date of this payment and the suit was also filed on 15th June 1934. It cannot, therefore, be said that the plaintiff accepted the payment. Technically, the defendants cannot be said to be discharged though it is apparent that the money reached the Sakal Panch Gujrathi Mod. We accordingly hold that there is no valid discharge in respect of this sum of Rs. 297. The appeal subject to modification indicated above is dismissed.

[14] As a certificate under S. 15 (1), Debt Conciliation Act has been issued, the parties shall bear their own costs and the decree shall not be executed unless agreement (if any) under S. 12 of the Act is satisfied or ceases to subsist.

[15] It remains only to discuss the cross-objection. This is filed in respect of the costs which have been disallowed because of a certificate issued by the Debt Conciliation Board. It is argued that the suit was already pending before the defendants applied to the Debt Conciliation Board and a distinction is sought to be made between suits already begun and suits which are filed later. This matter was considered by one of us in A. I. R. 1935 Nag. 43[7] and nothing has been shown to us which would induce us to depart from the view there expressed. The cross-objection is dismissed. Parties will bear their own costs of the cross-objection.

Order.—This is a revision against the order of Mr. G. V. Ayachit, Additional District Judge, Seoni in Misc. Appeal No. 5 of 1944, dated 27th January 1945.

[2] The applicant, Umed Singh, is a private purchaser of property which was the subject of a Court sale in execution of a decree in Civil Suit No. 45-B of 1939, and was purchased by Shankerlal Kalar. The decree-holder in the suit was Bhairo Sao and the judgment-debtor Birat Singh. The court sale took place on 23rd August 1944. On 25th September 1944 two applications were put in to set aside the sale. One was by Birat Singh and the other by the present applicant. The trial Court by its order D/- 2nd October 1944 dismissed Birat Singh's application as the necessary deposit was not made on 22nd September 1944 and the application was beyond the period of 30 days.

[3] With regard to Umed Singh's application the learned Court took a different view and ordered him to make the necessary deposit till 3rd October 1944 and on 20th October 1944 the Court set aside the sale. The learned Judge said:

"The explanation offered by the counsel on behalf of Umed Singh is that he could not present such an application within one month and specially on the last day as this Court was away on casual leave."

The application being late by three days the learned Judge condoned the delay and extended the time for the making of the application and the deposit.

[4] The learned Additional District Judge reversed this decision. It is difficult to see how the learned trial Judge could distinguish the case of the two applicants before him as he did.

[5] In the case of Umed Singh also the limitation of 30 days applied and the making of a deposit is a condition precedent to the application. Learned counsel in support of his application relies on 13 C. L. J. 467,[1] 15 C. L. J. 83,[2] 15 Lah. 308[3] and 9 N. L. J. 57[4] and argues that when the Court was on casual leave on 22nd September 1944 the Court must be deemed to be closed on that date. He claims, therefore, to deduct one day from the days spent till 22nd September 1944 and as 23rd September 1944 was a Saturday he claims to be in time on 25th September 1944.

[6] It has been held in 57 ALL. 242[5] that Ss. 4 and 14, Limitation Act, are not similar in their effect. Whereas under S. 14 of the Act the time spent can be excluded, S. 4 does not entitle a person to add the days on which the Court is closed to the statutory period. He must do the act on the very next day on which the Court is open. Applying these rulings in the light of the Privy Council case just referred to here, it was imperative for Umed Singh to file his application and make the necessary deposit on 23rd September 1944 when presumably the Court was present. The applicant has been unable to show why he should be excused for not filing his application on 23rd September 1944 and for not making the deposit also on the same date. The application which was ultimately filed was prepared on 25th September 1944 and the stamps for it were also bought on the 25th idem. It is obvious that the applicant took no action till that date and is now using the Court's absence to get a longer period of limitation. Further even on 25th September 1944 he did not make the deposit and as held in A. I. R. 1917 Mad. 176,[6] A.I.R. 1944 Bom. 233,[7] 1944-2 M. L. J. 124[8] and A. I. R. 1925 Nag. 30[9] the making of a deposit is a condition precedent to the making of an application under O. 21, R. 89, Civil P. C. This was not done on the same day on which the application was made. The order of the learned Additional District Judge, Seoni, is upheld. The application for revision is dismissed with costs. Counsel's fee Rs. 20.

Jusaf and Ismail Co., Saoner — Plaintiff-Applicant v. Governor-General in Council through the Secretary, Central Government, representing G. I. P. Ry. Co. and B. N. Ry. Co., New Delhi—Defendant—Non-Applicant.

Civil Revn. No. 229 of 1945, Decided on 5-9-1946, from decree of Small Cause Court Judge, Saoner, D/- 6-4-1945.

(a) Railways Act (1890), S. 72 — Goods damaged by unruly and furious mob—Liability of Railway—Contract Act (1872), Ss. 151 and 152.

After the Act was enacted the Railways in India are merely bailees in respect of goods entrusted to them for carriage and are governed by the provisions of the Contract Act on bailment: (1926) 1 K.B. 102;31 A.I.R. 1944 Cal. 50 and 33 A. I. R. 1946 Cal. 249, Rel. on. and 3 Bom. 109 (F. B.), Approved. [Para 5]

Even as bailee, the liability of the Railway is not unqualified. It is expected to take only that care of goods which a prudent owner would take of the goods owned by him. Where a riotous mob of about 1000 people attacked the Railway Station, burnt and destroyed all records, the station building and the goods-shed, and damaged everything it could lay its hands on, and no amount of care by the Railway Company could have possibly protected the goods against the unruly and furious mob, the Railway, as a bailee, cannot be held liable for the damage done to the goods as a result of unforeseen and unavoidable eventuality. [Para 10]

(b) Railways Act (1890), S. 72— Consignee if can refuse to take delivery except on endorsement by Railway Officer regarding damage and shortage — Contract Act (1872), S. 161.

The consignee should take delivery of the consignment in the condition in which it is found after giving notice to the officer giving delivery as to its condition and then sue the Railway Company for damage or shortage, if any. He has no right in law to insist that either the Railway Officer should make or he himself should be permitted to make an endorsement as to the damaged condition of the consignment in railway registers before taking delivery: 18 A. Order.—This revision is filed by the plaintiff against the dismissal of his suit for damages filed against the Governor-General in Council (owning the G. I. P. Railway) and the B. N. Railway Company, Limited, which, during the pendency of the suit, also came to be owned by the Government. The relevant facts are as follows.

[2] On 20-7-1942, bags of gram-dal (pulse) were delivered by the consignor to the defendant at its Railway Station, Cawnpur Central, to be carried to and delivered to the plaintiff at Saoner Railway Station of the B. N. Railway Company within the district of Nagpur. The goods reached their destination of Saoner on or about 2-8-1942 but, according to the plaintiff, in a damaged condition due to moisture and unfit for human consumption. The plaintiff insisted on the goods being delivered to him after weighing and after ascertaining the extent of damage and noting the same. This was refused by the Railway Officer in charge with the result that the goods remained undelivered till 19-11-1942, when the goods were taken delivery of by the plaintiff after the Railway Officer estimated and noted the damage and shortage at 60 per cent. The plaintiff thereafter served notices of his claim and ultimately instituted a suit claiming Rs. 395-8 as damages.

[3] The defendant denied liability on the grounds inter alia that the goods were not damaged during transit, that the plaintiff acted illegally and without jurisdiction in refusing to take delivery and in insisting on what is said to be open-delivery after noting the extent of damage and shortage and that the damage was in fact caused on 15-8-1942 by a riotous mob in the course of 1942 disturbances which it was beyond the control of the defendant to avoid.

[4] The learned Judge of the lower Court held that the plaintiff was at fault in refusing to take delivery on 2-8-1942 and the goods were thereafter lying with the defendant as unclaimed property. It was during this period that the goods were damaged by riotous mob which was beyond the reasonable apprehension of the defendant and in spite of the exercise of a reasonable care which the defendant as bailee was expected to take in those circumstances.

[5] Before S. 72, Railways Act 9 [IX] of 1890 was framed there was much divergence as to the liability of the Railway Companies in India and it was held in a series of cases by the Calcutta High Court that the Railway Companies, just as common carriers, were not only liable for negligence but also as insurers of goods delivered to them. The Bombay High Court in its Full Bench case reported in 3 Bom. 109[1] had however held that the English Common law rule under which common carriers are held liable as insurers of goods had no application to the Railways in India and subject to special provisions and contracts the liability of the Railways in respect of goods entrusted to them is governed by Ss. 151 and 152, Contract Act. It is now well settled that after the Act 9 [IX] of 1890 was enacted the Railways in India are merely bailees in respect of goods entrusted to them for carriage and are governed by the provisions of the Indian Contract Act on bailment: (1926) 1 K B. 102,[2] I. L. R. (1943) 1 Cal. 397[3] and A. I. R. 1946 Cal. 249.[4] Section 72 of Act 9 [IX] of 1890 declared the law in conformity with the aforesaid Bombay decision.

[6] The learned counsel for the applicant relied mainly on two points, firstly that the goods were damaged in transit and reached Saoner in damaged condition, and secondly that the Railway Officers acted illegally or at any rate improperly in refusing to give delivery after examining the contents of the consignment and endorsing the shortage in weight and damage. According to him the defendant is liable for the damage in transit and he is liable for further damage on account of wrongful refusal to give delivery.

[7] Regarding the first point, the finding of the lower Court is somewhat ambiguous. It was therefore that I permitted the applicant's counsel to take me through the evidence on record. I find on going through the evidence that while the plaintiff has exaggerated the condition of goods on 2-8-1942, the station staff has on the other hand tried to minimise it. It is clear from the evidence on record that the goods were all along under cover, during transit, and also at Saoner, and there is little possibility of the entire quantity being damaged by moisture. After all, goods were carried from Cawnpore to Saoner during rainy season and there was at least one transhipment and it is not unlikely that some damage may have been caused. I do not believe the defendant's witnesses who deposed that the plaintiff refused to take delivery only because a very negligible quantity i. e., two or three seers of pulse was damaged by moisture. It is not unlikely that the plaintiff may have been entitled to some amount by way of damages if he had placed on record reliable evidence as to the extent of damage during transit and furnished a good basis for assessing damages he was entitled to on that account. The plaintiff has completely failed to do this and his claim for damage done to the consigned goods on or before 2-8-1942 must therefore fail.

[8] The learned counsel for the applicant was unable to point out any provision in the Railways Act or any rule thereunder justifying his refusal to take delivery except on examination of goods and endorsement by the railway officer regarding damage, and shortage if any. He no doubt relied on a case reported in A. I. R. 1929 ALL. 960,[5] but that case is clearly distinguishable. That was a claim against the E. I. Railway Co. and it was decided on the strength of a rule framed by that Company enjoining on its Officers the duty of examination and weighment of goods if required by the consignee before taking delivery. No such rule was brought to my notice so far as the G. I. P. Railway or the B. N. Railway Companies are concerned. The learned counsel for the non-applicant on the other hand relied on 7 Lah. 370,[6] 44 ALL. 763[7] and 71 Mad. L. J. 325,[8] in support of the proposition that the consignor has no right in law to insist that the railway officer should weigh the goods and should make an endorsement as was required by the plaintiff in the present case. It was pointed out in A. I. R. 1931 Nag. 29,[9] that the consignee should take delivery of the consignment in the condition in which it is found after giving notice to the officer giving delivery as to its condition and then sue the railway company for damage or shortage, if any; he has no right in law to insist that either the officer of the Railway Company should make an endorsement or that the consignee should be permitted to make an endorsement as to the damaged condition of the consignment in railway registers. I therefore find that the plaintiff was not justified in refusing to take delivery on 2-8-1942.

[9] The learned counsel for the non-applicant contended that as a result of the plaintiff's refusal to take delivery duly offered to him the goods were lying in the railway goods-shed at the plaintiff's risk and the defendant was not liable for loss and damage to the goods after 2-8-1942 and he relied on a case reported in 13 I. C. 509.[10] In my opinion the proposition is not correct. The defendant still continued to be the bailee and remained liable as such. The plaintiff was however liable to compensate the defendant for any necessary expenses incidental to the safe custody of goods: vide Commentary on the Contract Act by Mulla and Pollock, under S. 161.

[10] Even as bailee, the liability of the defendant is not however unqualified. The defendant is expected to take only that care of the goods which a prudent owner would take of the goods owned by him. The evidence on record shows that on 15-8 1942 a riotous mob of about 1000 people attacked Saoner railway station, and it burnt and destroyed all records, the station building and the goods-shed, and damaged everything it could lay its hands on. The mob damaged other public buildings at Saoner as well. No amount of care by the railway company could have possibly protected the goods against this unruly and furious mob. It is well-known that Government and private property was ruthlessly damaged and destroyed in the 1942 disturbances at several places in this province and outside. The defendant, as a bailee, cannot, therefore, be held liable in these circumstances for the damage done to the plaintiff's goods as a result of unforeseen and unavoidable eventuality. The plaintiff's claim for the damage done to the consigned goods on 15-8-1942 cannot therefore be decreed. The applicant's claim was therefore rightly dismissed by the lower Court. The revision is dismissed with costs. Counsel's fee Rs. 25.

Second Appeal No. 27 of 1943, Decided on 12-9-1946, from appellate decree of Addl. Dist. Judge, Hoshangabad. D/-10-12-1942.

T. P. Act (1882), S. 53-A—Mistake in sale deed—Wrong field number given—Delivery of possession of correct property — Vendee does not get title thereby.

A sale deed described the field sold as No. 265/1. The contention of the vendees was that what was sold was field No. 267/1 and not No. 265/1 which was entered in the sale deed by mistake. They alleged that they were put in possession of No. 267/1 in April 1937 and remained in undisturbed possession until June 1940, when the vendor began to assert his claim to it. The field was worth more than Rs. 100. In a suit by the vendee for a declaration of his title to No. 267/1 and also for an injunction restraining the vendor from disturbing his possession or for possession, according as it might be found that the vendee was in or out of possession, the plaintiff relied on the agreement to transfer and on the delivery of possession in pursuance of that agreement:

Held* that the English doctrine of part performance could not be applied so as to create, without writing, an interest, where according to S. 54, T P. Act, it can be created only by a registered instrument. Hence in the absence of a registered instrument transferring No. 267/1 the vendee acquired no title to it, and in the absence of title he could not have the declaration sought. He could have sued within three years for rectification of the instrument or for specific performance of the agreement to sell; but having failed to do so he could not enforce the claim for possession: 18 A. I. R. 1931 P. C. 79, Rel. on; Case law referred. [Paras 9 & 11]

Held further that S. 53A did not help the plaintiff since there was no written agreement to transfer field N. 267/1. [Para 6]

R. S. Dabir—for Appellants.

B. L. Gupta and V. R. Sen — for Respondents 1 and 2.

Judgment.—In 1925 Imrat, the father of the defendants, borrowed Rs. 1000 from the plaintiffs and as security mortgaged 28.95 acres of absolute occupancy land in mauza Jhalone. In 1932 the plaintiffs brought a suit on this mortgage, and Imrat thereafter applied to the Debt Conciliation Board. On 25-9-1936 the plaintiffs and Imrat informed the Board that they had agreed that the plaintiffs should take a sale deed of absolute occupancy fields No. 265, area 4.25 acres, and No. 80, area 12.61 acres, out of the mortgaged land in settlement of their claim and leave the rest of the mortgaged land to Imrat. The Board considered this a very fair settlement and directed them to get a sale deed executed and registered: see Ex. D-6. A sale deed (Ex. P-1) was accordingly executed on 23-10-1936 by which Imrat purported to sell two of his mortgaged fields for Rs. 1700, which was apparently the sum that the Board decided should be payable on the mortgage. The fields sold were described as No. 265/1, area 4. 25 acres, rent Rs. 9, and No. 80/2, area 12. 61 acres, rent Rs. 18; and there was this condition in the sale deed that Imrat should retain possession until the crops were cut and the plaintiffs should be put in possession in April 1937. Shortly afterwards a decree was passed in the mortgage suit in accordance with this compromise, though that decree is not before me.

[2] The plaintiffs' case is that they agreed to take 2 fields known as Kachhar and Gobari in settlement of their claim, that these fields are 267/1, area 2.60 acres, rent Rs. 6, and No. 80/2, and that by mistake No. 265/1 known as Sotawala was entered in the various documents instead of 267/1. They alleged, however, that in execution of the decree they were placed in possession of No. 267/1 in April 1937 and remained in undisturbed possession until June 1940 when the defendants began to assert a claim to it. The plaintiffs accordingly filed this suit for a declaration of their title to No. 267/1 and also for an injunction restraining the defendants from disturbing their possession or for possession, according as it might be found that the plaintiffs were in or out of possession.

[3] The plaintiffs were admittedly in possession of No. 267/1 from April or May 1937 to about June, 1940 but the defendants contend that there was no mistake in the sale-deed, that it was No. 265/1 and not No. 267/1 that was sold, and that possession of No. 267/1 was given to the plaintiffs in May 1937 in settlement of a debt. The defendants said that they had borrowed 4 manis of grain shortly after the execution of the sale-deed on 23rd October 1936 with a promise to repay 5 manis in the following May, and that as they were unable to make this repayment they let out No. 267/1 to the plaintiffs for three years in settlement of this debt.

[4] The lower appellate Court, differing from the trial Court, held that the compromise between the parties was to sell Nos. 267/1 and 80/2 and that No. 265/1 was entered by mistake for 267/1. That, of course, is a finding of fact, but Mr. Dabir in the course of an able and exhaustive argument contended that that finding is not binding on me in second appeal on the ground that the lower appellate Court failed to appreciate and determine questions of fact which vitally affected the issue, in the words of Lord Clauson in A. I. R. 1943 P. C. 208.[1] The points said to have been overlooked by the lower appellate Court are that the defendants paid the rent for No. 267/1 throughout as evidenced by Ex. D-1, that the plaintiffs were in possession of No. 265/1, throughout, and that the plaintiffs admittedly knew 8 days before the sale that the rent of Kachhar field (No. 267/1) was Rs. 9. Exhibit D-1, which has not been translated and is not in the paper-book, does not appear to contain the numbers of the fields for which rent was paid. No. 265/1 was admittedly under grass and uncultivated, and the evidence of possession is slender and contradictory; the trial Court held that the plaintiffs were in possession, and the lower appellate Court did not specifically deal with that point. The admission of the plaintiff Gajraj Singh in the course of his evidence that the patwari told him that the rent of Kachhar field was Rs. 9, which is in fact the rent of Sotawala field (No. 265/1) does not seem to me very important, as it is quite probable that he was unaware of the rents of these two fields.

[5] The lower appellate Court held that the story of the lease of No. 267/1 was entirely false, and it certainly seems an unlikely story. It, therefore, went on, in effect, to say that in the absence of any other explanation of the plaintiffs' possession they must have been given possession in pursuance of the compromise. That seems to me a legitimate argument. The other points are minor points, and the lower appellate Court was justified, in my opinion, in holding on that basis that No. 265/1 in the sale-deed was a mistake for 267/1.

[6] The question then remains whether on those facts the plaintiffs are entitled to a decree declaring their title to No. 267/1. They admittedly knew in December 1936 or January 1937 that this mistake had occurred, but they did nothing about it; the explanation offered on their behalf is that they were in undisturbed possession and saw no reason to expect trouble. By a suit brought within three years they could have asked for rectification of the sale-deed or for specific performance of the agreement to sell No. 267/1, but they allowed more than three years to pass without doing this. Eventually they brought the present suit on 14th July 1941 for a declaration of their title to No. 267/1. The field is admittedly worth more than Rs. 100, and by reason of S. 54, T. P. Act, the title in it cannot be transferred except by a registered instrument. The plaintiffs rely on the agreement to transfer and on the delivery of possession in pursuance of that agreement. That, in my opinion, cannot affect a transfer of title, as seems clear from the decision of the Privy Council in 58 Cal. 1235.[2] The law has since been modified by the enactment of S. 53-A, T. P. Act, but that does not help the plaintiffs in the present case, because there is no written agreement to transfer this property, and the plaintiffs do not rely on that section.

[7] The lower appellate Court relied on A. I. R. 1938 Mad. 589,[3] where the facts were very similar. There the learned Judges held, relying on A. I. R. 1918 Cal. 809[4]:

"So long as it is open to the parties to adduce oral evidence on the ground of mutual mistake in regard to misdescription of property, and a Court can give effect to the real intentions of the parties, we do not see why any question of limitation should arise at all when the substantial relief prayed for by the plaintiff is not rectification of the deed but some other relief which he is entitled to claim under the law on the basis of the transaction which he seeks to enforce . . . Even though the right of the plaintiff to sue for the rectification of the mortgage-deed is barred by limitation, still he is entitled to the relief for sale of the property which was agreed to be mortgaged."

The learned Judges, however, did not discuss the question whether title in property can be transferred without a registered sale-deed.

[8] The decision in A. I. R. 1918 Cal. 809[4] is clearly distinguishable, for it was decided on an entirely different basis. The plaintiff in that case claimed that he was a co-vendee of land along with the defendants and that his name had been omitted from the conveyance by the fraud of the defendants who were entrusted with the preparation and execution of the document; the Court held that the plaintiffs were beneficial owners under the transaction and that it was open to them to establish their case by oral evidence. There was no question there of a transfer of title without a registered document. The question was who were the transferees.

[9] In A. I. R. 1930 ALL. 387,[5] where the facts were similar, the learned Judge, relying on the decision in A. I. R. 1927 ALL. 355,[6] held that the plaintiffs were entitled to be put in possession of what they had purchased and that they could prove the mistake made in the document of sale, and that it was not necessary that the mistake should be corrected in the document within the period of limitation allowed. No reasons were given for the decision except the previous decision mentioned above. In A. I. R. 1927 ALL. 355[6] the facts and the decision again were similar, and the decision was based on the decision of the Privy Council in 42 Cal. 801.[7] The learned Judge relying on that decision held that as the vendor got the consideration for the plot which he intended to sell and the vendee was placed in possession of that plot and the transaction had thus been acted upon, equity would support a transaction clothed imperfectly in those legal forms to which finality attaches after the bargain has been acted upon. Since then, however, the decision of their Lordships in 42 Cal. 801[7] has been explained by them in 58 Cal. 1235[2] where they made it clear that:

"Even if an English equitable doctrine should be applied in any case so as to modify the effect of an Indian Act, which may well be doubted, the English equitable doctrine of part performance . . . . cannot be applied, so as to create, without writing, an interest, which S. 107, T. P. Act enacts can be created only by a registered instrument."

The same argument would apply to the creation of an interest under S. 54, T. P. Act.

[10] The plaintiffs have relied on two other decisions, 34 Mad. 51[8] and A. I. R. 1916 Mad. 795.[9] In the first of these cases it is not clear whether a claim for rectification would have been in time, for the Court remarked: 'The omission of a prayer for rectification is, at most, a matter of form.' I agree that extrinsic evidence is admissible to show the mistake, but the question is whether on the strength of a registered instrument which contains no reference to the property claimed the plaintiff is entitled to a declaration of his title. This decision was followed in A. I. R. 1916 Mad. 795,[9] but no reasons were given in either case.

[11] My conclusion, therefore, is that in the absence of a registered instrument transferring No. 267/1 the plaintiffs have acquired no title to it, and in the absence of title they cannot have the declaration they seek. They could have sued within three years for rectification of the instrument or for specific performance of the agreement to sell; but having failed to do so they are in the same position as the defendant in 58 Cal. 1235.[2] They have no title, and they cannot enforce a claim for possession. It has not been pleaded or suggested that they have acquired a title by adverse possession. The appeal is allowed, and the plaintiffs' suit will stand dismissed with costs throughout. Counsel's fee Rs. 25. I grant leave to appeal.

Circumstances may arise when the Court may consider that it would not be proper for the wife to live with her husband and then the wife may be permitted to live separate and yet claim maintenance. All such grounds have reference to the comfort and safety of the wife. Conjugal relations are hardly relevant to the order for maintenance under S. 488. A wife is not entitled to live apart from her husband and claim maintenance on the ground that her husband is impotent and unable to perform his marital duties: 20 A. I. [2] The order which the learned Sessions Judge recommends should be set asid concerns an award of a maintenance allowance of Rs. 20 per month granted to the non-applicant 2 under S. 488, Criminal P. C.

[3] The wife was living separate from her husband and the question was whether she had sufficient reason for refusing to live with her husband. The wife urged two grounds for refusing to live with her husband. The first was cruelty. The learned Magistrate did not consider that ground sufficient inasmuch as he says nothing about it in his order. He bases his order on the second ground. This ground was that the husband was impotent and unable to perform his marital duties. The learned Magistrate thought this to be a sufficient ground for the wife to live separate from her husband.

[4] No authority has been cited before me in support of the case of the wife that she is entitled to live separate from her husband on account of his impotence. Reliance was placed on some old texts of Hindu law and the analogy of some civil cases was cited. Reliance was placed on A. I. R. 1922 Mad. 399,[1] A. I. R. 1936 Mad. 609[2] and A. I. R. 1936 Bom. 138.[3]

[5] As against these learned counsel for the husband contended that the present law on the subject does not take this into account. He referred to Act 19 [XIX] of 1946, and refers to Ss. 444 and 555 of Mulla's Hindu Law (1946 Edn.). He also contends that this is the first case in which such a claim has been urged.

[6] I have been unable to find a single case in which such a claim was put forward by the wife. There is nothing to prove that under the circumstances mentioned in this case a wife is entitled to live apart from her husband and claim maintenance under S. 488, Criminal P. C. It is open to me to take this fact into account. Courts in India have not been called upon to examine this question at any time and it is fair to assume that had such a ground been thought good it would have been urged ere this.

[7] In my opinion the real reason why such a ground was never urged before this, is that S. 488, Criminal P. C., is a summary proceeding. A husband must prima facie support his wife. This he can do by making her share his board and house. If he does not, then the wife has right to be maintained by him. Ordinarily the husband's bona fide willingness to maintain his wife would be a sufficient answer to the petition. Circumstances may arise when the Court may consider that it would not be proper for the wife live with her husband and then the wife may be permitted to live separate and yet claim maintenance. All such grounds have reference to the comfort and safety of the wife. They have no bearing upon conjugal relations except in so far as such relations are rendered unsafe for the wife. In my opinion the failure to discharge the marital obligations by reason of impotence is not a good ground. Conjugal relations are hardly relevant to the order for maintenance under S. 488, Criminal P. C. I am fortified in this view by the observations of Burn J., in 56 Mad. 913,[4] at p. 914 :

"I cannot see that S. 488, Criminal P. C., has anything to do with ordinary conjugal rights; it deals with 'maintenance' only ....."

In that case the wife insisted that she should be treated as a member of the family with a right to live in the family house. It was held that she was not entitled to be treated as a 'wife' but only to be maintained. Separate maintenance was accordingly refused.

[8] I, therefore, accept the reference and set aside the order of maintenance passed by the trial Court.

Misc. First Appeal No. 115 of 1941, Decided on 16-9-1946, from order of Addl. Dist. Judge, Raipur, D/- 23-12-1940.

C. P. Court of Wards Act (1899), S. 12 — After filing of suit Court of Wards assuming superintendence of defendant's property — Plaintiff submitting claim to Court of Wards after 6 months—Suit compromised—Decree directing payment of interest in case of default — Direction if can be challenged in execution — Civil P. C. (1908), S. 38.

After a suit had been filed, the Court of Wards assumed suprintendence of the estate of the defendant and was shown as guardian ad litem of the defendant. A notification under S. 12 (1), was issued calling upon persons having claims against the ward to submit their claims. In course of the suit, the defendant made a statement that the claim should be deemed to have been discharged under S. 12 (2), on the ground that the claim had not been submitted within 6 months as required by S. 12 (1). The parties however compromised and a decree was passed in terms of the compromise providing payment of the decretal amount by the defendant, with interest in case of default. In execution proceedings it was contended by the defendant that the direction in the decree to pay interest was illegal and unenforceable:

Held, that the defendant having abandoned his contention, viz., that the claim must be deemed to have been discharged under S. 12 (2) and the parties having consented to the decree, the Court had jurisdiction to pass the decree it did. [Para 3]

Held further, that whether the Court had jurisdiction to pass the decree or not, the decree could not be challenged in execution proceedings. It was not open to the Court executing the decree to embark on an enquiry into facts which, if established, would tend to show that the Court passing it had no jurisdiction to do so : 30 A. I. R. 1943 Nag. 325, Foll. [Para 4]

R. Kaushalendra Rao and G. R. Deo — for Appellant.

M. Adhikari and V. R. Sen — for Respondents.

Judgment.—On 10-4-1931, the predecessor-in-title of the respondents in this Court, hereinafter referred to as the decree-holder, instituted a suit against Lal Nagendra Shah, Zamindar, Bindra Nawagarh, for the recovery of Rs. 5453-15-0. In November of that year the Court of Wards assumed superintendence of Lal Nagendra Shah's estate, and a notification under S. 10 (1), Central Provinces Court of Wards Act, announcing the assumption of superintendence was published in the Central Provinces Gazette of 7-11-1931. A notification under S. 12 (1) of this Act calling upon all persons having claims against the ward or his immovable property to submit them in writing within 6 months was published in the Central Provinces Gazette on 21st November. On 2nd December the Court was informed by the Deputy Commissioner that the Court of Wards had assumed superintendence of the defendant's estate, and an application was made to allow the defendant to be sued through the Court of Wards. The plaint was amended accordingly and the Court of Wards was shown as the guardian ad litem of the defendant. Subsequently on 3-8-1932 the defendant made an oral statement contending that the claim should be deemed to have been discharged under S. 12 (2) of the Act on the ground that the claim had not been submitted within 6 months as required by S. 12 (1). On 30-8-1932, however, the parties agreed that the claim should be compromised, and a decree was passed in accordance with the terms of that compromise directing the defendant to pay Rs. 3406-3-0 by 15-12-1932, with interest at 7 per cent. per annum in case of default from the date of suit till satisfaction, costs to be borne as incurred.

[2] When the decree-holder took out execution the defendant, still represented by the Court of Wards, contended that the direction in the decree to pay interest was illegal and unenforceable. It was admitted that the decree-holder submitted his claim to the Court of Wards on 4-8-1932 after the lapse of more than 6 months from the date of the publication of the notification under S. 12 (1) and that this delay was condoned by the Court of Wards under the proviso to S. 12 (2). The argument was that under that proviso any claim received after the lapse of 6 months shall cease to carry interest and that the Court acted illegally in awarding interest, even though the parties consented to this. It is somewhat surprising that the Deputy Commissioner of Raipur, acting on behalf of the Court of Wards, should try to go back in this way on a compromise that was a very reasonable one.

[3] It was held in 8 N. L. R. 169[1] that S. 12, Central Provinces Court of Wards Act, has no application if a civil suit has been filed before the Court of Wards assumes superintendence of the estate. Even if that is not so and a claim has to be submitted in writing under S. 12 (1), then it appears to me that there was a sufficient compliance with the requirements of that section when the Court of Wards was made guardian ad litem to the defendant in this suit on 2-12-1931. Apart from that, however, it is not disputed that the civil Court had power to decide the suit. It might have been open to the defendant in that suit to raise the contention, as in fact he did, that the claim must be deemed to have been discharged under S. 12 (2) on the ground that the claim had not been submitted in time, and it would then have been for the Court to decide that point. That contention, however, was abandoned, and the Court therefore had jurisdiction, in my opinion, to pass the decree that it passed on the consent of the parties.

[4] Whether the Court had jurisdiction to pass that decree or not, it seems to me clear that the validity of the decree cannot be challenged in execution proceedings. It may be that in cases where the decree is on the face of it contrary to law its validity can be challenged in execution proceedings but I entirely agree with the view expressed by Niyogi J. in I. L. R. (1943) Nag. 757[2] that it is not open to a Court executing a decree to embark on an inquiry into facts which, if established, will tend to show that the Court passing it had no jurisdiction to do so. That proposition is, I think, beyond challenge. The appeal is dismissed with costs. Counsel's fee Rs. 50.

Criminal Appeal No. 84 of 1947, Decided on 18-7 1947, from order of Addl. Dist. Magistrate, Nagpur D/- 10-4-1947.

(a) Penal Code (1860), S. 124-A—Causing disaffection towards Government—Tests—Speech directed against police of city and not against whole police force — No disaffection against Government — Speech held did not fall under S. 124-A.

Whether in a particular case the condemnation of any service is sufficient to excite any feeling of hatred or contempt or disaffection towards Government by law established in British India, must depend upon the nature of the criticism, the position of the service in the administration and all the other circumstances of that case. In determining the intention of the accused when he made the speech, the speech must be read as a whole in a fair, free and liberal spirit. Where the speech of the accused was directed not at the police administration as a whole nor even at all the police in the city but at those police officers who were enforcing a certain municipal bye-law, speech not only refraining from exciting any feeling of hatred or contempt or disaffection towards the Government established by law but specifically indicating that the accused had approached Honourable Members of it and received sympathetic treatment from them and no violence to the police or anyone else followed the speech which was essentially a bombastic and ineffectual tirade:

Held that even if the speech was directed against all the police in Nagpur, accused could not be convicted under S. 124-A: 20 A.I.R. 1933 Bom. 65 and 3 A. I. R. 1916 Bom. 9, Ref.; 10 A.I.R. 1923 Lah. 61, Rel. on. [Paras 7, 8, 9 & 10]

M. Adhikari—for Appellant.

B. L. Gupta Advocate-General—for the Crown.

Judgment. — The appellant Om Prakash Mehta, political worker, of Nagpur, was convicted and sentenced to undergo 9 months rigorous imprisonment under S. 124-A, Penal Code, by the Additional District Magistrate, Nagpur.

[2] In the beginning of October 1946, the Nagpur police had prosecuted some rickshaw-wallas for breaches of a municipal bye-law which limits the number of passengers they can take in their rickshaws. The rickshaw-wallas resented these prosecutions and on 10-10-1946 went on strike and held a meeting in the Kasturchand park. This meeting was addressed by the appellant, who was the principal speaker, and others, including H. K. Vyas (D. W. 2). The meeting was also attended by G. V. Moharir (P. W. 1), Naib-tahsildar, and L. P. Shrivastava (P. W. 2), Station Officer, Gaddigudam, of whom the latter took down longhand notes in pencil.

[3] The notes of the appellant's speech are translated as follows :

"From yesterday the police has started beating and prosecuting (rickshaw-drivers) for taking two passengers in rickshaws. The rickshawwallas (i. e. rickshaw-drivers), without consulting the union, took out a procession and observed a strike. I was standing near the Tilak statue. The rickshaw-drivers, brothers, stated to me whatever grievances they had. I put forth your demands before the Minister Mr. Gokhale Saheb and Mr. Shukla Saheb. I also told them that the police beat and committed atrocities. Mr. Shukla Saheb had assured (me) that he would stop the police atrocities. But till this day, in no way whatsoever was there a redress (of this grievance). We will stop the police atrocities with our hands. If the police beats, we too have dealt with the police previously. I am not (a man) who will retreat. No policeman whosoever dare raise (his) hand. The police commits many atrocities. The police oppression is not going to stop in this way. If a policeman raises (his) hand (on a rickshaw-driver), all the rickshaw-drivers should attack him. So long as this will not be repeated several times, the police oppression will not stop. As long as the rickshaw-drivers do not take up the question of stopping the police oppression into their hands (this) oppression cannot come to an end. If we are being put to dishonour, all should together retaliate. There are people of each and every akhada among the rickshaw-drivers, brothers. We will stop the police high-handedness with our hands. If a policeman raises (his) hand on any rickshaw-driver, we will reduce him to pieces. We reported the police high-handedness to Mr. Shukla Saheb. Mr Mishra Saheb also was informed (of this). He said that the full case should be submitted to him. We gave an account of the high-handed acts of the police to Mr. Gokhale Saheb also. Mr. Gokhale Saheb has said that they will order the Deputy Commissioner and the District Superintendent of Police that so long as the Provincial Government does not make new law, the old law should be allowed to be operative (i. e. in force). Today we are going to launch a big agitation against the police. These are the same (policemen) who had fired bullets on us in the year (1942). These are the same murderers whose hands are stained with blood. A time will come when being faced with our strikes they will give a (performance of) their naked dance (i. e., they will resort to extremely high-handed acts in a most arbitrary manner). No law whatsoever authorises the world to raise hand on a rickshaw-driver. Should anybody do such a thing, beat him and come to us in the office. We accept the full responsibility. We will then see (to the same). Yesterday you people observed a strike (you) acted properly : I did not stop (you) or prevent (you) in any manner whatsoever. I went to Mr. Gokhale Saheb. He said that they would issue orders that so long as the Provincial Government did not decide the matters, no case whatsoever should be started."

[4] The appellant in examination admitted that he had addressed the meeting of rickshaw-wallas on the relevant date in the Kasturchand park, but he denied that the notes taken by L. P. Shrivastava contained a true report of his speech. He also declared that he had not incited his audience to use force to the police and that he had not stated that the police officers were the same police officers as those who had fired on people in 1942 or were the same murderers with blood-stained hands. He further denied that he had charged the police with failing to prosecute the owners and drivers of buses which carried more than the prescribed number of passengers because they received bribes and free lifts from them.

[5] The evidence of Captain R. W. Fulay was not of material assistance to the defence and the learned Additional District Magistrate has given cogent reasons for disbelieving the statement of H. K. Vyas that the appellant had merely advised the rickshaw-wallas to defend themselves when attacked by the police and to refuse to carry them without payment of fares.

[6] Although the notes of the speech were taken in longhand, there is no reason to suppose that any important passage or passages which would have tempered the effect of those notes were omitted. Mr. Moharir, who admittedly arrived at the meeting after the Sub-Inspector, took no notes, but his evidence of what he heard was corroborative of most of the contents of the notes. Neither Mr. Moharir nor the Sub-Inspector was inimical to the appellant nor did the latter suggest the existence of any animus between them. There was, therefore, no reason why the evidence of two prosecution witnesses should be disbelieved and we have no doubt of its integrity.

[7] That the appellant's attack was not directed against the Hon'ble Ministers is plain and his references to them demonstrated that he regarded them as authorities who would afford the rickshaw-wallas protection from and redress for high-handedness on the part of the police. The appellant's learned counsel accordingly contended that he was not liable under S. 124-A, Penal Code. In the well-known case in 19 Bom. L. R. 211[1], however, Batchelor J., made the following observations at page 264:

"For the Government established by law acts through human agency, and admittedly the Civil Service is its principal agency for the administration of the country in times of peace. Therefore, where, as here, you criticise the Civil Service en bloc, the question whether you excite disaffection against the Government or not seems to me a pure question of fact. You do so if the natural effect of your words, infusing hatred of the Civil Service, is also to infuse hatred or contempt of the established Government whose accredited agent the Civil Service is. You avoid doing so if, preferring appropriate language of moderation, you use words which do not naturally excite such hatred of Government. It is, I think, a mere question of fact,"

In the same case Shah J., said at page 270:

"It may be that the various services under the control of the Government by law established in British India do not form part of the Government within the meaning of the section: and it may be that the criticism directed against any of the services is not necessarily criticism of the Government by law established in British India. But the feelings, which it is the object of S. 124A to prohibit, may be excited towards the Government in a variety of ways; and it seems to me that it is possible to excite such feelings towards the Government by an unfair condemnation of any of its services. Whether in a particular case the condemnation of any service is sufficient to excite any feeling of hatred or contempt or disaffection towards Government by law established in British India, must depend upon the nature of the criticism, the position of the service in the administration and all the other circumstances of that case. It would be a question of fact to be determined in each case with reference to its circumstances. But as a matter of law it cannot be said that the condemnation of a particular service under the Government by law established in British India can never be sufficient to excite any of the feelings prohibited by S. 124A towards such Government."

[8] In determining the intention of the appellant when he made the speech, the speech must be read as a whole "in a fair, free and liberal spirit"; and, as Beaumont C. J., pointed out in 57 Bom. 253[2], undue regard must not be paid to any particular sentence or phrase. Here, the only passage which might be said to refer to the police en bloc is:

"Today we are going to launch a big agitation against the police. These are the same (policemen) who had fired bullets on us in the year (19) 42. These are the same murderers whose hands are stained with blood."

When this passage, however, is read with the passages which preceded and followed it, the conclusion must be that the police referred to were the police in Nagpur who had, without any move on the part of the Municipal Committee, taken action against rickshaw-wallas for the contravention of a bye-law which had been more honoured in the breach than in the observance.

[9] The position thus is that the appellant's speech was directed not at the police administration as a whole nor even at all the police in Nagpur but at those police officers who were enforcing the bye-law. But even if it could be held that it was directed against all the police in Nagpur, it could not be said to come within the mischief of S. 124A, Penal Code. To quote Shadi Lal C. J. in 3 Lah. 405[3]:

"In the present case the persons . . . were a few police officials employed at a particular station, and it is impossible to identify them with the Government or the general body of rulers. An attack upon certain policemen at a particular place does not convey any reflection upon the governing authority."

[10] We are in respectful agreement with that view and would repeat that in the present case the appellant in his speech not only refrained from exciting any feeling of hatred or contempt or disaffection towards the Government established by law but specifically indicated that he had approached Hon'ble Members of it and received sympathetic treatment from them. No violence to the police or any one else followed the speech which was essentially a bombastic and ineffectual tirade.

[11] The appellant's conviction under S. 124A, Penal Code cannot, therefore, be maintained nor can that conviction be altered to one under S. 153A ibid, as the sanction given by the Provincial Government, Central Provinces and Berar, under S. 196, Criminal P. C., related only to S. 124A, Penal Code. In the well-known case in 37 Cal. 467,[4] Jenkins C. J., held that where an order under S. 196, Criminal P. C., authorised a particular police officer to prefer a complaint of offences under Ss. 121A, 122, 123 and 124, Penal Code, "or under any other section of the said Code which may be found applicable to the case", a complaint under S. 121, Penal Code was not thereby authorised by the Local Government or in fact preferred. The case before us is stronger, inasmuch as the relevant order under S. 196, Criminal P. C., refers solely to S. 124A, Penal Code. Moreover, an offence under S. 153A differs in many respects from an offence under S. 124A; the charge which the appellant had to meet was framed under S. 124A and Shadi Lal C. J., in the Labore case, supra, decided that the police officials referred to in that case did not constitute a class of His Majesty's subjects. The conviction and sentence are, therefore, set aside.

The right which is given to the accused under S. 162, Criminal P. C., to use the previous statement made to the police for the purpose of contradicting a witness is a valuable right. Where the omission to give the copies to the accused has caused prejudice to the accused, the testimony of such witness must be received with extreme caution and the Court would be entitled in a suitable case even to ignore altogether such evidence. Fida Husain—for Appellants.

W. B. Pendharkar, Addl. Government Pleader —for the Crown.

Judgment.—This is an appeal by 13 persons who have been convicted under Ss. 147, 302 and 302 read with S. 149, Penal Code, by Mr. V. B. Sarwate, Sessions Judge, Nagpur, in Sessions Trial No. 29 of 1946, decided on 3-10-1946.

[2] Originally 31 persons were prosecuted but only 13 have been convicted and some have been sentenced to transportation for life while others have been sentenced only under S. 147, Penal Code. The incident is of 12-4-1946, when the election to the Trade Union Labour seat was in progress. The rival candidates were Messrs. Ruikar and Meshram. The former was supported by the caste Hindus and the latter was a candidate set up by the Scheduled Castes Federation. The polling booth was situated at Indora. Indora, along with Laskari Bag, Bhankheda Road and Pachpaoli, is a strong-hold of the Scheduled Castes because they reside there in large numbers.

[3] On the day in question a procession supporting Mr. Ruikar started from Chitnis park at 9 A. M. and going along Pachpaoli-Indora Road went up to the polling booth. From there it returned but on its return journey instead of passing Pachpaoli-Indora Road it turned into Laskari Bag. It is said that the processionists were not armed but carried only some flags in their hands. Nothing seems to turn upon this fact and it has not to be decided whether the accused had any right of self-defence against the processionists. When the procession reached Laskari Bag the Mahars, about two-three hundred strong, came out to stop it. It is said that the Mahars were armed with spears, pointed bamboos and lathis. For a time the two crowds faced each other and there was some stone-throwing but it is not clear as to whether any person was hit in the stone-throwing. It is also apparent from the record that the processionists also indulged in stone-throwing. The police arrangements on the day were very strong and the police immediately intervened and allowed the procession to pass on. While the procession was going the Mahars attacked its rear and caused the procession to break up. The members of the procession ran all over the place for their lives but one boy who was in his teens, being about 15/20 years of age, was not so fortunate in getting away. He tried to pass through a barbed-wire fence and his clothes got entangled in it, he was caught and dragged by the feet and stabbed with a spear with the result that he died. Later the mob which had been attacking the processionists moved in a body to the neighbouring mohalla which is called Kurhalkar Peth where Kostis, who are rivals of the Mahars, reside. In this area the mob indulged in more stone-throwing upon the houses. The police in the meantime had got reinforcements and they managed to throw a cordon round the area and to start arresting persons. 44 persons were thus arrested and of these 31 were actually prosecuted with the result stated above.

[4] The incident properly falls into three phases. The first phase is when the stone-throwing stops and the procession is allowed by the police to move on. The second phase involves the murder of the boy later identified to be one Govardhan Kirad. The third phase comprises the stone-throwing in the Koshti mohallas. The learned Sessions Judge has correctly remarked that the difficulty of the case lies really in finding out which of the accused formed part of the unlawful assembly and at what stage. The story as deposed to by the witnesses is clear and really admits of no denial. That such events happened cannot be gainsaid. The only question is who are responsible and whether the accused are some of those persons thus responsible.

[5] The investigation was mainly conducted by Hanuman Prasad, Sub-Inspector—Station officer, Pachpaoli—(P. W. 55) and was completed on 14-5-1946 when the diary was closed. Many witnesses were examined by the police during the course of the investigation and the statements of these witnesses recorded under S. 161, Criminal P. C., were not incorporated in the diary but were kept separate, written on plain sheets of papers. These statements were filed with the diary and at the commencement of the trial the accused applied for certified copies under S. 162 of the Code. The diary along with the statements was handed over to the Reader concerned for making necessary copies. There is an acknowledgment by the Reader showing that he had received the statements : vide Ex. P. 24. Later on it was discovered that the statements had disappeared. The explanation of the Reader was that he had misplaced them and could not, therefore, trace them. We are not in a position to say who was responsible for this carelessness but the fact remains that the accused did not get copies of these statements and were thus hampered in their cross-examination because they could not contradict the witnesses.

[6] The learned Sessions Judge in paras. 29 and 30 of his judgment has discussed this matter and holds that the accused were not prejudiced by the loss of these statements. His reasons are that they could not have shown anything more than the fact that the witnesses were present at the spot and in what capacity. He thinks that it was most unlikely that a description of the accused was given in them, and as there are two identification parades the accused have not been prejudiced because they can use these identification parades. The learned Sessions Judge, therefore, concludes thus:

"I do not, therefore, see what advantage the accused were likely to derive if the copies of the statements had been made available to them and how they can be said to have been prejudiced by the failure to give them copies. Since no prejudice has been caused to the accused persons, there cannot be said to have been any failure of justice in this case and the trial cannot be said to be vitiated for the reason that the accused did not have the copies of the case diary statements under S. 162, Criminal P. C."

[7] The right which is given to the accused under S. 162 Criminal P. C., to use the previous statement made to the police for the purpose of contradicting a witness is a valuable right. In a case of this type where there are considerable possibilities of mistakes the only check is the earliest version. The statements of these witnesses would have shown what was their exact position at the time they observed the riot, how they themselves behaved and how many persons they named or were able to identify. It is useless speculating as to the contents of these statements without having them before us. It is also clear that the statements would have been useful to the accused in many ways. We are not in a position to say what those statements were and the learned Sessions Judge does not say what his source of information was. Sub-Inspector Hanuman Prasad, P. W. 5, who investigated the case said that some witnesses did give some description. If these statements did not name the accused persons or give any description, there would be grave prejudice to the accused because they would lose thereby a right which in a trial of this character cannot but be described as of very great importance. This matter was discussed by one of us (Bose J.) in I. L. R. (1937) Nag. 178[1] and it was pointed out that in such cases it is difficult to gauge the extent of prejudice which might have been caused to the accused. Similarly, a Divisional Bench of this Court in I. L. R. (1945) Nag. 151[2] held that the omission to give copies of such statements to the accused is repugnant to the fundamental rules of practice necessary for the due protection of prisoners and the safe administration of justice. It was held in that case that where an accused was robbed of his statutory rights of cross-examination and thereby denied the opportunity of effectively destroying the testimony of prosecution witnesses the evidence of such witnesses was not admissible. This rule was repeated by the same Divisional Bench in I. L. R. (1946) Nag. 126[3] and the law laid down in I. L. R. (1945) Nag. 151[2] was re-affirmed. While, with due respect, we doubt whether the evidence of witnesses in Court becomes inadmissible as a result of the deprivation of the right of cross-examination inherent in S. 162, Criminal P. C., we are in agreement with the Divisional Bench that where there is prejudice to the accused the testimony of such witnesses must be received with extreme caution, and the Court would be entitled in a suitable case even to ignore altogether such evidence. Every case will have to be decided on its own facts. While in the present case we do not propose to base our conclusion on the inadmissibility of the evidence of these witnesses, we are satisfied, however, that the evidence of witnesses whose statements were recorded by the police suffers a great deal because of the loss of the statements. We consider that we should not act upon the evidence of these witnesses. This is what was laid down in three cases of this Court and is the only reasonable course to follow. In a case where 200/300 persons are alleged to have committed a riot there is no guarantee that false names have not been introduced by partisan witnesses especially when feelings run high.

[8] The learned Sessions Judge has gone by a rule of thumb and he decides the guilt or otherwise of an accused according to the number of witnesses identifying him. This is a rule which, though satisfactory in ordinary cases, is fraught with considerable difficulties and dangers in a case of this type. We are, therefore, convinced that we should not act on the evidence of these koshti witnesses particularly as they were not questioned at the earliest stage and as probably their statements were deliberately not taken by the police. Their unanimity about the same accused itself makes their evidence worthless because it is inconceivable that they could have seen the same accused at different moments of time in a mob consisting of over two to three hundred persons. If the police had recorded proper statements on 12-4-1946, when they had known that these persons were potential witnesses there would have been some check upon subsequent concoction which is now impossible. Further these Kuralkar Peth witnesses cannot be used to corroborate the witnesses who saw the assault on Goverdhan Kirad because that assault had already taken place before the mob entered their mohalla. It is the membership of the unlawful assembly at the time of the assault that is vital in connection with S. 302, Penal Code, and on that point these witnesses are silent. In fact the police witnesses and these witnesses speak of two separate phases and there would be no real corroboration except as to the identity of the accused. For this purpose we regard the Kuralkar Peth witnesses as useless and consider it unsafe to act upon their evidence even though we do not reject their evidence as inadmissible on any other ground.

[9] The result is that there is no sufficient or cogent corroboration of the testimony of Ibrahim Khan P. W. 2, Rampal P. W. 48 and Daud Khan P. W. 15. We must, therefore, give the benefit of the doubt to the accused named by them as there is the evidence of but one witness against every such accused.

[10] In the end we must say that this unfortunate result has been occasioned mainly because of slack investigation and failure to record proper statements in time and the loss of such statements, as had been recorded, through the carelessness of somebody. But if such things happen it is obvious that the last person to suffer should be the accused and the Courts should in such circumstances be anxious to see that no prejudice is caused to them. We allow the appeal of the appellants before us. We set aside their convictions and the sentences passed against them and order that they be released.

G. J. Ghate—for Applicants.

W. B. Pendharkar Addl. Government Pleader — for the Crown.

Order. — This is an application for revision against the order passed in Cri. Revn. No. 110 of 1945 of the Court of Mr. M. D. Deoras, Sessions Judge, Wardha, decided on 19-7-1946. The applicants in the case have been bound over for Rs. 200 with one surety each for a period of one year to keep the peace and be of good behaviour under S. 107, Criminal P. C. This revision application raises almost one point and that is the tenability of S. 107 proceedings in the circumstances of the case. The facts are that one

Mt. Anjir Bai died on 14-6-1945. Her husband named Zapa owned two fields Nos. 8/2 and 15/1 of mauza Poti in Khel B of patti No. 1 in the Hinganghat tahsil. After Zapa's lifetime Anjira Bai entered into possession and continued in possession of these two holdings till her death. After her death disputes broke out between the applicants on the one hand and one Suryabhan on the other. This Suryabhan is the son of Zapa's sister. Applicants 1 to 5 are some distant relatives of the deceased Zapa, and claimed to be his heirs. Suryabhan lived with Anjira Bai and after her lifetime, it is alleged by the prosecution, he entered into possession of these holdings and continued cultivation thereof. According to him the applicants were obstructing him and wanting to take forcible possession of these agricultural lands and hence on 28-8-1945 he filed an application in the criminal Court under S. 145, Criminal P. C. The trial Court sent the papers to the police for enquiry and report and the police put up a challan under S. 107, Criminal P. C., against the applicants, (non-applicants in the trial Court and two others). These two other persons have been discharged and therefore there is no need to mention them any further. The trial Court bound over the applicants as stated above, and that order was upheld by the learned Sessions Judge. Hence this application for revision.

[2] The applicants urge that the case, having been started under S. 145, Criminal P. C., could not be converted into one under S. 107 of the Code and that the proceedings were, therefore, without jurisdiction. The argument is that an application had already been made under S. 145, Criminal P. C., and that admittedly the dispute relates to immovable property. It is thus argued on the strength in 35 Cal. 117,[1] that in such cases the Court is compelled by the terms of S. 145, Criminal P. C., to go on with the trial and that the directions in that section are mandatory. It is undoubtedly true that in that case it was held by the Calcutta High Court that S. 145 proceedings cannot be converted into proceedings under S. 107, Criminal P. C. The view taken in the Calcutta High Court case was, however, dissented from in 34 ALL. 449,[2] at page 450, and later a Full Bench of the same Court in 39 Cal. 150,[3] took a view which is contrary to that stated in 35 Cal. 117.[1] Recently in A. I. R. 1942 Pat. 331,[4] the view taken in 39 Cal. 150,[3] has been approved. Following therefore, these later cases, I hold that the proceedings under S. 107, Criminal P. C., are not without jurisdiction.

[3] It was next contended that the Court should not have given any finding as to the rights of the parties, and that in any case proceedings ought to have been taken against both the sides. In a case where there is a dispute concerning land, it is proper to take action against both sides if S. 107, Criminal P. C., is to be resorted to, because binding over one party puts the other at an advantage. But it cannot be said that the Court should not investigate the title and the facts of possession of the parties. Such an enquiry falls legitimately within the purview of criminal Court acting under S. 107, Criminal P. C., because the Court has to find out who is the aggressor and who has the right on his side. Such an inquiry into the title may be out of place in S. 145 proceedings which are mainly concerned with the maintenance in possession of a person dispossessed within two months of the passing of the preliminary order but they cannot be said to be out of place where action is not taken under that section but under S. 107, Criminal P. C. The case relied on by the learned counsel appearing on behalf of the applicants from this Court, namely, A. I. R. 1923 Nag. 54,[5] is clearly distinguishable because that case proceeded upon its own special facts. In my opinion, therefore, Courts were perfectly justified in finding out the respective rights of the parties and also in giving a finding as to the fact of possession.

[4] It was next urged that some of the reports made by Suryabhan himself show that he had been dispossessed and that if the matter had been under S. 145, Criminal P. C., the possession of the applicants would have been maintained because they would have been found in possession within two months of the passing of the preliminary order if one had been passed. All that is not germane to the matter because the Court elected to act under S. 107, Criminal P. C., and if that section was applied the fact of possession comes in merely as corroborative proof of the bona fides of the parties concerned. Both the Courts below have given a concurrent finding that Suryabhan is prima facie the preferential heir and they also found that Suryabhan was in possession when the applicants took it into their heads to disturb his possession and to get it for themselves. These findings are binding upon me and I do not propose to examine the evidence on which they have been based. In fact I was not invited to go into the evidence because, as I have stated above, the learned counsel for the applicants argued the case purely as a point of law as to whether S. 107 proceedings could be entertained. In my opinion, the decision of the two Courts below is correct and the application is dismissed.

Mangalsingh Sonelal—Accused — Appellant
v. Emperor.

Criminal Appeal No. 41 of 1947, Decided on 7-4-1947, from order of 1st. Addl. Sessions Judge, Jubbulpore, D/ -15-2 1947.

(a) Evidence Act (1872), S 27—Extensive statements unconnected with any fact discovered thereby should not be tendered in evidence.

The use of the words 'so much of such information' in the section clearly postulates that long and detailed statements unconnected with any fact thereby discovered are not to be proved. That information alone is provable which advances the investigation of the police in any way. It should be information of a relevant fact and there must be some fact discovered as a result of the information. It is for the investigating officer to record the words of the accused persons and it is for the Court to see what portion or portions should be allowed to be proved. These two functions have to be kept distinct. It is not for the investigating officer to make a selection. He must record the information given by the accused. It is for the Court to consider the admissibility of the information. In doing so the Court must not allow extensive statements unconnected with any fact discovered thereby to be tendered in evidence. [Para 7]

(b) Criminal trial—Circumstantial evidence.

Circumstantial evidence must prove the presence of the accused in the vicinity of the place of the offence and not at a place a long distance away. [Para 5]

Dr. T. J. Kedar—for Appellant.
B. L. Gupta—for the Crown.

Judgment. — Mangal Singh the appellant before us has been convicted under S. 302, Penal Code, and sentenced to death by Mr. Adhar Sinha, First Additional Sessions Judge, Jubbulpore, for the murder on 26th September 1946, of one Mulchand Gadari, in Sessions Trial No. 61 of 1946 decided on 15th February 1947. There was another accused by name Rambagas alias Ramdas but he has been acquitted.

[2] The prosecution case is that for some time previous to the deceased's murder there had been enmity between him and this prisoner over the partition of a field called gewadaha bandh (also called Bandhwa) situated in Amardar in the Murwara tahsil and belonging to the father of the accused. The deceased, who earned his livelihood partly as a milkman, had set out on the morning of Thursday the 26th September from his house to go to Katni-Murwara where he was supplying milk to Lachhmanprasad (P. W 23). According to this prosecution witness Mulchand did not arrive with milk that day. There is evidence to show that he set out in the morning from the village. See Rambisal (P. W. 6), Sonelal (P. W. 7) and Mt. Kaushalya (P. W 24) The accused has not challenged this fact. Thereafter two days later a skeleton was found in a shrub-jungle called Binjhi Zhadi (also called Binjhi Har). This was identified as that of the murdered man. The skeleton was not capable of being identified but in fact there is very little doubt on this point because near the skeleton were found a lot of things belonging to the deceased. The pot of milk with which he had set out on Thursday the 26th was found with sour milk in it. Along with this pot was a measure for measuring milk and ration-cards bearing the name of the deceased were also found nearabout. His clothes and ornaments which he had worn in his ears were also there. In fact almost all the property, except two gold ornaments, were found, and since the deceased disappeared about this time it is easy to infer that the corpse was that of Mulchand.

[3] Medical evidence in this case is inconclusive because the doctor could not give any cause of death. The doctor was, however, able to tell us that the bones belonged to an adult male who might be between 30 and 50 of age and this also fits in with the probabilities pointing to the fact that the dead body was that of Mulchand. Though the medical evidence is not clear as to the cause of the death it is again easy to conclude that Mulchand was killed. The clothes which were near the corpse were sent to the Chemical Examiner and the Imperial Serologist and the Chemical Examiner found on the dhoti (Art. A) and bandi (Art. B) stains of blood, the stains being 36″ and 20″ in sizes. The Imperial Serologist said that this blood was of human origin and this puts the matter beyond all reasonable doubt. The deceased was hale and hearty when he set out that morning In fact he was carrying a pot of milk which according to his usual daily practice was to have been delivered at the house of P. W. 23. He was in good health, and there is nothing to show that he came by his death in any other way. We have no difficulty, therefore, in holding that Mulchand was done to death.

[4] The question then arises whether the appellant was responsible for the death of the deceased. The evidence led by the prosecution against him is entirely circumstantial but for a confession leading to the discovery of a stick stained with human blood and the testimony of an eye-witness of the occurrence. (Their Lordships then discussed certain evidence and proceeded.)

[5] Further we feel that evidence of P. W. 8 does not furnish such a vital link in the prosecution case as the Crown contends. The place where P. W 8 had seen the accused was some distance away from the actual scene of occurrence and though the accused were going in the same direction as taken by Mulchand it cannot be denied that the road to Katni lay in the same direction. P. W. 8 admits that she did not know this prisoner or his name before that date though she says that she did see him in the village prior to that day. If that was a fact it is strange that she did not disclose this to the people of the village at once because in the first information report many names have been mentioned and suspicion has been cast upon different persons. The learned Additional Sessions Judge did not rely upon this evidence as a link in the circumstantial chain against the accused. We agree with him that the matter is not free from doubt apart from the little value which can be attached to this evidence, because the distance between the scene of occurrence and the place where P. W. 8, saw this prisoner is great. Circumstantial evidence must prove the presence of the accused in the vicinity of the place of the offence and not at a place a long distance away.

[6] The next set of witnesses are Mt. Gauri (P. W. 9) and Mt. Rambai (P. W. 11). The former saw the accused Mangal Singh and the acquitted accused Rambagas going towards Katni side from Amradar on the morning of Thursday. They were going towards Binjhi Zhadi. The footpath which leads to the Katni road in fact passes through Binjhi Zhadi and anybody wishing to go to Katni has to pass Binjhi Zhadi. The place where witness saw the accused is 1½ miles away from the spot where the murder is alleged to have taken place. In our opinion this evidence is inconclusive for the reasons we have indicated above. It is significant that P. W. 9 says that there was nothing in the hands of either of the accused at the time. She also says that it was at about 8 or 9 A. M. which we have shown above would be very late. The next witness, P. W. 11, does not support the prosecution case because she says she saw the acquitted accused going alone in a direction which was opposite to the direction he should have taken if he wanted to go to Binjhi Zhadi. She says nothing about this prisoner and, therefore, her evidence as against this convict is inconclusive. The next witness Mt. Rambai (P.W. 11) speaks of having seen Mulchand on a Wednesday going with a pot of milk. This witness was not questioned which Wednesday it was, and this leaves her evidence absolutely vague. The circumstantial evidence, therefore, is exceedingly slender and of a suspicious character to boot. This evidence was rejected by the learned Additional Sessions Judge also.

[7] We next take up the question of the discovery and the statements leading to it which have been made the foundation of the conviction by the learned Additional Sessions Judge. The accused Mangal Singh is alleged to have made a statement which is recorded as Ex. P-3. It is a long statement of nearly three typed pages and the bulk of it is clearly inadmissible. The manner in which S. 27 is to be used is often not properly understood. All that the accused states is not to be tendered in evidence against him but only such portion of his statement as relates distinctly to some fact discovered as a result of the statement. The use of the 'words so much of such information' in the section clearly postulates that long and detailed statements unconnected with any fact thereby discovered are not to be proved. In our opinion that information alone is provable which advances the investigation of the police in any way. It should be information of a relevant fact and there must be some fact discovered as a result of the information. It is for the investigating officer to record the words of the accused persons and it is for the Court to see what portion or portions should be allowed to be proved. These two functions have to be kept distinct. It is not for the investigating officer to make a selection. He must record the information given by the accused. It is for the Court to consider the admissibility of the information. In doing so the Court must not allow extensive statements unconnected with any fact discovered thereby to be tendered in evidence. The learned Additional Sessions Judge has not erred in the present case. He has made a selection but the practice of putting in the whole statement en bloc needs to be strongly discouraged.

[8] Examining the matter from this point of view we find that we have to exclude almost the whole of the statement but for a few stray sentences which alone are admissible. The discovery was of a genda which is nothing but a rough log of wood and the statement which is relevant is a reference to the genda and its discovery. This is what Mangal Singh said:

"The genda was thrown only in bushes . . . I can come and show the axe and the genda where they have been kept . . . genda after beating with has been thrown there only which I would show . . ."

According to the prosecution this genda was shown by the accused in a bush, a short distance away from the dead body of Mulchand, and it was found to be stained with human blood, the blood stain being 12" in dimension. A glance at the map would show that the articles belonging to the deceased were strewn about the place and a sack was in fact lying about 10 feet away from the place where the genda was lying. The witnesses say that everybody was looking for the articles belonging to the deceased and that this prisoner was also assisting in this. This is deposed to by Kadhola Kotwar (P. W. 1), Baldeogir (C. W. 1), Angad (P W. 3)—the mukaddam of the village. In fact Lutain (P W. 15) who has reason to be most hostile to the accused inasmuch as he was Mulchand's brother, says:

"In the jungle all the people tried to find out the articles, and some persons got something and others got other things. Mangalsingh picked up the stick and gave it to the Sub-Inspector. It was found in the bushes which were about one chain from the foot-path."

[9] This statement, if true, (and we see no reason why it should be false) would seriously affect the prosecution case. It is true that the prosecution case hangs on this discovery and if the discovery is doubted, nothing remains. There was one fact which would have strengthened the prosecution case considerably and that was the statement of the accused that he had cut this genda from seja tree and he had volunteered to show the stump. This statement was made on 1-10-1946 but no effort was made to follow this up. In fact the police went to the stump on 6-10-1946 and then article P was cut out. Again no effort was made to connect the seja stump with the genda and the matter was left in doubt. It was easy to examine an expert to show that article P and the genda were part of the same wood and cut from the same tree. If this had been done the discovery of the genda would have acquired considerable evidentiary value.

[10] In the absence of all this what have we got? The accused said that the genda used for beating was thrown in a bush. The genda was found but under circumstances which, on Lutain's testimony, are suspicious. There were two witnesses to the recording of the memorandum, Ex P-3, but only one of them was examined. P. W. 1 says that Mangal Singh was one of the persons left to watch the dead body and the articles lying there. This is also the evidence of Angad, P. W. 3. P. W. 3 also says:

"Another Sub-Inspector had come. The stick Article J. was found lying near the place where the brass jar was lying Manglia—accused Mangal Singh—had handed it over to the Sub-Inspector. It was not visible to us. It was concealed in shrubs and Manglia alias Mangal discovered it."

This again accords more with what Lutain, P. W. 14 has said on the subject.

[11] There is yet another circumstance which creates suspicion. The memorandum, according to P. W. 7, Sonelal, was signed by Dulichand, Bhagwatdin, Lutain and P. W. 7. There is no signature of Lutain or Sonelal on this exhibit. In our opinion whenever such doubt is created it is the duty of the prosecution to examine the other persons whose signatures in fact appear on the document. If one were to accept P. W. 7's evidence, there would be evidence to show that this memorandum was not the real one. We do not say that in this case we are prepared to accept Sonelal's evidence but the fact remains that one of the prosecution witnesses casts doubts upon the authenticity of Ex. P-3.

[12] Dulichand's evidence does corroborate the Sub-Inspector as to the production of the genda (article J) by the accused. This genda was found to have a stain of 12" in length, of human blood. If the evidence of its discovery were good it would be a strong piece of evidence. We are, however, extremely reluctant to accept the discovery at its face value and to hold on that evidence alone that the appellant is guilty of murder. There is no corroboration of any kind and we do not consider that the presence of four or five minute stains of human blood on the clothes of the accused makes the case much stronger. Blood may get on the clothes of these villagers in many different ways. The stains were also minute and the Chemical Examiner could not give their dimensions.

[13] The evidence of motive is also slight. P. Ws. 1 and 3 say that the quarrel was old and took place 5/7 years ago. It is true that the son of Mulchand, Sonelal, P. W. 7 and one Lutain, P. W. 14 put the date of the quarrel only three months before the incident but they are interested witnesses. Mt. Tulsi, P. W. 13, in whose presence Mangal had uttered threats is not corroborated. She admits that when the threat was uttered there were about 60 labourers present. Why none of them was examined is not satisfactorily explained.

[14] In our opinion the evidence in the present case is exceedingly slender and we are not satisfied as to the discovery. We give the benefit of the doubt to the accused. His conviction and the sentence passed on him are set aside and he is acquitted and ordered to be released.

V. R. Deopujari—for Applicant.
V. T. Kedar—for Non-Applicant.

Order.—The non-applicant, Dayabhai, son of Ramchandra Bhatia, Gujarathi, resident of Bohari, taluq Bardoli, district Surat, was prosecuted at the instance of the applicant Laxman who is a munim of the firm of Dinkar Trimbak and Co., Akola, under Ss. 406 and 420, Penal Code in the Court of the Honorary Magistrate, first class, Akola, but the latter discharged him on the ground that the Court had no jurisdiction to try him. The Sessions Judge, West Berar Division, upheld that finding and the applicant has now come up in revision to this Court.

[2] His case briefly stated was as follows: His firm is a holder in due course of a cheque of Rs. 250 drawn on 3-7-1943 by Chhaganlal Zaverchand of Balimoria in favour of Gandabhai Gopalji on a Bombay branch of the Baroda Bank. The firm endorsed the cheque in favour of the Dhutpapeshwar Company of Panwel and despatched it to that organisation by post, but it was lost in transit and the applicant apprised the Bank of Baroda of this. He also sent notices to the drawer and drawee of the cheque as well as to all prior endorsees including the non-applicant. The drawer of the cheque thereafter informed him that he had issued a duplicate cheque in favour of the original drawee. The cheque subsequently reached the non-applicant, but instead of passing it after endorsement to Dr. Sharma, in whose favour he had endorsed the original cheque he actually presented it for, and secured payment.

[3] An offence is under S. 177, Criminal P. C., ordinarily inquired into and tried by the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction it was committed; and in the present case it was clear that no offence was committed in Akola. Section 179 ibid, however, provides that :

"When a person is accused of the commission of any offence by reason of anything which has been done, and of any consequence which has ensued, such offence may be inquired into or tried by a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction any such thing has been done, or any such consequence has ensued."

[4] The two Courts below held, and rightly in my view, that the "consequence" referred to in that section is confined to that which is an ingredient of the offence for which an accused person is being tried. It is true that Niyogi J. (then A. J. C.), relying on 46 Bom. 641[1] held to the contrary in A. I. R. 1933 Nag. 33,[2] but he made no reference in that case to the reported decision of Halifax A. J. C. in 20 N. L. R. 72[3] in which that Bombay case was dissented from. He also made no reference to the Full Bench case in 55 Bom. 59[4] in which the earlier Bombay case was overruled and it was held that the "consequence" in S. 179, Criminal P. C. is the consequence which must form part of the offences charged. Mitra also at page 573 of his Code of Criminal Procedure, 10th edition, notes that all the Chartered High Courts are now agreed that the "consequence" is confined to that which is an ingredient of the offence for which an accused person is being tried.

[5] In Cri. Revn. No. 500 of 1946[5] decided by me on 21-9-1946, I had expressed agreement with the view taken in I. L. R. (1942) 2 Cal. 507[6] that S. 179, Criminal P. C. applies to those offences, which by their very definition consist of an act and its consequence, for example, culpable homicide, but it does not apply to a criminal breach of trust. An offence of criminal breach of trust can, as is clear from the provisions of sub-s. (2) of S. 181, Criminal P. C., be inquired into or tried by a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction any part of the property which is the subject of the offence was received or retained by the accused person or the offence was committed. It follows from this that if the non-applicant had, as was asserted by the applicant's learned counsel, cashed the cheque in question at Surat, the appropriate Court there had jurisdiction to try the case. An Akola Court manifestly had no jurisdiction whatever as the money was not received or retained and the offence was not committed at that place. The findings of the Courts below were, therefore, correct. This application is dismissed.

Criminal Revn. No. 549 of 1946, Decided on 18-1-1947, from order of Addl. Sessions Judge, Bhandara, D/- 5-8-1946.

Penal Code (1860), S. 161 — Offence under — Essentials of.

To constitute an offence under S. 161, it is sufficient that there is an offer of a bribe to a public servant, in the belief that he has an opportunity or power in the exercise of his official function to show the offeror a desired favour, although the public servant has in reality no such power. Performance of the act which is the consideration for the bribe is not essential. But it is essential that the bribe should be obtained 'as a motive or reward' : 15 A. I. B. L. Gupta, Government Pleader — for the Crown.

Order. — The applicant, Gopeshwar Mandal was convicted and sentenced to undergo 6 months' rigorous imprisonment and to pay a fine of Rs. 500 under S. 161, Penal Code by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Gondia, and his appeal was dismissed by the Additional Sessions Judge, Bhandara. He has now come up in revision. The prosecution case was briefly stated as follows. The applicant was the General Clerk in the Watch and Ward Department of the Bengal Nagpur Railway at Gondia, where he worked under Raghunathsingh (P. W. 2), Circle Inspector. Appointments as B class watchmen were made by the latter and when Maniklal (P. W. 5) approached the applicant for a post of that kind he was told that he would have to pay him Rs. 60 for it. Maniklal then went away and met Mr. S. N. Ghosh (P. W. 3), Railway Section Officer, who produced him before R. D. Verma (P. W. 1), Sub-Inspector, on 27-6-1945. Maniklal told him of the applicant's demand and he was brought before N. R. Lakhkar (P. W. 4), First Class Magistrate, two days later. Maniklal also apprised Mr. Lakhkar of the applicant's demand and a trap was arranged to catch the applicant. Mr. Lakhkar noted down the numbers of the six 10 rupee notes produced by Maniklal and returned them. Maniklal and others then went away but returned again at about 6 P. M., when Mr. Lakhkar re-verified the numbers of the notes and wrapped them in a piece of newspaper which he initialled. Ramsingh (P. W. 6) and others then set out in the direction of the applicant's house. Maniklal and Ramsingh, in accordance with the orders given to them, went ahead and entered the applicant's compound while the others waited in the vicinity. Maniklal and Ramsingh emerged from the compound shortly afterwards and Mr. Lakhkar learned from Ramsingh that the applicant had asked them to wait as there was a doctor at his house. About a quarter of an hour later, the doctor and another person left the house on bicycles. Maniklal and Ramsingh then entered the applicant's compound and there was a talk between him and them at the gate. When the applicant asked Maniklal if he had brought the money, Maniklal told him that he had and handed him the packet containing the notes. Thereupon, the applicant opened the packet, counted the notes, wrapped them up again and gave them to his 7 year old daughter with the direction to place them in his house. Maniklal gave the application Ex. P-4 to the applicant. Then just at that point after Ramsingh had given a signal Mr. Lakhkar and his companions entered the applicant's house. When he was directed to produce the packet given to him by Maniklal, he denied that he had received any such thing, but when his house was searched the packet was found on a table in a room with the notes in question in it.

[2] The applicant in examination denied that he had demanded or received any gratification from Maniklal, although he admitted that the latter had interviewed him on the evening in question. He asserted that the six 10 rupee notes did not belong to him and refused to admit that they had been seized from his house. In his written statement which was filed 3 months later, his version was that while he was talking to Dr. Bharat (D. W. 1) and Dr. Bajpai (D. W. 2) on the verandah of his house, his daughter brought in a cover which, according to her, had been delivered to her by somebody. He asked her to keep it on the table and she did so. This was the cover which was subsequently seized, but he had no knowledge of its contents prior to the seizure. He attributed his incrimination to Mr. S. N. Ghosh who was prompted thereto by Mr. P. K. Roy, Raghunathsingh's assistant, who was inimical to him. The two Courts below have accepted the prosecution case and rejected the defence case; and I am in entire agreement with those findings. The prosecution irrefragably established the applicant's guilt and I have no doubt whatever of the fact that the position taken by him in defence was an afterthought. When Mr. N. R. Lakhkar, First Class Magistrate and his companions rushed into the applicant's compound, disclosed their identity and asked him to produce the packet given to him by Maniklal, he disclaimed the receipt of anything and the packet in question was subsequently found on a table in a room of his house. That was on 29-6-1945 and when the applicant was examined on 10-1-1946 he specifically stated that the six 10 rupee notes in question did not belong to him, that he had not received them from Maniklal and that he could not say whether they had been seized from the table. On 30-4-1946, however, he admitted that the packet which had been seized from his room was the packet in the case and his explanation was that his daughter had brought it to him and that when she had told him that somebody gave it to her he told her to place it on the table. It is immediately obvious that if there had been any truth in that belated version, it would have appeared in his examination and even before that it would have been disclosed when Mr. Lakhkar and his companions raided his house.

[3] The applicant was not an ordinary rustic or a young man but was, on the other hand, General Clerk in the Watch and Ward Department of the Bengal Nagpur Railway at Gondia and 45 years of age. He was, therefore, a man who, if he had obtained the Rs. 60 by licit methods, would, when interrogated concerning them, not only have admitted it but displayed unbounded indignation at having been suspected. The suggestion that the notes had been planted on him without his knowledge because of the antagonism of Mr. P. K. Roy was palpably devoid of any substance. In the evidence the only thing which emanated concerning their enmity was that there had been a quarrel between them regarding a water tap, and it is impossible to suppose that because of a petty dispute of that kind the applicant would have been involved in a big and planned case of this kind. Moreover, Mr. P. K. Roy was not stationed at Gondia when the offence took place and it was obvious that a person of Mr. Lakhkar's standing would not have inculpated the applicant without justification. It was, on the other hand, clear beyond doubt that Maniklal had previously approached the applicant and that the latter had told him that he would have to pay Rs. 60 to secure appointment to the post of watchman. It follows that the evidence of the two doctors who were examined in the applicant's behalf was so far as it related to the version put forward by him in his written statement untrue and I am clear that they so deposed because he and they are on friendly terms.

[4] The contention that the conviction under S. 161, Penal Code was wrong as the applicant had no authority to appoint a person to the post of watchman cannot prevail. In 51 ALL. 467[1] it was held that to constitute an offence under that section read with S. 116 it was sufficient that there was an offer of a bribe to a public servant, in the belief that he had an opportunity or power in the exercise of his official functions to show the offeror a desired favour, although the public servant had in reality no such power. In 28 Cal. 344[2] a peon in the Salt Department who had taken money in respect of the issue of saltpetre licences, was adjudged liable under S. 161 on the ground that the object of the illegal gratification was the rendering of a service to the persons who paid it. In 31 Bom. 335[3] a Division Bench made the following observations:

"As the Magistrate observes, the performance of the act which is the consideration for the bribe is not essential. But it is essential that the bribe should be obtained 'as a motive or reward.' That phrase evidently means 'on the understanding that the bribe is given in consideration of some official act or conduct'."

[5] In A. I. R. 1941 Lah. 276[4] it was pointed out that S. 161 does not require that the public servant must in fact be in a position to do the official act, favour or service at the time and the Division Bench followed the rule in the Allahabad case supra. With these authorities I am in respectful agreement and it was obvious in the case before me that the applicant had promised to show favour to Maniklal in the exercise of his official functions although he had no authority to appoint him. The conviction was, therefore, in order and it is maintained. Cases of this kind should, as I have had occasion to observe in the past, be visited deterrently and I concur in the learned Additional Sessions Judge's comments regarding the sentence awarded to the applicant. That sentence was neither harsh nor excessive when regard is had to all the circumstances of the case and the necessity for discouraging bribe-takers and it is confirmed. This application is dismissed.

Giansingh Baldevsingh — Applicant v. Emperor.

Misc. Criminal Case No. 48 of 1946, Decided on 18-10-1946.

Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 491—Illegal or improper detention—What is—Release from jail obtained on strength of bogus order—Re-arrest — Application under S. 491—Maintainability.

An accused who was undergoing a sentence of imprisonment was released before he had served his full sentence on the strength of a bogus order from the military authorities but was again re-arrested. The accused applied under S. 491 for his release on the ground that his previous release was absolute and unconditional and hence, his subsequent arrest was illegal:

Held, that the release obtained on the strength of a bogus order could not be said to be an unconditional release. It was in fact akin to escape. The accused was therefore in legal custody and the application under S. 491 could not be entertained. The fact that the actual perpetrator of the fraud was not caught or that the accused was not shown to have been a party to this plot could not affect the question. [Para 6 & 7]

Y. P. Verma—for Applicant.

R. Kaushalendra Rao, Government Pleader — for the Crown.

Order.—This is an application by one Giansingh under S. 491, Criminal P. C. He was a Havildar Quarter Master Sergeant and was sentenced by a Court Martial to two years' imprisonment and in the middle of August 1943 was sent to the Central Jail, Jubbulpore to serve his sentence. He contends that he was unconditionally released on 27-1-1944 and was wrongfully re-arrested in the Punjab on 9-6-1946 on a requisition by the Central Provinces' Police. His contention is that his release on 27-1-1944 was an absolute and unconditional release and that he is now in illegal confinement.

[2] The Crown to whom notice was given contends that the release on 27-1-1944 was obtained by means of a forged document and that the forgery was discovered very shortly afterwards as the result of which the machinery was put in motion to arrest the accused. That arrest was not effected until more than two years had passed, and it is contended that the applicant Giansingh is now in jail lawfully serving the unexpired portion of his sentence.

[3] The Crown, on being called to answer the case, has eventually produced the relevant documents, after a warning that they must be prepared to meet the applicant's case on 15th October, the day fixed for hearing. They have produced the document on which the release was given. It runs as follows :

"Subject:— Suspension of Sentence. No. 672/Sigs/23.
H. Q. S. T. Cs. (I).
Jubbulpore, C. P.
26th January 1944.

To,
The Superintendent, Central Jail,
Jubbulpore, C. P.

9237 Ex-Hav. Mohd. Khurshid. no. 1. STC (I).
A1873 Ex-Hav. Gain Singh no. 1 STC (I).

The parents of the abovenamed had put up an appeal to the Adjt. Gen. in India G. H. Q. (I), Simla. The A. G. has thoroughly considered their case and has finally decided and remitted twelve months rigorous imprisonment of 9237 Ex-Hav. Mohd. Khurshid and Sixteen months rigorous imprisonment of A1873 Ex-Hav. Gain Singh and such punishment will reckon from 19-6-1943, that is from the date on which the individuals concerned were placed under close arrest in Military cells.

Would you please take necessary action and inform the individuals accordingly. The letter supersedes the warrant already forwarded to you by hand on 10-8-1943.

A. H. Wilson
for Lt. Colonal
Commandant. Signal-Training Centres (India)."

It will be noticed that the word 'colonel' is misspelt. On behalf of the applicant it is contended that this is a genuine document and that the release of Giansingh was inspired by a judgment of the Sessions Judge of Jubbulpore delivered on 18-1 1944 in which he acquitted two civilians who were alleged to have been concerned with Giansingh in the offence for which he was convicted by Court Martial, and it is alleged that in that judgment the learned Sessions Judge expressed some doubt on the propriety of Giansingh's conviction. It is alleged that the Army Authorities took notice of this judgment and in consequence ordered the remission of 16 months' imprisonment of Havildar Giansingh. Now the date of the Sessions Judge's judgment is 18-1-1944. It is quite inconceivable that an appeal by Giansingh's parents should have been made to the Adjutant General in respect of a conviction in the previous July and that the Adjutant General could within a week of the judgment of the Sessions Judge have thoroughly considered Giansingh's case and remitted the order to the Headquarters of the Supply and Transport Corps at Jubbulpore to have the balance of the sentence cancelled. It is also significant that in this egregious document Gainsingh's name is consistently misspelt and differs in spelling from the original commitment which was received in August 1943. It is astonishing that the Superintendent of an important jail like Jubbulpore should be deceived by this document. The Crown has also produced a letter from the Headquarters of the Supply and Transport Corps, Jubbulpore, stating that his letter did not emanate from their office and also a formal certificate to that effect.

[4] The learned counsel for Giansingh contends that there has been a suppression of the actual warrant of supersession inasmuch as the Superintendent of the Central Jail in writing to Mr. Verma, the counsel, refers to a supersession warrant having been received by his office on 27-1-1944 and that consequently he was released. Also the District Superintendent of Police in a memorandum dated 25-7-1946 to the District Magistrate of Jubbulpore, a copy of which was filed by Mr. Verma, states :

"On 27-1-1944, an unknown individual presented a bogus memo at the Central Jail gate with a bogus supersession warrant which showed the sentence of Ex-Havildar Giansingh had been reduced from 2 years to 1 year."

[5] In fact there never was a supersession warrant, and the misapprehension that there was one has arisen from the loose terms used by the Superintendent of the Central Jail in writing to Mr. Verma. He mentions one document alone and calls it the supersession warrant. The document itself as a matter of fact purports to be a supersession warrant (vide the last sentence of the letter) and makes no mention of any warrant accompanying. It is elementary that any warrant of commitment or any supersession warrant is written on a prescribed form. The warrant of commitment which has been produced is in the prescribed form and S. 109, Indian Army Act, also lays down in the note to the section that there is a prescribed form of warrant when any sentence is set aside or varied. An affidavit has been sworn by the Superintendent of the Central Jail that no warrant in the due form has been received in his office from the Military Authorities. Neither is it possible to contemplate that a genuine warrant should have been accompanied by a palpably bogus letter. We are satisfied that the release was ordered on the strength of the letter alone and that no other document was brought by the person who brought the letter.

[6] It is further contended that the fraud cannot be said to have been established until the perpetrator of it has been caught and convicted for the fraud in a Court of Law. We cannot for a moment agree with this contention. It is enough that we are satisfied that the release was obtained by a bogus order. Neither can the fact that it has not been established that Giansingh himself was a party to this plot affect the issue. The accused was released before he had served his full sentence, and released as the result of a fraudulent act by someone who was interested in him. Such a release is not, as he states in his affidavit, an unconditional release. It was in fact akin to an escape. The validity of the actual order on which he was re-arrested has not in itself been challenged. The challenge rests on the basis that the letter delivered at the Jail gate on 26th January has not been proved to be a bogus document.

[7] Giansingh is accordingly legally in custody and no application under S. 491, Criminal P. C. for his production before the Court and release can be entertained.

Judgment. — Kamta Prased, predecessor-in-title of the respondent, Kalyanjibhai, obtained a preliminary decree for foreclosure on 6-8.

1928 in Civil Suit No. 19 of 1927 in the Court of the Additional District Judge, Raipur, for Rs. 1,06,227-10-0 against Malhar Rao, father of the appellants. The decree was slightly modified in appeal on 17-10-1929. The estate of Malhar Rao, zamindar of Amgaon, was taken under the superintendence of Court of Wards, Bhandara. In 1932-33 the Court of Wards sold two of the mortgagad villages and paid Rs. 41,000 towards a part satisfaction of the decree. On 3-9-1932 the parties filed a compromise petition in the trial Court in which they stated that the judgment-debtor had paid Rs. 41,000 through Court of Wards, Bhandara, and the balance of the decretal amount was agreed to be paid in 21 instalments commencing from 1-6-1933. One of the terms of the compromise between the parties was that in default of payment of any two instalments the entire amount was to be exigible and the amount was recoverable with interest at 6 per cent. per annum. Two instalments were not paid and the decree-holder made an application on 7-7-1934 for a final decree. The debtor applied to the Debt Conciliation Board, Gondia, for conciliation of his debts and the proceedings were pending till 18-5-1938 when the application was dismissed. In the meantime, Malhar Rao died on 22-8-1937 and the appellants were substituted as judgment-debtors in his place as his legal representatives.

[2] The appellants contested the right of the decree-holder to get a final decree for foreclosure because of the compromise dated 3-9-1932. This contention was rejected by the trial Court and the order of the trial Court was confirmed by the High Court on 18-7-1938. In the meantime, the appellants filed a suit in the Court of the Additional District Judge, Bhandara, for a declaration that the decree for foreclosure was not binding on them and obtained an order from that Court under O. 21, R. 29, Civil P. C., on 24-3-1938 for stay of proceedings in the suit (Civil Suit No. 19 of 1927). The decree-holder contested that order in the Court of the Additional District Judge, Raipur, which held that in spite of the stay order the Court had power to make the decree final and ordered on 29-7-1939 that the decree will be made final unless the judgment-debtors paid Rs. 10,000 in Court on or before 1-10-1939. The judgment-debtors did not pay that amount and filed an application on 7-10-1939 for review of that order, for extension of time for payment and for instalments. The application was rejected and a final decree for foreclosure was passed on 7-10-1939.

[3] The judgment-debtors filed Miscellaneous Frst Appeal No. 43 of 1940 in this Court on 1-12-1939 against the order of the trial Court refusing to extend time for payment, but they did not file an appeal against the final decree for foreclosure. The Division Bench by the order dated 5-4-1940 held that the appeal was against the order and not against the decree and that the appeal was within time. During the pendency of the appeal, the decree-holder assigned his rights to the respondent Kalyanjibhai on 16-2-1944 for Rs. 65,000. Kalyanjibhai was substituted as a decree-holder in place of Kampta Prasad on 7-3-1945. The appeal was dismissed by Hemeon J. by an order passed on 6-11-1946.

[4] The judgment-debtors filed a Letters Patent appeal on 11-11-1946 against the order passed by Hemeon J. On 20-11-1946 the decree-holder applied for dismissal of the appeal on the ground that no Letters Patent appeal was tenable against the order of Hemeon J.

[5] The question for decision is whether a Letters Patent appeal lay against the order of Hemeon J. passed on 6-11-1946. The decision turns on the determination of the point whether the order of Hemeon J. is a judgment within Cl. 10 of our Letters Patent.

[6] This Court following a dictum of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in A. I. R. 1925 P. C. 155=27 Bom. L. R. 872[1] has consistently held in a series of cases that the term "judgment" in the Letters Patent of our High Court means, in civil cases, a decree and not a judgment in the ordinary sense : see L. P. A. No. 3 of 1940,[2] I. L. R. (1942) Nag. 41,[3] I. L. R. (1943) Nag. 453,[4] I.L.R. (1944) Nag. 827[5] at p. 828, I.L.R. (1945) Nag. 286,[6] I. L. R. (1946) Nag. 482,[6a] L.P.A. No. 10 of 1944[7] and L. P. A. No. 17 of 1942.[8]

[7] The appellants had made an application in the trial Court for extension of time under O. 34, R. 2 (2), Civil P. C. That application was rejected by the order dated 7-10-1939. The appellants filed miscellaneous appeal No. 43 of 1940 in this Court under O. 43, R. 1 (0) against the order of the trial Court refusing to extend the time for payment of mortgage money. Hemeon J. dismissed the appeal on 6-11-1946. His order is not a decree as defined in S. 2 (2) but is an order as defined in S. 2 (14), Civil P. C.

[8] The learned counsel for the appellants strenuously contended that the term "judgment" in Cl. 10 of our Letters Patent includes also orders which are not decrees and that the view of this Court to the contrary requires reconsideration because of the decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in 9 Cal. 482[9] and submitted that if necessary the matter may be referred to a Full Bench for decision. The other cases cited by the learned counsel were considered in our decision reported in I. L. R. (1945) Nag. 286[6] and we do not propose to cover the same ground.

We shall restrict ourselves to the examination of the decision in 9 Cal. 482[9] and to the submissions which the learned counsel for the appellants made when he sought to distinguish the other Privy Council cases.

[9] In order to understand the decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in 9 Cal. 482[9] it is necessary to set out briefly a few relevant facts. One Shombhu Chunder Chowdry made a grant of three villages to his sister, Kasiswari Debya. She made a will under which she bequeathed the moiety of the estate to her daughter Chundermoni, and if she adopted a son, to that adopted son, otherwise to her (Chundermoni's) daughters and the other moiety was to remain in possession of her daughter-in-law Kali Sundari till her adopted son attained majority and after he attained majority they were to receive equal shares in case there was a misunderstanding between them. On the death of Kasiswari in 1871, Hurrish Chunder, son of Shombhu Chunder, took possession of the villages which his father had granted to Kasiswari, whereupon Chundermoni and Kali Sundari on behalf of her adopted son filed a suit for possession of the estate and for mesne profits. The dispute between the parties was as regards the nature of the right which was conferred on Kasiswari, whether she had absolute estate or a mere life estate. The trial Court held that Kasiswari took an absolute estate under the grant, that she executed a will, that Chundermoni took an absolute estate under the grant on the death of her mother but that having elected to take under her mother's will and to admit Kali Sundari, the co-plaintiff, to a half share of the estate, both the plaintiffs were entitled to maintain the action against the defendant. The Court passed a decree for possession and mesne profits. The trial Court did not decide the question of adoption because, whether the adoption was proved or not, Kali Sundari had the right to immediate possession.

[10] On appeal the High Court held that Kasiswari had a mere life estate and was not competent to dispose of the property by will, reversed the decree of the trial Court and dismissed the suit of the plaintiffs. In the meantime, Chundermoni had died and her daughters appealed to the Privy Council and by an Order in Council the judgment of the High Court was reversed and the decree of the Subordinate Court was affirmed. Their Lordships of the Judicial Committee held that Kasiswari took an absolute estate and that the plaintiffs were entitled to succeed in the suit but that it was not necessary to decide what their rights may be inter se. The decision of the Privy Council is reported in 5 I. A. 188.[10]

[11] Kali Sundari was not a party in appeal before their Lordships of the Judicial Committee. A certified copy of the Order in Council was granted to the daughters of Chundermoni. During the pendency of the appeal before the Privy Council, Hurro Kinkurry, a daughter of Chuudermoni, purchased the right, title and interest of her sister Bhoobun Mohini and she in her turn sold her right and interest in the subject-matter of the suit to Hurrish Chunder and made over to him the certified copy of the decree which she had received from the Privy Council. On 13-5-1880, Kali Soondari on behalf of her adopted son applied to the High Court for execution of the order of the Judicial Committee under S. 610, Civil P. C. (Act 10 [X] of 1877) which corresponds to O. 45, R. 15, Civil P. C., 1908. The application came up for hearing before Pontifex J. Two objections were raised before him viz., (1) that the application was not tenable because it was not accompanied by a certified copy of the decree of Her Majesty in Council and (2) that the decree of the original Court upheld by the Privy Council could only be executed as a whole, and not by one of the two plaintiffs. Pontifex J. overruled the first contention but upheld the second and refused the application for execution. The applicant was left to a regular suit to enforce her claim to any share of the property.

[12] A Letters Patent appeal was filed against the order of Pontifex J. and a preliminary objection was taken that that order was not a judgment within the meaning of Cl. 15, Letters Patent, which corresponds to Cl. 10 of our Letters Patent. All the three Judges were of opinion that the order of Pontifex J. was wrong and that he was bound to transmit the Order in Council to the trial Court for execution. Mitter J. held that the learned Judge who disposed of the application was bound to transmit the Order in Council to the trial Court for execution and his refusal to do so was a judgment within Cl. 15, Letters Patent and was appealable. That was also the view of White J., who applied the definition of Couch C. J. in 8 Beng. L. R. 433[11] and held that the order under appeal was an order of rejection and was a judgment because it held that the applicant was not entitled to have the decree of the Privy Council executed. Garth C. J. held that Pontifex J. was bound to transmit the Order in Council to the trial Court for execution but that his refusal to transmit the Order in Council did not amount to a "judgment" as Pontifex J. was performing a mere ministerial duty. The appeal was allowed according to the opinion of the majority of the Judges, and the order of Pontifex J. was reversed. The case is reported in 6 Cal. 594.[12]

[13] Hurrish Chunder filed an appeal to the Privy Council against this order. Their Lordships of the Judicial Committee held that the provision of S. 610 requiring the filing of a certified copy of the Order in Council along with the application was directory and that as the defendant who had the copy neglected to file it, as he ought to have done, in the Court, the failure to file the certified copy of the order in the circumstances of the case was excusable.

[14] Their Lordships of the Judicial Committee stated that they were unable to subscribe to the doctrine that a decree can only be executed as a whole and not partly by one of the plaintiffs—a doctrine which, as pointed out by the High Court, would lead to the consequence that a defendant could prevent the execution of a decree by buying the interest of one of the plaintiffs. The view of their Lordships was that Kali Sundari was entitled to possession of half of the estate in question, that Chundermoni had no right in that suit to dispute the title of the plaintiff to present possession of a moiety of the land, and that the defendant, who had purchased the share of her (Chundermoni's) representatives had no better rights. The defendant was consequently a wrongdoer; and as against him she had an immediate right to possession.

[15] Their Lordships accordingly affirmed the judgment of the High Court coupled with a declaration that the decree was to be executed in respect only of the share of which Kali Sundari was entitled under and by virtue of the will and that nothing in their judgment was to affect any right which the defendant may at any time have to question the validity of the adoption

[16] The reason for holding that the order of Pontifex J. was a judgment within the meaning of S. 15 of the Royal Charter of 1865 was stated by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee at p. 16 of 10 I. A. 4[9] in these terms :

"These learned Judges held (and their Lordships think rightly) that whether the transmission of an order under S. 610 would or would not be a merely ministerial proceeding, Pontifex J. had in fact exercised a judicial discretion and had come to a decision of great importance, which, if it remained, would entirely conclude any rights of Kali Soondari to an execution in this suit. They held, therefore, that it was a judgment within the meaning of section 15."

We have underlined (here italicized) a few words in order to bring out the full implication of the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council. The order of Pontifex J. was a decree within the meaning of S. 2, Civil P. C., 1877, though it was not so specifically stated. The ratio decidendi of the case was thus not inconsistent with the dictum laid down by their Lordships in a subsequent case, A. I. R. 1925 P. C. 155,[1] that the term "judgment" in the Letters Patent means in civil cases a decree and not a judgment in the ordinary sense.

[17] The contention of the appellant in 9 Cal. 482[9] based on S. 588, Civil P. C., 1877, that the appeal against the judgment of Pontifex J. was incompetent was negatived by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee at p. 17 of 10 I. A. 4,[9] where they stated :

"It only remains to observe that their Lordships do not think that S. 588 of Act 10 [X] of 1877, which has the effect of restricting certain appeals, applies to such a case as this, where the appeal is from one of the Judges of the Court to the Full Court."

The relevant portion of S. 588 of the Code was in these terms :

"An appeal shall lie from the following orders under this Code and from no other such orders."

Clauses (a) to (w) specify the orders against which appeals were provided. After enumerating the orders, it was enacted that the orders passed in appeals under this section shall be final.

[18] Section 591 enacted that except as provided in Chap. 43, no appeal lay from any order passed by any Court in the exercise of its original or appellate jurisdiction; but if any decree was appealed against, any error, defect or irregularity in any such order, affecting the decision of the case, was to be set forth as a ground of objection in the memorandum of appeal. These sections were reproduced in identical terms in the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882. These sections have been reproduced with certain alterations in the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, as S. 104 and O. 43, R. 1, and S. 105 respectively. The scheme of the two Codes 1877 and 1882 was that the provisions relating to appeals were collected in part VI; Chap. 41 dealt with appeals from original decrees, Chap. 42 with appeals from appellate decrees, Chap. 43 with appeals from orders, Chap. 44 with pauper appeals and Chap. 45 with appeals to the Queen in Council. Section 540 enacted that unless when otherwise expressly provided by the Code or by any other law for the time being in force, an appeal lay from the decrees, or from any part of the decrees of the Courts exercising original jurisdiction, to the Courts authorized to hear appeals from the decisions of those Courts.

[19] Sections 582 and 591 were in Chap. 43. Sections 610 and 611 were parts of Chap. 45 which dealt with appeals to the Queen in Council. Section 610 dealt with procedure to enforce orders of the Queen in Council. Section 611 stated that the orders made by the Court which enforced or executed the orders of Her Majesty in Council, relating to such enforcement or execution, were appealable in the same manner and subject to the same rules as the orders of such Court relating to the enforcement or execution of its own decrees.

[20] Chapter 19 dealt with the execution of decrees. Section 244 thereof stated that certain questions were to be determined by the Court executing a decree and not by a separate suit. Under the Code of 1877, one of the questions which the executing Court had to determine was a question arising between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed or their representatives, and relating to the execution of the decree. Under S. 244 (c) of the Code of 1882, the executing Court was empowered to decide any other questions arising between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed, or their representatives, and relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree or to the stay of the execution thereof.

[21] "Decree" was defined in S. 2, Civil P. C. 1877, as the formal order of the Court in which the result of the decision of the suit or other judicial proceeding was embodied but did not include an order in appeal remanding a suit for re-trial. There was no definition of "order" in the Code.

[22] "Decree" was defined in S. 2, Civil P. C., 1882, as "the formal expression of an adjudication upon any right claimed, or defence set up, in a civil Court when such adjudication, so far as regards the Court expressing it, decides the suit or appeal. An order rejecting a plaint, or directing accounts to be taken, or determining any question mentioned or referred to in S. 244, but not specified in S. 588, is within this definition : an order specified in S. 588 is not within this definition :"

"Order" was defined as the formal expression of any decision of a civil Court which is not a decree as above defined.

[23] Any order passed by an executing Court relating to execution, satisfaction, or discharge of a decree between the parties was a decree and consequently an appeal lay against that order under S. 540 of the Code. The scheme of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908 is, however, different. The Code consists, (i) of that which is termed 'the body of the Code' and (ii) of the rules. The body of the Code is fundamental and is unalterable except by the Legislature; the rules are concerned with details and machinery and can be more readily altered. Thus, it will be found that the body of the Code creates jurisdiction while the rules indicate the mode in which it is to be exercised. It follows that the body of the Code is expressed in more general terms, and it has to be read in conjunction with the more particular provisions of the rules: see 48 Cal. 148[13] at p. 152.

[24] "Decree" is defined in S. 2 (2) as

"the formal expression of an adjudication which so far as regards the Court expressing it, conclusively determines the rights of the parties with regard to all or any of the matters in controversy in the suit and may be either preliminary or final. It shall be deemed to include the rejection of a plaint and the determination of any question within S. 47 or S. 144, but shall not include

(a) any adjudication from which an appeal lies as an appeal from an order, or

(b) any order of dismissal for default. . ."

We have not reproduced the explanation which defines a preliminary and a final decree, as it is not necessary for the purpose of the disposal of this appeal. Section 47 (1) enacts that all questions arising between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed, or their representatives, and relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree, shall be determined by the Court executing the decree and not by a separate suit. Section 96 states that save where otherwise expressly provided in the body of this Code or by any other law for the time being in force, an appeal shall lie from every decree passed by any Court exercising original jurisdiction to the Court authorised to hear appeals from the decisions of such Court.

[25] The relevant portion of S. 104 is given below:

"(1) An appeal shall lie from the following orders, and save as otherwise expressly provided in the body of this Code or by any law for the time being in force, from no other orders: (i) any order made under rules from which an appeal is expressly allowed by rules.

(2) No appeal shall lie from any order passed in appeal under this section."

The section enumerates the several orders from which an appeal lies. The words underlined (here italicized) in sub-s. (1) have been introduced in the section which were not in the corresponding section 588 of the Code of 1877 or of 1882.

[26] Section 105 (1) states that save as otherwise expressly provided, no appeal shall lie from any order made by a Court in the exercise of its original or appellate jurisdiction; but where a decree is appealed from, any error, defect, or irregularity in any order, affecting the decision of the case, may be set forth as a ground of objection in the memorandum of appeal.

[27] The procedure regarding execution of decrees and orders is contained in O. 21 of the Code. Order 41 deals with appeals from original decrees, O. 42 with appeals from appellate decrees, O. 43 with appeals from orders, O. 44 with pauper appeals and O. 45, with appeals to the King in Council. Order 45, R. 15 and R. 16 correspond respectively to Ss. 610 and 611 of the Codes of 1877 and 1882.

[28] The order of Hemeon J. was passed under S. 104 read with O. 43, R. 1 (o), Civil P. C. and was not an order passed in execution or under O. 45, R. 16 of the Code, and was consequently not a decree.

[29] The statement of their Lordships of the Privy Council at page 17 in 10 I. A. 4[9] already quoted above led to a divergence of judicial opinion as regards its interpretation. In 11 ALL. 375[14] at pp. 375-376, Sir John Edge C. J. as he then was observed:

"I do not understand their Lordships there to have held that S. 588, Civil P. C, does not apply at all to appeals attempted to be brought to the Full Court, from an order passed by a Judge of the Court. I think they were restricting their observations to the case before them. In that case the question arose from a so-called order of Pontifex J., in respect of an order of the Privy Council for execution. Pontifex J. considered that the decree as it then stood was not susceptible of execution, and refused to transmit the decree to the Court below. An appeal was preferred under S. 15, Letters Patent of the Calcutta High Court. Two of the Judges of that Court differed from the Chief Justice; the Chief Justice thinking that Pontifex J.'s order was merely ministerial, and the other two Judges apparently thinking that his proceeding was more than ministerial. Mitter J. pointed out that Pontifex J. ought to have acted under S. 244 of Act 10 [X] of 1877. Those two Judges considered that an appeal lay under S. 15, Letters Patent.

With regard to that case my observation is this, that apparently Mitter J. considered that Pontifex J. must have taken action or ought to have acted under S. 244 or S. 245 of the then Code. If Pontifex J. was acting under those sections, it was quite obvious that an appeal would lie. If he was not acting under those execution sections of the Code, but under S. 610 of the Code, I have difficulty in seeing how S. 588, Civil P. C., could have applied to what he did."

The decision in that case was that an order refusing leave to appeal in forma pauperis was not a judgment. This is the view which has been taken in this Court in L. P. A. No. 3 of 1940.[2]

[30] In 14 ALL. 226,[15] it was held that the order of a Judge of a High Court amending a decree was not a judgment and that no Letters Patent appeal lay against that order. Sir John Edge C. J. adhered to his previous observation regarding 9 Cal. 482[9] and stated that Letters Patent appeal undoubtedly lay against the order of Pontifex J. because he was acting or assumed to act under S. 244, Civil P. C., 1877. After a detailed examination of the provisions of the Code of 1877, he held that S. 588, which occurred in Chap. 43, could not be applied to orders made in appeals in cases which are under appeal to Her Majesty in Council under Chap. 45 and that consequently an appeal lay from the order of Pontifex J., whether he had or had not jurisdiction to make that order.

[31] The interpretation put by Sir John Edge on the statement of the Privy Council was approved by Benson J. in 20 Mad. 407,[16] but was, however, not accepted by the Madras High Court in 22 Mad. 68[17] and in 25 Mad. 555[18] and by the Calcutta High Court in 26 Cal. 361.[19]

[32] No useful purpose will be served by referring to these cases or to numerous other cases in which the statement of their Lordships of the Privy Council has been construed. We respectfully agree with the observations of Sir John Edge C. J. and Benson J. that the statement of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in 9 Cal. 482[9] has to be read with reference to the facts of the particular case and that S. 588, Civil P. C., 1877, did not apply to the order of Pontifex J. because it was passed by him in execution under S. 244 of the Code and that consequently a Letters Patent appeal lay against his order because it was a decree and that the statement cannot be read as laying down a wider proposition that an order, even though not a decree, was a judgment within the meaning of Cl. 15 of the Letters Patent (Cl. 10 of our Letters Patent).

[33] In 48 I. A. 76:48 Cal. 481[20] the question of the competency of a Letters Patent appeal from the order of Chowdhury J. refusing to grant letters of administration was not raised. A petition had been made to the Calcutta High Court on its original civil side in the exercise of its testamentary and intestate jurisdiction under the Probate and Administration Act, 1881, praying for the administration of the property of the husband of the petitioner with a copy of his last will annexed. This petition was opposed and a caveat was entered to her petition. The proceedings were contested and under S. 83, Probate and Administration Act, 1881, they were registered as a suit, and the proceedings ended with a decree passed by Choudhury J. rejecting the application of the petitioner. That a decree was passed by Choudhury J. in that case is clear from the statement of Panckridge J. in 43 C.W.N. 697[21] at p. 725. As there was a decree, Letters Patent appeal lay against the judgment of Choudhury J.

[34] An order had been passed in that case calling on the appellant to furnish security for costs under O. 41, R. 10, Civil P. C., 1908, and as there was no compliance with that order, the Letters Patent appeal was dismissed. The question for decision was whether O. 41, R. 10 applied to Letters Patent appeals. After consideration of the relevant provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure it was held that it did. After referring to certain cases their Lordships of the Judicial Committee observed at p. 83 of 48 I. A. 76,[20] that these are cases in which the point actually decided was that the appeal expressly given by Cl. 15 of the Letters Patent is not interfered with by S. 598 of the Code of 1882, on the principle generalia specialibus non derogant, following 9 Cal. 482[9] in 1882 and held that there was no reason why there should be any general difference between the procedure of the High Court in matters coming under the Letters Patent and its procedure in other matters.

[35] At page 82 their Lordships of the Judicial Committee compared S. 588 of the Code of 1882 with S. 104, Civil P. C., 1908, and observed :

"The change in the wording of S. 104 of the Act of 1908 is significant, for it runs, 'and save as otherwise expressly provided. . . . . by any law for the time being in force, from no other orders.' Section 15 of the Letters Patent is such a law, and what it expressly provides—namely, an appeal to the High Court's appellate jurisdiction from a decree of the High Court in its original ordinary jurisdiction, is thereby saved. Thus regulations duly made by orders and rules under the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, are applicable to the jurisdiction exercisable under the Letters Patent, except that they do not restrict the express Letters Patent appeal."

It appears that their Lordships of the Judicial Committee considered that the term "judgment" in the Letters Patent of the High Courts means "decree" and not "order," in the strict legal sense in which those terms are understood and defined.

[36] The learned counsel for the appellants was not strictly accurate when he stated before us that there was no reference to 9 Cal. 482 [9] in the subsequent Privy Council cases. It may be noted that Sir John Edge was a member of the Board of the Judicial Committee which decided 48 I.A. 76 [20] and A. I. R. 1925 P. C. 155.[1] The judgment in the latter case was delivered by Sir John Edge. His Lordship had dealt with the case in 9 Cal. 482 [9] at great length in 11 ALL. 375 [14] and 14 ALL. 226 [15] and it cannot be assumed that it escaped his Lordship's attention when their Lordships laid down the dictum in A. I. R. 1925 P. C. 155 [1] that the term "judgment" in the Letters Patent of the High Court means in civil cases a decree and not a judgment in the ordinary sense. This dictum was applied by Costello J. in 40 C. W. N. 1264.[22] In 43 C. W. N. 697 [21] at p. 725, a case not cited before us, the question for decision was whether the order of Ameer Ali J. in a proceeding relating to revocation of patent under the Indian Patents and Designs Act was a judgment. Both the Judges held that it was a judgment. Costello J. stated that it was a judgment within the definition given by Couch C. J., in 8 Beng. L. R. 433 [11] and it had also to all intents and purposes the same effect as the making of a decree and fulfilled the test laid down by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in A.I.R. 1925 P. C. 155.[1] Costello J. expressed his agreement with the views of Sir Arthur Page in 13 Rang. 457.[23] At p. 709 his Lordship observed :

"The question whether the dicta of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council which are cited by Sir Arthur Page, expressly or impliedly ought to be taken to prevail as against the definition given by Couch C. J. and other decisions of this and of the other High Courts in India has been canvassed in this Court time and time again. It is very much to be desired that this vexed question should be authoritatively determined once and for all either by a decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council or by a clarifying of the Letters Patent by an appropriate amendment or else by legislation."

Panckridge J. held that the order of Ameer Ali J. was a judgment within the meaning of Cl. 15 according to the definition formulated by Couch C. J. in 8 Beng. L. R 433 [11] and that the Letters Patent appeal was competent and gave reasons why he was not prepared to accept the dictum that the term "judgment" in Cl. 15 of the Letters Patent meant a decree in a suit and was of opinion that orders which are not decrees may yet be judgments and appealable as such.

[37] Two important decisions have been made after the case in A. I. R. 1925 P. C. 155.[1] In 13 Rang. 457,[23] it was held that it was not permissible to interpret the word "judgment" in any sense other than the one stated by their Lordships in A.I.R. 1925 P.C. 155.[1] In I L.R. (1942) Lah. 491 [24] the question was whether an order of a single Judge of a High Court reversing the order of the trial Court returning the plaint for presentation to proper Court and directing it to proceed with the suit was a "judgment" within Cl. 10 of the Letters Patent and was appealable. It was held on the basis of the test laid down in 35 Mad. 1 [25] that it was a judgment and a Letters Patent appeal was competent. With reference to the decision of the Judicial Committee, it was observed that their Lordships never intended to overrule the series of cases of the Calcutta and the Madras High Courts which defined the term "judgment" and it was stated that each case must be considered on its own facts and circumstances and while the tests propounded in Madras and in the Calcutta High Courts serve as a good guide for the Labore High Court it is not necessary to hold that those tests are comprehensive and exclude other cases.

[38] We reviewed the case-law on the point in I.L.R. (1945) Nag. 286 [6] and approved of the decision in 13 Rang. 457.[23] We have given the matter our most careful consideration and we have not been persuaded to alter our view or to refer the case to a Full Bench for a reconsideration of the question. In accordance with the view which has consistently been held in this Court, the order of Hemeon J. is not a judgment and consequently no Letters Patent appeal lay against the order. The Letters Patent appeal is consequently dismissed as not competent. The appellants will pay the costs of the respondents.

PADHYE J.

K. S. Mishra — Applicant v. Mahadeo Dewaji and others—Non-applicants.

Civil Revn. No. 152 of 1945, Decided on 27-8-1946, from order of Dist. Judge, Nagpur, D/- 26-1-1945.

Provincial Insolvency Act (1920), S. 79 — Rules under (Nag.), R. 14 — Remuneration of receiver fixed at certain percentage on realization and distribution—No realization — Receiver, if entitled to remuneration for labour and trouble — Quantum meruit applicability of — Appointment under S. 37 —Compensation for labour during this period—Provincial Insolvency Act, S. 37.

Where the remuneration of the receiver in insolvency under the terms of the appointment was fixed in accordance with R. 14 of the High Court Rules (Nagpur) framed under S. 79 at a certain per cent. on realization and distribution, the receiver is not entitled to any remuneration, by way of commission, if he was not able to sell any property, no matter what amount of labour and trouble he might be put to: 21 A. I. R. 1934 Bom. 158 and (1923) 1 K. B. 110, Rel. on. [Paras 2 and 3]

The fact that the debtors made the payments to the creditors privately is of no avail to the receiver, when the payments were in fact made after the annulment. The fact that the receiver was made an appointee under S. 37, during that period is of no consequence ; for an order under S. 37 does not continue insolvency proceedings for all purposes and the appointee under S. 37 has no longer by the mere fact of appointment, powers which a receiver has under the Act : 7 A. I. R. 1920 Mad. 219; 22 A. I. R. 1935 Cal. 168 ; 49 C. W. N. 161 and 22 A. I. R. 1935 Mad. 826 (F. B.), Rel. on. [Para 4]

He cannot even claim anything by way of compensation for his labour and trouble as receiver on principle of quantum meruit. This principle can generally be invoked only in the absence of an express contract as it is based on an implied promise to remunerate services rendered and there can, however, be no implication when parties have entered into an express agreement governing their rights and liabilities: 11 I. C. 820 (Cal.) and 17 A. I. R. 1930 All. 545, Rel. on. [Para 5]

But such an implied agreement can be inferred during the period of his appointment as appointee under S. 37, after the annulment, when there was no express agreement for this period. Consequently, when the appointee (original receiver) was unable to sell the property due to obstructive tactics of the debtor, the appointee is entitled to compensation for his labour on the principle of quantum meruit : (1831) 8 Bing. 14, Rel. on. [Para 6]

Order. — A few facts which are relevant for the decision of the question involved in this revision are as stated below. The non applicants (who shall hereinafter be called debtors) were adjudicated insolvents on 4-10-1933 on their own application dated 16-6-1932. The order of adjudication was annulled on 3-4-1935 as a result of a composition scheme sanctioned by the insolvency Court. The debtors failed to carry out the terms of the composition scheme and consequently they were re-adjudged insolvents on 26-3-1941. On 18-3-1941, Mr. K. S. Misra, Advocate (the applicant in this Court) was appointed a receiver and his remuneration was fixed at 3 per cent. on realizations and 2 per cent. on distributions. He continued as a receiver till 31-8 1944, when his tenure as a receiver ended as a result of an order of annulment passed by the insolvency Court under S. 43, Provincial Insolvency Act. As a part of the same order dated 31-8-1944, the insolvency Court again vested the insolvents' property in Mr. K. S. Misra with direction to bring it to sale with all speed. Thus the property remained vested in him as appointee of the insolvency Court from 31-8-1944 to 21-11-1944 when the insolvency Court finally gave up its control over the insolvents' property and it vested in the debtors.

[2] The only saleable property of the debtors was their share in the absolute occupancy fields. But for the interference and delaying tactics of the debtors, this property could have been brought to sale immediately and sold away in 1941. In that event the receiver would have been undoubtedly entitled to his commission on the sale proceeds and on the amount distributed amongst the creditors. In fact, however, the receiver was not able to sell the property and the position now is that in spite of his work as a receiver he is entitled to nothing by way of commission under the terms of his appointment which were fixed within the limits permitted by R. 14 of the High Court Rules framed under S. 79, Provincial Insolvency Act.

[3] I have no doubt that the receiver is not entitled to any commission under the express terms of the contract of appointment, howsoever unfortunate this may be. In 58 Bom. 583[1] their Lordships held that where parties have entered into an express agreement under which the plaintiff was entitled to get his brokerage if he brought about the transaction on certain terms, he can be entitled to his remuneration only in case of success, no matter what amount of labour and trouble he might be put to. That was also the view expressed in (1923) 1 K. B. 110[2] and I respectfully agree with that view.

[4] The learned counsel for the applicant urged that the payments alleged to be made by the debtors privately to their creditors should be deemed to have been realized and distributed by the receiver and the receiver's commission should be calculated on that basis; he relied on 43 Mad. 71.[3] This contention has however no force in view of the fact that at the time the debtors satisfied their debts privately they were no longer insolvents, the insolvency proceedings as such having already terminated as a result of the order of annulment. It was correctly pointed out by the Full Bench of the Madras High Court in 58 Mad. 908[4] that an order under S. 37 does not continue insolvency proceedings for all purposes and the person appointed under S. 37 has no longer, by the mere fact of his appointment, powers which a receiver has under the Act. The debtors were therefore completely free to satisfy their debts privately and to save their property from being sold away for the satisfaction of those debts. I do not also agree that the private satisfaction of debts by the debtors could be regarded as a collusive or fraudulent act on their part. The two cases cited from the Calcutta Weekly Notes, viz., 38 C. W. N. 1031[5] and 49 C. W. N. 161[6] as analogous cases are not of much help in the present case.

[5] The next question for consideration is whether the receiver can claim anything by way of compensation for his labour and trouble as a receiver on the principle of quantum meruit. This principle can generally be invoked only in the absence of an express contract as it is based on an implied promise to remunerate services rendered. There can, however, be no implication when parties have entered into an express agreement governing their rights and liabilities: vide 16 C. W. N. 753[7] at p. 761 and A. I. R. 1930 ALL. 545.[8]

[6] There is, however, another principle which requires consideration. As stated above, the saleable property of the insolvents consisted only of a share in the absolute occupancy fields and ordinarily that property could have been sold away by the receiver soon after his appointment. The debtors were, however, responsible for not allowing the receiver to sell the property. They started by obstructing the receiver and did not allow him to take possession of the property. They then managed to have a suit for partition filed (Civil Suit No. 26 of 1941 in the Court of Second Sub-Judge, first class, Nagpur) and to have the proceedings in the insolvency Court stayed as per stay order dated 12-2-1942. This stay order was vacated by 28-10-1942 but the debtors managed to have the proceedings in the insolvency Court stayed again by securing a stay order from the Debt Relief Court on the strength of an infructuous application which was subsequently rejected on or about 30-6-1943. The debtors thereafter applied to the insolvency Court and urged that their property should not be sold as long as a final decree for partition was not passed and it could not be passed as the parties did not pay, and I think intentionally, the requisite stamp for engrossment of the decree. The debtors also managed to hold up all proceedings by putting in a fresh application for composition which was rejected on 31-8-1943, i.e., on the same day on which the adjudication order was annulled. Thus the debtors managed successfully to prevent the receiver from bringing the property to sale until the very day of annulment. The question is, whether in cases where the debtors by their acts and conduct made it impossible for the receiver to make realizations and disbursements, they can deprive him of his reasonable remuneration on the principle of quantum meruit. In my opinion, they cannot and I am supported in this view by the decision in (1831) 8 Bing. 14.[9] In my opinion the terms of appointment did not apply to a situation like this and therefore it cannot deprive the Court of its equitable powers to compensate the receiver for the services rendered by him. I therefore hold that the receiver can be compensated on the principle of 'quantum meruit' for his work done during the term of receivership. It is quite plain that he can be so compensated for the services rendered by him as an appointee, i.e., after 31-8-1944 as there was no fresh agreement for his remuneration for this second period.

[7] Either as a receiver or as an appointee, Mr. K. S. Misra worked from 18-3-1941 to 21-11-1944. The order sheets in the insolvency case testify to the number of hearings he attended and the work which he had to put in. The amount of Rs. 75 awarded by the insolvency Court is in my opinion very inadequate and this was also the view, I infer, of the learned District Judge from the appellate judgment. I think that proper remuneration on the principle of quantum meruit should be at least Rs. 150, and I order accordingly. In view of partial success, I direct the parties to bear their own costs in this revision. The revision application is thus allowed partially without costs.

Letters Patent Appeal No. 11 of 1942, Decided on 19-12-1946, from judgment of Niyogi J. in S. A. No. 423 of 1938, D/- 2-2-1942.

*(a) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 47 — "Execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree"—Private sale of mortgaged property by judgment-debtor — Subsequent auction sale in execution of mortgage decree — Question whether private sale prevails against auction sale — Position of auction-purchaser.

The question whether in any particular case a stranger auction-purchaser is to be considered the representative of the judgment-debtor or of the decree-holder depends upon the nature of the dispute involved in the inquiry. [Para 6]

The question whether a private sale of the mortgaged property effected by the judgment-debtor in favour of a third person can prevail against the subsequent sale in execution of a final mortgage decree relates to the "execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree", and arises between the parties to the suit even when they are arrayed on the same side and the auction-purchaser is a representative both of the judgment-debtor and the decree-holder within the meaning of S. 47. The question can, therefore, be determined only by the Court executing the decree and not by a separate suit: 19 Cal. 683 (P.C.) and 7 A. I. R. 1920 Mad. 324 (F. B.), Rel. on; 3 A. I. R. 1916 P. Section 47 bars a suit only in respect of questions relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree. In respect of matters other than these an uncertified payment can be taken into consideration. Where, therefore, the judgment-debtor sells the mortgaged property to A in pursuance of an agreement between them and the decree-holder receives the purchase money in full satisfaction of the final decree for sale and subsequently the property is sold in execution of the decree and the sale is confirmed, A can bring a suit against the decree-holder and the judgment-debtor for damages sustained by him by reason of the breach of contract represented by the uncertified adjustment or for the recovery of the money paid thereunder. Judgment.—This is a Letters Patent appeal from the decision of Niyogi J.

[2] Nagarmal Potdar (respondent 1) got the house in dispute sold on 1-9-1933 by auction in execution of a final decree for sale obtained by him on a mortgage in civil suit No. 55 of 1931. It was knocked down in favour of the appellant Rambhau for a paltry sum of Rs. 120. Prior to this sale in execution, the judgment-debtor had sold the house in dispute on 26-8-1933 to one Mt. Tulsabai (who is represented in this appeal by respondent 3 Lilabai) in pursuance of an agreement between them and the decree-holder. Out of the purchase money the decree-holder Nagarmal Potdar received Rs. 1350 from Mt. Tulsabai and obtained a bond for Rs. 150 from the judgment-debtor, and he passed a receipt on 27-8-1933 in full satisfaction of his claim on the final decree, and delivered it to Mt. Tulsabai.

[3] On 2-9-1933 Ramchandra, the agent of the decree-holder, informed the Court of this full satisfaction and filed the receipt, whereupon the executing Court set aside on 30-9-1933 the sale held in execution on 1-9-1933. That order was, however, passed without notice to the auction-purchaser, whose application for permission to deposit 75 per cent. of the sale proceeds had already been rejected and who had been asked to take back the 25 per cent. of the purchase money which he had deposited. His formal application for confirmation of sale was also rejected on 25-9-1933. He, however, appealed to the District Judge and succeeded in getting the sale confirmed. The revision filed by the judgment-debtor in this Court proved unsuccessful.

[4] Thereupon, Mt. Tulsabai filed the civil suit, out of which this appeal has arisen, for possession of the house in dispute or in the alternative for refund of the price. That suit also included a claim for possession of the site CDEF in the plaintiff's map, the possession of which had been taken by the auction-purchaser along with the house in dispute, though it was, according to the plaintiff's allegation, not included in the mortgage. The plaintiff's claim for possession, except in respect of the site CDEF, was dismissed and she was granted a decree for possession of that site as against the auction-purchaser and for Rs. 1500 as against the judgment-debtor in the mortgage suit. Not only was this decree upheld in first appeal but the first appellate Court also ordered Nagarmal to pay Rs. 1350 with interest to Tulsabai. In second appeal to this Court that decree has been set aside and the plaintiff's suit has been decreed against the auction-purchaser Rambhau, who has been ordered to deliver possession of the house in suit along with the site CDEF to Tulsabai's legal representative Mt. Lila Bai. Leave to appeal having been granted this Letters Patent appeal has been filed.

[5] As remarked by Niyogi J. in paragraph 9 of his judgment in second appeal the question for decision in this appeal is whether the private sale effected on 26-8-1933 by the judgment debtor in favour of Mt. Tulsabai can prevail against the sale in execution of the final decree held on 1-9-1933, and that would depend upon what rights Mt. Tulsabai got by the sale in her favour. That in its turn would depend upon whether the adjustment made on 27-8-1933 by payment to the decree-holder satisfied the mortgage decree and killed it. There is no doubt that the decree would have been killed by the adjustment if it had been certified before the auction sale on 1-9-1933. The question is whether it was fully satisfied and killed even though the adjustment was not certified before that sale. Taking into consideration that adjustment, Niyogi J. came to the conclusion that the decree was satisfied and the rights of the parties under the decree were extinguished.

[6] With great respect we are of the opinion that the question whether the mortgage decree was satisfied cannot be gone into in this suit filed by Tulsabai. For the determination of this question she is the representative of the judgment-debtor (Mulla's Civil Procedure Code, 11th edition, at page 186, paragraph 4) while the auction-purchaser Rambhau is the representative of the decree-holder as the auction sale under the mortgage decree passed to him the interest of the mortgagor as well as the mortgagee and as the question whether in any particular case he is to be considered the representative of the judgment-debtor or of the decree-holder depends upon the nature of the dispute involved in the inquiry (Note 19 under S. 47 of Chitaley's Civil Procedure Code, Edn. 4, at p. 500). The question undoubtedly relates to the satisfaction of the decree and so, as provided in S. 47, Civil P. C., it could be determined only by the Court executing the decree and not by a separate suit. Had it gone before the Court executing the decree, it could not have recognized the uncertified adjustment as provided in sub-rule 3 of R. (2) of Order 21, Civil P. C., and it would have said that the decree was subsisting. This discussion will be found in 57 Cal. 403[1] and I. L. R. (1945) Mad. 827.[2]

[7] Mt. Tulsabai cannot be allowed to raise the same question regarding satisfaction of the mortgage decree simply by saying that her suit is based on the sale deed dated 26-8-1933. Section 47, Civil P. C. is a bar to it. So, the case will have to be decided on the basis that there was no adjustment of the mortgage decree, and the sale effected by the judgment-debtor in favour of Mt. Tulsabai will have to be taken as subject to the mortgage decree.

[8] The question whether a stranger auction-purchaser is a representative of the decree-holder is a vexed one which, in conjunction with the cognate question whether he is even a representative of the judgment-debtor, has given rise to much controversy. Opinion regarding this is so diverse and so hopelessly irreconcilable, and the matter has been debated at length so often, that we do not feel any useful purpose will be served by reviewing the authorities afresh. They will be found collected in Mulla's Civil Procedure Code, Edn. 11, pp. 193 to 195; and a full review of them will be found in the Madras Full Bench case reported in 43 Mad. 107.[3] It is enough for us to say that we agree with the learned Madras Officiating Chief Justice. Our reasons are in the main the same as his. We will set them out in brief.

[9] In the first place, their Lordships of the Privy Council enumerate the general policy of the law and the spirit in which S. 47 should be construed in 19 Cal. 683.[4] As to the general policy, their Lordships say:

"It is of the utmost importance that all objections to execution sales should be disposed of as cheaply and as speedily as possible."

And as to the spirit in which the section should be construed they say:

"Their Lordships are glad to find that the Courts in India have not placed any narrow construction on the language of S. 244' (now S. 47)."

[10] Next it is relevant to note that it was admitted before their Lordships that it was the practice in India to join the auction-purchaser to an application in the executing Court for setting aside the sale because he was the person most interested in the result. That practice has continued, and it would now be too late to contend that he is not a proper party. If he is a proper party then he is entitled to ask the executing Court for a decision regarding his rights under the sale. That, in our judgment, imports two conclusions.

[11] In the first place, we think it imports the result that such matters relate to the 'execution, discharge or satisfaction' of the decree. Indeed, all the Courts in India are agreed that this is so when the decree-holder himself purchases. We find it impossible to see how it could be otherwise when a stranger purchases.

[12] In the second place, we are of opinion that the question must in such a case arise 'between the parties to the suit.' Both the decree-holder and the judgment debtor are, in our opinion, interested in the result of the sale whichever way the decision goes. If the sale is upheld, the decree holder obtains satisfaction of his decree in whole or in part, and the judgment-debtor loses his property. If the sale is set aside, the decree-holder fails to obtain the satisfaction which he would otherwise have got and the judgment-debtor has to face execution to that extent afresh. Even though both may agree in the matter in any particular proceeding, that is to say, both the judgment-debtor and the decree-holder agree that the sale be upheld or set aside, they cannot escape the position that the result will and does affect a question which arises between them, namely, the satisfaction, or otherwise, in part or in whole, of the decree. Therefore, in our opinion, however the question arises, and whoever raises it, it does in the result affect one way or the other the discharge or satisfaction of the decree, and in so far as it does that the question is one which arises between the parties.

[13] Next we are of opinion that the stranger purchaser is a representative of the judgment-debtor as well as of the decree-holder. Once he purchases he is entitled to get possession in the execution proceedings and need not have recourse to a separate suit. He also has other remedies to which he can resort in execution, and here S. 146 of the Code can be called in aid. That provides that when any proceedings could be taken or application made by or against any person then it can equally be made by or against any person 'claiming under him.' As the learned officiating Chief Justice points out, this is not confined to those claiming title under him but has been extended to those who claim interests of other sorts falling short of title. Thus, not only has an assignee of the decree been held to come under S. 47 but also a person attacking the decree. If a person attacking the decree, then why not one who purchases the property and thereby extinguishes the decree in whole or in part? If the purchaser is a representative of both, then every time a question is raised as between him and one or other of the parties to the decree it is necessarily a question between him as representative of one side and the other party to the decree; and this is so even when the judgment-debtor and the decree-holder combine against him. If he holds a fraction of the interests of either side it can make no difference that the one who held that fraction before the sale chooses to abandon it after the purchaser's rights have accrued.

[14] In our judgment, the language of S. 47 is wide enough to embrace both the propositions we have set out above. That being so, we are of opinion that Courts should interpret the section in its wider form even if a narrower construction is possible. We say this because of the broad rules of policy to which their Lordships of the Privy Council refer and also because it obviates anomalies. Why should a matter between the stranger purchaser and the decree-holder be said to come under S. 47 and not one between the purchaser and the judgment-debtor? Why should it be relevant to try a matter under S. 47, when the judgment-debtor raises a question and the purchaser fights by his side, but not if the same question is raised by the purchaser alone and in the same sense?

[15] Our conclusion is : (i) that questions of the kind raised here relate to 'the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree'; (ii) that they arise between the parties to the suit—even when they are arrayed on the same side; and (iii) that the stranger purchaser is a representative both of the judgment-debtor and the decree-holder within the meaning of S. 47.

[16] In the view that we have taken, it is not necessary for us to discuss the cases relied upon by Niyogi J., which, we may say with great respect, do not lay down the propositions mentioned by him in his judgment. For instance, 44 Cal. 662[5] does not lay down that a sale effected by the judgment-debtor after the attachment for the purpose of satisfying the decree and with the consent of the decree-holder brings about the removal of attachment, because in that case the private sale was before the attachment in execution of the decree in which the property was subsequently sold : 41 Mad. 265[6] also does not lay down that attachment comes to an end by the satisfaction of the decree; it only mentions that O. 21, R. 55 provides that on satisfaction of the decree, whether made through the Court or certified to the Court, the attachment shall be deemed to be withdrawn.

[17] We have discussed the matter up till now on the basis that the adjustment was not certified. As a matter of fact, however, as already mentioned above, it was certified on 2-9-1933, i. e., a day after the auction sale. By this auction sale the interest of a third party, viz., Rambhau (the auction-purchaser) intervened, and as laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in 27 N. L. R. 95[7] at p. 100 that interest cannot be disregarded. So, so far as the auction-purchaser is concerned the case will have to be decided on the basis of the position as it stood on the day and at the time of the execution sale, i. e. on the basis that the adjustment is not certified.

[18] Section 47, Civil P. C. however, bars a suit only in respect of questions relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree. In respect of matters other than these an uncertified payment can be taken into consideration, and so Tulsabai could bring a suit against the decree-holder and the judgment-debtor for damages sustained by her by reason of the breach of contract represented by the adjustment or for the recovery of the money paid thereunder. She had claimed that relief also in her suit, and it was granted by the trial Court against the judgment-debtor and by the Court of first appeal both against the decree-holder and against the judgment-debtor.

[19] So far as the site CDEF is concerned Niyogi J. has upheld the concurrent finding of the trial Court and the Court of first appeal that it is included neither in the mortgage deed nor in the mortgage decree. This being a finding of fact cannot be interfered with.

[20] Mr. Mangrulkar for the decree-holder Nagarmal (respondent 1) brought to our notice that before Niyogi J. there were two second appeals, Nos. 423 and 558 of 1938, and that though the main judgment was the one delivered in Second Appeal No. 423 he also delivered judgment in Second Appeal No. 558 making a reference to his judgment in Second Appeal No. 423. Mr. Mangrulkar contended that there ought to have been two Letters Patent appeals also. As admitted however by the learned counsel full court-fee has been paid on this Letters Patent appeal, and not only does the memorandum of appeal mention the numbers of the two second appeals but the grounds mentioned therein are also common to both. We are therefore prepared to treat it as two memoranda of appeal on the same paper, and there is no force in the contention.

[21] The result is that the decree passed in the second appeal is hereby set aside except so far as the site CDEF is concerned and that passed by the Court of first appeal is restored to its full extent. As the decree-holder and the judgment-debtor both are responsible for non-certification we direct that all the respondents shall pay the costs of the Letters Patent appeal and of the second appeal to the appellant and shall bear their own. Costs in the trial Court and the Court of first appeal as ordered by the latter Court.

Second Appeal No. 47 of 1943, Decided on 16-10-1946, from appellate decree of Addl. Dist. Judge, Yeotmal D/- 7-10-1942.

*Civil P. C. (1908), O. 34, R. 1—Mortgage suit—Necessary parties—Person acquiring right of redemption by adverse possession during pendency of such suit—Transfer of Property Act (1882), S. 52.

If at the date of a suit for foreclosure or sale, the right of redemption is not in the mortgagor but has been already acquired, whether by transfer or by adverse possession, by a stranger who is not a party to the mortgage suit, his right of redemption is not affected by the eventual foreclosure or sale in the mortgage suit. Hence he cannot be dispossessed of the mortgaged property by the foreclosing mortgagee or the auction purchaser in execution of the mortgage decree without giving him an opportunity to redeem: 28 A. I. R. 1941 Nag. 72 ; 20 A. I. R. 1933 Mad. 583 (F. B.) and 23 A. I. R. 1936 Mad. 70, Rel. on. [Para 8]

But a person who has acquired a right of redemption by transfer or by adverse possession, during the pendency of the mortgage suit is not a necessary party to the suit as the right he acquired is hit by the principle of lis pendens. He is bound by the result of the lis which had already started before he acquired title by adverse possession and cannot claim a right to redeem the mortgaged property: 23 A. I. R. 1936 Mad. 70 and 28 A. I. R. 1941 Nag. 72, Rel. on. [Para 9]

T. P. Naik and N. B. Chandurkar—for Respondents 1 and 2 respectively.

Judgment.—The civil suit from which this second appeal by the defendant (hereinafter called appellant) arises was filed by the plaintiffs (hereinafter called respondents) for a declaration and if necessary, for possession of field No. 15 situate in Karanji Izara. The suit was decreed by the first Court and the appeal preferred by the defendant against that decree was dismissed by the lower appellate Court. The defendant has therefore filed this second appeal.

[2] It is common ground that the field was originally owned along with other fields in Karanji Izara by Mt. Bayanabai w/o Vyankatrao. She mortgaged her fields in the Izara village including the field No. 15 now in dispute with the plaintiffs on 16th February 1918, and 24th March 1920 and these mortgages merged in a fresh mortgage which she executed on 6-10-1922. The mortgagees enforced this mortgage in Civil Suit No. 61 of 1930 and obtained a final decree for foreclosure on 20-3-1937. They also obtained possession through Court on 28-12 1937.

[3] Waman Santoba, the husband of appellant 1 (now deceased) sued the mortgagees (respondents) for possession of field No. 15 under S. 9, Specific Relief Act, and this suit, No. 45 of 1938, was decreed in his favour. He took possession of the field No. 15 on 13-12-1938. The mortgagees-respondents had therefore to file the present suit.

[4] The appellant 1 who is the main contesting defendant urged that in Karanji Izara some fields including the field in dispute were owned by Mt. Bayanabai and some fields including No. 2 were owned by Maroti, her sister's son. It was alleged that in 1917 by virtue of an oral exchange between them, the field in dispute was exchanged by Mt. Bayanabai for field No. 2 of Maroti and thus Maroti became the owner of the field and was in possession thereof. On 28-3-1925 Maroti sold this field No. 15 to Waman by a registered sale deed for Rs. 5200/- which amount was utilized by Maroti for partial payment of the mortgage debt due to the respondents. The defendant thus pleaded a paramount title, tracing the title of Maroti to the oral exchange in 1917 i. e., prior to the date of the first mortgage In paragraph 10 of the written statement defendant No. 1 pleaded in the alternative as under:—

"Even if the oral exchange is held invalid or is not proved still the defendant submits that the defendant is a bona fide purchaser for value and his predecessor-in-title Maroti Baliram had been in exclusive possession of the field in suit as owner for more than 12 years prior to the suit i e. since 1917 (the year of oral exchange) or at least since January 1922 he had in any case acquired adverse title to it."

It appears from the record that Mt. Bayanabai died in 1931 during the pendency of the mortgage suit and Maroti Baliram and his son Bapurao were brought on record as her legal representatives. The mortgage decree was passed against them.

[5] Both Courts have found that the alleged exchange of the fields in 1917 is not proved and that the oral exchange in respect of the property worth more than Rs. 100/- was also invalid in law. It was further held on the strength of Ex. P. 16 that from 1918 to 1925 Bayanabai was shown as owner and Waman was shown as a tenant. Maroti's possession over field No. 15 was found to be from 1923, i.e. after the last mortgage and never before. Thus the plea of Maroti's title was negatived and Maroti could not consequently pass any title to Waman by virtue of the sale deed dated 28-3-1925. It was further held that Waman was not protected as a bona fide purchaser for consideration from Maroti as Waman knew that Maroti's title was defective as based on an oral exchange and in any case any reasonable enquiry on his part would have disclosed that Maroti had no title to the field. The appellate Court has fully agreed with the first Court on all these points.

[6] In this second appeal the learned counsel for the appellant attempted to attack the finding on the point of exchange, which, as is quite apparent, is a pure finding of fact. The finding is reached on evidence on record and is unassailable in second appeal. It may be noted that what is alleged in para. 10 of the written statement reproduced above does not make any legal plea. There is no plea of bona fide enquiry on the part of the purchaser, Waman, which is very essential before protection under S. 41, T. P. Act, can be invoked. Even apart from this, the plea has been negatived by both the Courts below and I agree with it. Thus the defence raised in the suit is completely negatived and as a result, the claim of the plaintiffs was correctly decreed.

[7] An attempt was made by the appellant in the lower appellate Court and also in this Court to travel beyond the pleadings on record and to raise new questions which are by no means pure questions of law. It was urged on the strength of S. 43, T. P. Act, that though Maroti may have no title during Mt. Bayanabai's life-time, he acquired the title to the field in dispute on her death in 1931 and this also enured to the benefit of Waman, the transferee from Maroti. It was alleged that Waman had thus acquired an interest in the equity of redemption and the mortgage decree in favour of the respondents did not extinguish Waman's right of redemption as he was not impleaded in the mortgage suit. The learned Judge of the lower appellate Court did not permit the appellant and, in my view, correctly—to raise this ground for the first time in appeal. It is quite obvious that this is not a pure question of law and depends on several facts which are neither pleaded nor proved. If this plea was raised at proper time the respondents would have met it by challenging several facts which are pre-requisites to the success of the plea. It is not known if Maroti was really the nearest heir of Mt. Bayanabai and the mere fact that he was brought on record as legal representative is not necessarily an admission of this fact. Moreover Bayanabai died during the pendency of the mortgage suit and if Maroti acquired title during the pendency of the suit and Waman's title was thereby perfected still the decree passed against Maroti would be binding on Waman. It was further contended for the first time in second appeal that Waman was in any case in adverse possession of the field in suit since 1925 and even on that ground he was a necessary party to the mortgage suit No. 61 of 1930. It has to be noted that Waman or his heirs at no stage offered to redeem the mortgage; on the other hand, the only plea that was raised was of a paramount title originating in 1917. The defendant cannot be permitted at any stage to turn round and take up points not only not raised in the pleadings but positively inconsistent with what was pleaded. Moreover at the date of the institution of the mortgage suit, Waman had acquired no interest in the equity of redemption and he was not a necessary party to the mortgage suit. The appellant cannot, therefore, be permitted to urge points not covered by the pleadings on record.

[8] Lastly, the learned counsel for the appellant, relying on I. L. R. (1942) Nag. 145,[1] contended that though Waman may not have acquired right of redemption at the date of suit, but as he had acquired it before the present suit of the plaintiffs and even before he was originally dispossessed by the mortgagees on 28-12-1937—the mortgagees respondents are not entitled to dispossess defendant 1, the successor in interest of Waman without affording him an opportunity to redeem the interest acquired by adverse possession on payment of proportionate portion of the mortgage amount. The principle on which the reported decision rests is found at page 152 of the report:

"When there is a mortgage the original rights to the property are split up between the mortgagor and the mortgagee, some residing in one and the rest in the other. When the mortgagee eventually forecloses (or buys in a case of sale), the two rights coalesce. But if the mortgagor no longer has that portion of the rights which reside in him at the date of the mortgagee's suit it is by no means clear that the mortgagee can obtain them by foreclosing the mortgagor (or bringing the mortgaged property to sale), and omitting from the action the person in whom these rights really reside. It is immaterial for this purpose whether the stranger has acquired the mortgagor's rights by purchase or by adverse possession."

This means that if at the date of suit for foreclosure or sale, the right of redemption is not in the mortgagor but has been already acquired by a person not a party to the mortgage suit, there is no possibility of the two rights merging into a right of ownership in favour of the mortgagee or the purchaser. The right of redemption which is vested in the stranger at the date of suit is unaffected by the eventual foreclosure or a sale in a suit to which such a prior holder of equity of redemption was not a party. There is no difference in principle whether such a right was acquired by transfer or by adverse possession so long as the same was already acquired at the date of the mortgage suit. Under O. 34, R. 1 Civil P. C., all persons having an interest either in the mortgage-security or in the right of redemption are necessary parties to the mortgage suit. Where a necessary party is not impleaded in the suit either by reason of ignorance of the fact that such right exists in someone other than the mortgagor or for any other reason, his rights cannot be concluded by a decree passed in that suit: vide 56 Mad. 846.[2] It therefore follows that he cannot be dispossessed of the property in which he has acquired rights by the foreclosing mortgagee or by the auction-purchaser in execution of the mortgage-decree without giving him an opportunity to retain the property acquired by him on redeeming: vide 59 Mad. 312[3] at p. 331.

[9] The position of one who had not acquired a right of redemption at the date of the mortgage suit but who acquired it during the pendency of the suit is, however, entirely different. He is not a necessary party to the mortgage suit as the right he acquired is hit by the principle of lis pendens: vide 59 Mad. 312[3] at p. 331. Here again, there is no difference in principle between a person who acquires title pending the suit by transfer or by adverse possession. The equity of redemption would be acquired by adverse possession only on the completion of the prescriptive period of 12 years and not a day before that. Under O. 22, R. 10, Civil P. C., he could, if he chose, apply for being impleaded as a defendant but that is not obligatory. He is bound by the result of the lis which had already started when he had not acquired title by prescription. The right of the mortgagee to enforce against his mortgagor is not in the least affected by voluntary or involuntary transfer of interest in the mortgaged property during the pendency of the mortgage suit.

[10] In the present case the possession of Waman under the sale deed by Maroti, who had no title in himself to his vendee, started on 24-3 1925. Even the possession of Maroti is found to be from 1923. Thus in 1930 when the mortgage suit was instituted the right of redemption was vested in Mt. Bayanabai (the mortgagor) and she was alone the necessary party. It was on her death in 1931 that Maroti and his son were brought on record. Thus at the date of suit Waman was not in the position of a prior holder of equity of redemption. He, or now his widow cannot complain that he was not joined in the mortgage suit. It is not proved that the mortgagee was aware of Waman's possession and much more of his adverse possession though, in my opinion, even the knowledge by the mortgagee of mere possession not ripened into title would be immaterial. It is quite obvious that Waman had not acquired a right of redemption at the date of the mortgage suit and he cannot in law improve his position by acquisition of that right during the pendency of the suit.

[11] The decision in I. L. R. (1942) Nag. 145[1] at p. 152 follows 59 Mad. 312,[3] in which the person sued for possession, though a prior holder of equity of redemption at the date of mortgage suit, was not impleaded in that suit due to ignorance on the part of the mortgagee of that right. The position of persons acquiring the right of redemption during the pendency of the mortgage suit and who are consequently affected by the principle of lis pendens is however distinguished by Stone, J. (as he then was) and it is on that ground that the case in 66 I. C. 631,[4] was not followed. This is, I believe, accepted in principle in I. L. R. (1942) Nag. 145[1] at p. 152 as appears from the extract quoted above from page 152.

[12] Viewed in this light and following what is said in I. L. R. (1942) Nag. 145[1] at p. 152, I am of opinion that Waman or his widow (appellant 1) cannot, resist the plaintiffs' claim for possession or claim a right to redeem the field No. 15 by payment of proportionate share of the mortgage amount.

[13] The claim of the plaintiffs-respondents for possession of field No. 15 was thus correctly decreed. The appeal is dismissed with costs. Counsel's fee Rs. 40/-.

NIYOGI AND SEN JJ.

Mt. Kasubai w/o Bhagwan—Defendant 1 — Appellant v. Mt. Chandrabhaga w/o Ghanshyam, plaintiff and others Defendants 2 to 7—Respondents.

First Appeal No. 82 of 1942, Decided on 13-4-1946, from decree of First Addl. Dist. Judge, Nagpur, D/- 30-11-1942.

(a) Hindu law — Guardianship — Co-widows—Senior widow whether guardian of minor co-widow.

Under Hindu law only the father and the mother are the natural guardians of a minor child. Any other relative cannot be a natural guardian but must be one deriving his authority from the Court : 2 A. I. R. 1915 Mad. 659, Rel. on. [Para 8]

In the case of a minor widow, the relations of her deceased husband are entitled to the guardianship in preference to her paternal relations. But this preference does not confer the status of natural guardians on the husband's relations. The right of any such person to act as guardian depends, not on their relationship through the husband, but on his or her being appointed by the Court to act as guardian : 16 Cal. 584, Ref. [Para 9]

A major co-widow cannot, therefore, have any legal status as the guardian of minor co-widow simply because she happens to be major. [Para 9]

Nor can she be regarded as the de facto guardian of the minor co-widow when both of them are living under the protection of their mother-in-law who is managing their estate, as no one can be a de facto guardian unless he looks after the property of the minor as well as takes care of the person of the minor : Case law referred. [Para 10]

(b) Hindu law — Widow's estate—Surrender by senior widow on behalf of herself and her minor co-widow—Validity.

A surrender by a widow does not stand on the same footing as an alienation. The idea of surrender is based on the withdrawal from worldly affairs. It is a voluntary act of the widow operating her own death and an effacement which, in other circumstances, is effected by actual or civil death which opens the estate of the deceased husband to his next heirs. Surrender is an act of purely personal nature and cannot be performed by any other person than the widow herself : Case law relied on. [Paras 11, 12]

Assuming, therefore, that a senior widow can act as guardian for her minor co-widow, she cannot exercise that right in the matter of surrender of the widow's estate to the next reversioners. Such a surrender effected by her for herself and for the minor co-widow is void and of no effect. [Paras 11, 12]

(c) Hindu law—Alienation — Widow's estate—Gift by one co-widow—Validity.

No coparcener can dispose of his undivided interest in the coparcenary property by gift : Case law relied on. [Para 14]

The same principle applies a fortiori to co-widows jointly holding a widow's estate. [Para 14]

Hence although the estate of two widows who take their husband's property by inheritance is one estate and they are, in strictest sense, coparceners that would not authorise one of the co-widows any more than a father or manager of any Hindu coparcenary to make a gift of the coparcenary property unless it be of a small part of the estate for religious purposes: 11 M. I. A. 487 (P. C.), Ref. [Para 13]

(d) Hindu law — Partition — Partition between co-widows one of whom is minor.

Hindu widows are entitled to obtain a partition of separate portions of their properties. But there cannot be a valid agreement of partition between two co-widows one of whom is a minor: Case law referred. [Para 14]

(e) Limitation Act (1908), Art. 44 — "Guardian" — Senior co-widow, whether guardian of minor widow — Relinquishment of entire widow's estate by senior widow.

Where one of the co-widows executes a deed of relinquishment of the entire widow's estate, on behalf of herself and minor co-widow, a suit by the minor co-widow for a declaration that the deed was void as against her on the ground that the senior widow had no right to relinquish, is governed by the twelve years' rule of limitation as one for ejectment of a trespasser. The senior widow being neither a de jure nor a de facto guardian of the minor co-widow, the suit does not fall under Art. 44 : Case law referred. [Para 14]

Annotation : ('42-Com.) Limitation Act, Art. 44, Note 2, pt. 1a.

(f) Conversion — Wrongful conversion—Refusal to produce converted property — Liability of convertor.

A person who having wrongfully converted property refuses to produce it so that its value may be known is liable for the greatest value that such an article could have : Case law referred. [Para 18]

(g) Hindu law—Widow—Right to maintenance and residence — Power of Court to make provision in decree for possession against her.

The matter of making some provision in the decree for the maintenance and residence of a Hindu widow, in a suit against her for possession of property in her hands, depends upon the discretion of the Court to be exercised on principles of justice and equity. [Para 19]

[In the circumstances of the case, the Court refused to exercise the discretion in favour of the widow.] [Para 19]

Dr. D. W. Kathale and S. P. Kotwal— for Appellant.

M. R. Bobde and D. B. Najbile—for Respondent 1.

Judgment. — This is defendant 1's appeal from the judgment and decree of the First Additional District Judge, Nagpur, in Civil Suit No. 9-A of 1941, decided on 30-9-1942.

[2] The case in outline is as follows. One Ghanshyam died on 1-7-1935 survived by his widows by name Mt. Chandrabhaga and Mt. Laxmi, and mother Mt. Kasubai. On 26-7-1935, that is within a month of his death, Mt. Laxmi, alleged to be 20 years old, executed a deed styled as Farkatnama (a deed of relinquishment) on her own account and as guardian for Mt. Chandrabhaga who was described as a minor aged 15 years whereby she purported to relinquish the entire moveable and immovable property which devolved on her and her co-widow on the death of Ghanshyam. In the mutation proceedings initiated by Mt. Kasubai (Ghanshyam's mother) the execution of the Farakatnama was admitted by Mt. Laxmi, but contest was raised on behalf of Mt. Chandrabhaga. The proceedings ultimately terminated in an order passed by the Honourable the Financial Commissioner on 19-12-1941 whereby Mt. Chandrabhaga's name was ordered to be recorded as a proprietor of her husband's share in mouza Dadhera. Pending those proceedings Mt. Chandrabhaga on 5-9-1936 applied for permission to prosecute a suit in forma pauperis. That application was dismissed as it was found that she had been in posssession of ornaments of a value which would enable her to pay court-fees. Consequently, Mt. Chandrabhaga, alleging that she was born on 13-9-1921 instituted the suit out of which this appeal arises, on 13-9-1941 on payment of full court-fees for a declaration that Farkatnama dated 26-7-1935 was void as against her on the ground that her co-widow Mt. Laxmi acting as her guardian had no right to relinquish the widow's estate, that she was neither de jure nor de facto guardian, that she, having been born on 18-12-1919, was herself a minor at the date of the Farkatnama and a victim of fraud and undue influence exercised by her mother-in-law, Mt. Kasubai, and persons interested in her. On these premises the plaintiff claimed possession of the entire property as described in Schs. A, B and C attached to the plaint or in the alternative half share thereof with mesne profits as set out in Sch. D.

[3] As Mt. Kasubai had sold on 26-5-1939 to Ramji Tukaram Kunbi two houses described in Sch. A and on 20-4 1938 to one Doma, since deceased, some malik mokbuza fields Nos. 41, 50 and 51 of Mouza Agra, Tahsil Katol, Ramji and Doma's legal representatives Fakirya, Vithoba, Gangaram and Pundlik were impleaded in the suit as defendants.

[4] Mt. Kasubai and her transferees contested the suit but Mt. Laxmi, who was impleaded as defendant 2, admitted the plaintiff's claim. Mt. Kasubai, in resisting the plaintiff's claim, denied that Mt. Laxmi was a minor when she executed the Farkatnama of 26-7-1935. She denied that Mt. Laxmi was born on 18-12-1919 and stated in general terms that she was born in the year 1915. She, however, conceded that a daughter named Gouri was born to Tukaram, Mt. Laxmi's father, on 18-12-1919, but averred that she died on 23-11-1920. She further denied that Mt. Chandrabhaga was born on 13-9 1921 but averred that she was born on 29-7-18. She admitted that a daughter had been born to Namdeo on 13-9-1921 and maintained that she was not Chandrabhaga but another girl by name Kawatuki. Mt. Kasubai repudiated the allegations of fraud and undue influence in regard to the execution of the Farkatnama by Mt. Laxmi.

[5] The real nature of the defence of Mt. Kasubai can better be described in the words of her own written statement filed on 13 12 1941, viz.

"It was therefore thought prudent that she should continue as de facto manager, and de jure character was to be conferred on her by this document to free the girl—widows of Ghanshyam from temptation not to remarry and lead an unhealthy life. The plaintiff was minor and defendant 2 would have been the natural and de facto guardian of the estate, being the senior widow. The "Panchas" (to use the common language) assembled on the 13th day ceremony of the death of Ghanshyam, thus considered all the pros and cons and came to the conclusion that the title to the property should rest in defendant 1, for the proper management of the estate and its preservation and the plaintiff and Mt. Laxmi should be freed to remarry. Thus the Farkatnama is a bona fide surrender by the two widows and being a family arrangement is binding on all. The plaintiff and Mt. Laxmi were allowed to appropriate to themselves the ornaments worth about Rs. 5000 each."

In the written statement she contended that Mt. Laxmi had the fullest advice from her relations; namely father, brother and others and that she had understood the effect of executing the Farkatnama. She also contended that the Farkatnama was valid as having been made in lieu of ornaments worth about Rs. 5000 which were given to each of the two widows. Mt Kasubai's transferees sought to support their transfers on the ground of legal necessity and benefit and also on the ground that they were bona fide purchasers for value.

[6] The lower Court on a careful examination of the evidence found that Mt. Laxmi had attained the age of 18 years although the exact date of her birth was obscure and that Mt. Chandrabhaga was born on 13-9-1921 as alleged by the plaintiff and not on 29-7-1918 as alleged by Mt. Kasubai. In view of the circumstances in which the Farkatnama came to be executed it held that Mt. Kasubai was not able to discharge the burden that lay on her of proving that Mt. Laxmi was acting as a free agent in executing the Farkatnama. It further held that the Farkatnama was void as against Mt. Chandrabhaga (the plaintiff) for the reason that Mt. Laxmi was incompetent to alienate her interest and consequently that she was entitled to the whole property. On the point of limitation it held that inasmuch as the document was found to be void ab initio the suit was governed neither by Art. 44 nor by Art. 91, Limitation Act. Mt. Kasubai was made liable to pay the value of the money-lending business comprising mortgages, bonds, promissory notes and some decrees as she was found to have recovered some of the debts and did not render account of the money-lending business as a whole.

[7] Upon this appeal, a great deal of argument has been addressed on behalf of the appellant contesting every head of the judgment But the central point in the case is a simple one, viz: When husband's property devolves on two widows, one of whom is a minor, whether the major widow acting as a guardian for the minor widow can make a valid surrender of whole of widow's estate in favour of the next reversioner. While considering this question as a neat point of law we assume for the sake of argument that the recitals in the Farkatnama as to the ages of the two widows, that is Laxmi as 20 and Chandrabhaga as 15, were true. The point so arising has a two-fold aspect which requires examination : (1) Was Mt. Laxmi competent to act as a guardian for Mt. Chandrabhaga? and (2) Could Mt. Laxmi in that capacity validly surrender Mt. Chandrabhaga's share on the assumption that Chandrabhaga had a distinct and defined share which could be separately dealt with ?

[8] Guardians recognised by law are ordinarily of three kinds : natural, testamentary or those appointed by Court. Mt. Laxmi was neither a testamentary guardian nor one appointed by any Court. Can it be said that she was a natural guardian? Under the Hindu law the guardianship of the minor vests in the sovereign as parens patriate. This duty is no doubt delegated to the child's relations, of whom the father and next to him the mother would be the natural guardian. Any other relative cannot be a natural guardian but must be one deriving his authority from the Court : see S. 231 p. 299, Mayne on Hindu Law and Usage, Ed. 10. This was pointed out by Sadasiva Ayyar J. in 38 Mad 1125[1] at p. 1126. The learned Judge on the authority of the previous decided cases held that under the Hindu law nobody else than the father and mother of a minor (with probable exceptions in favour of the elder brother and the direct male and female ancestors of the minor) is entitled as a matter of natural right to be and to act as guardian of a minor's person and properties, and that recourse must be had to the Court (representing the rights of the King which are paramount to even the rights of the parents) where there is no natural guardian alive In that case paternal aunt was held not to be the natural guardian of a minor. The same view was taken in A. I R. 1931 Mad. 597.[2]

[9] The learned counsel for the appellant contends that the true rule of Hindu law is that the guardianship belongs as of natural right to the nearest sapinda of the minor and that in the case of a widow, the relations of her deceased husband are entitled to be the guardian in preference to her paternal relations; and he relies on 16 Cal 584.[3] That proposition is not open to any dispute as it is supported by the original text of the Shastras. It may be pointed out that in the cited case 16 Cal. 584[3] the minor's mother-in-law was approved as the legal guardian of the minor although the certificate of administration which had been granted to her was recalled on account of her advanced age which made her unfit to manage the property. On this view Mt. Kasubai would be the de jure guardian and not Mt. Laxmi, her co-widow. The word "guardian" as defined in the Guardians and Wards Act means a person having the care of the person of a minor or of his property, or of both his person and property. Mt. Kasubai admitted in her pleadings that she had been managing the estate since 1926 when her father-in-law died up to the time when her son attained majority and that even at the time of the Farkatnama in 1935 she was the manager de facto. That means that both the widowed daughters-in-law are living under her care and protection. It could not therefore be said that Mt. Chandrabhaga was under the guardianship of Mt. Laxmi only because the latter happened to be major. The preference of the relations of the husband of a minor widow over her paternal relations does not confer the status of natural guardians on the husband's relations. The right of any of such persons to act as guardian depends not on their relationship through the husband but on his or her being appointed by the Court to act as guardian. In the absence of any natural guardian no one can be recognised as a legal guardian unless he or she is appointed by a Court. Mt. Laxmi could not therefore had any legal status as the guardian of her minor co-widow.

[10] Nor was she a guardian de facto as admittedly the property was being managed not by her but by Mt. Kasubai. A person is a de facto guardian only when he is found to intermeddle with the estate of the minor for a reasonable length of time : see 51 Bom. 1040[4] and 55 M. L. J. 861.[5] No one is a de facto guardian unless he looks after the property of the minor as well as takes care of the person of the minor. It must therefore be held that Mt. Laxmi was neither de jure nor de facto guardian of Mt Chandrabhaga and any alienation, (assuming that the surrender under consideration is analogous to alienation), made by her would be void and of no effect even under the Hindu law. In A. I. R. 1938 P. C. 181[6] a compromise made by a guardian, who was neither de jure nor de facto, was set aside as void against the minor See also 22 N. L. R. 5[7] and I L. R (1944) Nag. 698.[8]

[11] Granting for the nonce that Mt. Laxmi could under the Hindu law act as a guardian for Mt. Chandrabhaga, the vital question is whether she could exercise that right in the matter of surrender of the widow's estate to the next reversioner. Surrender does not stand on the same footing as alienation. In 19 Cal. 236,[9] 42 Mad. 523[10] and 47 Cal. 466[11] their Lordships of the Privy Council have had occasions to consider the legal character of surrender by a Hindu widow in favour of the next reversioners. In 19 Cal. 236,[9] it was described as a withdrawal of the widow's life estate, in 42 Mad. 523[10] as a voluntary act of the widow operating her own death and an effacement which, in other circumstances, is effected by actual death or by civil death which opened the estate of the deceased husband to his next heirs. In 47 Cal. 466[11] the surrender was described as a complete relinquishment by the widow of all her estate.

[12] As pointed out by their Lordships of the Privy Council in 42 Mad. 523,[10] surrender is not an alienation, but a self-effacement or civil death. To understand the significance of this, one has to go back to the original conception underlying the widow's act of surrender, as reflected in certain texts of the Smrities. But for that purpose we need not go beyond certain decisions in the early period of the development of the doctrine in the Judicial Courts : In 1 Boulnois 120,[12] [see the Indian Decisions (old series) 3 Supreme Court Bengal Reports] Jackson J. pointed out that on the occasion of a widow becoming Byraghi the estate at once descends to the nearest heirs living at that time, and he referred to 2 Macnaghten's Hindu Law, 131, 233 and the case 12 S. D. A. 595.[13] The same idea occurs in 10 Cal. 1102[14] at p. 1103 where Garth C. J. observed as follows :

"What is usually therefore called a 'surrender' of a Hindu widow's estate is more properly a relinquishment of it in favour of her husband's heirs. If she died a natural death, those heirs would succeed; or if she were to become a byragee, or otherwise die a civil death, the result would be the same. And as I take it to be clear that when her husband died, she might, if she had so pleased, have disclaimed her estate."

Thus the idea of surrender is based on the withdrawal from worldly affairs which brings on civil death and the self-effacement of the widow from amongst the heirs of her husband. That being the true nature of surrender, it appears to us impossible that a minor co-widow's self-effacement or civil death or voluntary relinquishment could be brought about by anyone by purporting to exercise the minor's will. That would be imposing self-effacement on the minor widow when she is incapable of exercising her own will. The surrender being an act of a purely personal nature, it is inconceivable how that act can be performed by any person other than the widow herself.

[13] It is contended on behalf of the appellant that the surrender could well be considered a joint gift on the footing that the two widows constituted a coparcenary of which Mt. Laxmi was the manager. It is true, as pointed out in 11 M. I. A. 487[15] at pp. 515, 516, that the estate of two widows, who take their husband's property by inheritance is one estate and that they are in strictest sense coparceners. But that would not authorise one of the co-widows any more than a father or manager of any Hindu coparcenary to make a gift of the coparcenary property unless it be of a small part of the estate for religious purposes. The surrender treated as a gift cannot stand for a moment for the obvious reason that Mt. Laxmi could not acting as manager or a guardian, gift away her minor co-widow's share in the property; and if the surrender by Mt. Laxmi does not bind the minor widows then the surrender must fail, as it does not comprise the whole of the widow's estate.

[14] It is contended that in so far as the co-widows had a right to partition their share, Mt. Laxmi's share at least must be deemed to have been gifted to Mt. Kasubai on the footing that there was a notional partition. Strong reliance is placed on 33 ALL. 443.[16] This case on careful examination would be found to repel the appellant's contention. In theory it would be a perfectly sound proposition to say that Hindu widows are entitled to obtain a partition of separate portions of their property. That proposition is supported by 11 M. I. A. 487,[15] A. I. R. 1928 P. C. 251,[17] 10 N. L. R. 51[18] and A. I. R. 1926 Mad. 6.[19] But there is a difficulty in the application of that principle for the obvious reason that there could not be a valid agreement for partition between the two co-widows as one of them was a minor. No doubt in 30 Cal. 738[20] at p. 752, their Lordships of the Privy Council envisaged the possibility of a valid partition during the minority of one or more of the coparceners but it appears to be impossible when the coparcenary consists of only two persons one of whom is a minor. The adult coparcener who desires partition in his own interest would be wholly incompetent to act as a guardian for the minor to promote the agreement for partition in his own interest. The decision in 33 ALL. 443,[16] was in reality based on the hypothesis of a valid partition between the two co widows. In that case both the widows, who were major, had made separate gifts : one of them of her share in the property and the other of the entire property. The donees of a half share sued for a declaration of their right and prayed for partition. That prayer was granted by the High Court subject to the condition that the partition would not affect the right of the surviving widow after the death of her co-widows. The decision proceeded on the well established principle, see I. L. R. (1938) Nag. 1,[21 & 22] that a transferee of an undivided share of a coparcener gets the equitable right to ask for a partition of the joint property. In the present case the major co-widows never intended to make a gift, even of her own half share, and the transaction, as already shown above, was of a nature wholly distinct from an alienation, voluntary or for consideration. Laxmi purported to surrender the whole of the widow's estate and there is no trace of any intent to make a gift of her half share in the surrender deed. Granting for the nonce that this deed is susceptible of that interpretation, how can there be a gift of an undivided interest in a coparcenary ? It may be conceded that in Bombay, Madras and the Central Provinces a coparcener may sell, mortgage or otherwise alienate for value (vide 16 N. L. R. 131[23] and cases referred to therein), but not by way of gift. According to the Mitakshara law as applied in all the Provinces, no coparcener can dispose his undivided interest in the coparcenary property by gift, see 7 Mad. 357,[24] 9 Mad. 273,[25] 11 Mad. 246,[26] 27 Mad. 162,[37] 19 Bom. 803[28] and 2 N. L. R. 52[29] at p. 53. The same principle must a fortiori apply to co-widows jointy holding widows' estate. No question of limitation with reference to Art. 44, Limitation Act, can arise in the present case as Mt. Laxmi was neither a de jure nor a de facto guardian: see 38 Mad. 1125,[1] 58 Mad. 155[30 & 31] and A. I. R. 1931 Mad. 592.[32] The surrender as has been shown above was void ab initio. The suit was governed by the 12 years' rule of limitation as one for ejectment of a trespasser.

[15] Both parties have attacked the findings of the lower Court as to the age of the two co-widows. The question of their ages becomes immaterial on the view we have taken of the nature of the transaction. We however put on the record that we accept the lower Court's findings. As we heard nothing more substantial than what had been already presented in the lower Court and considered by it, we think it unnecessary to say anything beyond expressing our agreement with the lower Court's estimate of the evidence and the course of reasoning.

[16] Nor need we go into the question of undue influence and fraud Suffice it to say that the circumstances in which the deed came to be executed by Mt. Laxmi who had just come of age, her position in relation to her mother-in-law, defendant 1, who obtained the benefit, laid a heavy onus on the plaintiff to dislodge the presumption arising against her and that she totally failed to discharge it.

[17] The point raised about omission to amend the plaint in view of the remarriage of Mt. Laxmi in 1942 automatically drops out of consideration. Now we may turn to the question as to the money-lending business the aggregate value whereof was awarded as follows:

Translation.	Value.
Mortgages	Rs. 8202-6-0
Simple money bonds	" 2328-12-9
Promissory notes	" 320-0-0
Decree in Civil Suit No. 189 of 1934	" 1078-10-6
	Rs. 11,938-7-3.

The plaintiff, in her plaint, claimed possession of valuable securities consisting of mortgage deeds, bonds, and promissory notes besides a decree. The mortgage deeds are described in Sch. A, and bonds, promissory notes and decree are set out in Sch. B, appended to the plaint.

The defendant, Mt. Kasubai, in her written statement did not dispute the existence of the various valuable securities but pleaded: "As regards secured and unsecured debts, some of them have been realised and adjusted privately. Some have been conciliated through the Conciliation Board." Beyond this bald and elusive statement she kept reticent. In the witness-box, Mt. Kasubai (1. D. W. 14) could not explain why she did not take steps to recover the secured and unsecured debts. Although she admitted that the repayments had been noted in the diaries she did not produce them as she thought it unnecessary to do so. She was particularly asked about some of the debts but she gave evasive and unsatisfactory answers. It was her duty to have filed a complete and clear statement as to the outstandings in the money-lending business and the recoveries made by her but she failed to do so. She should have in any case placed the instruments of obligation in the custody of the Court but that also she failed to do. Very early in the case, the plaintiff asked for the appointment of a receiver to take charge of the whole estate and administer it and she objected to it. The lower Court, as an alternative to the appointment of a receiver, called on her to furnish security to the extent of Rs. 10,000. By persisting in her possession of the estate, Mt. Kasubai took upon herself the entire liability to account for the recoveries made by her.

[18] It is urged on behalf of the defendant-respondent that it was the plaintiff's duty to have instituted suits to recover the debts or at any rate to have asked for the relief of rendition of accounts. The plaintiff could not possibly file suits against the debtors as she was resisted even in the mutation proceedings which terminated by the Financial Commissioner's order on 19-12-1941 and it was impossible for her to do so after the lower Court passed the order refusing to appoint a receiver on 12-3-1942. So long as the plaintiff's right itself was under litigation, she could not manifestly maintain any suit and the most reasonable and lawful course for her was to have a receiver appointed. That was all that she could do under the circumstances. It was incumbent on the defendant who was in possession of the instruments of obligation to take necessary legal steps—the more so because she successfully resisted the appointment of a receiver. It was at all events imperative on her to place all the documents in the custody of the Court. The attitude she took in the case cannot be characterised otherwise than as perverse. She handed over management of the estate to her son-in-law, Govinda. The manner in which the estate was managed can well be judged from the fact that a village share came to be sold for non-payment of arrears of land revenue. She sold away two houses and some fields without even the semblance of any necessity. In these circumstances, it would not be wrong for the Court to make her liable up to the full face value of the debts as has been done by the Court below, on the analogy of a claim for recovery of moveable property as contemplated in O. 21, R. 10, Civil P. C. As the possession of these documents by Mt. Laxmi was wrongful and she admittedly recovered some amounts due on them, she was clearly guilty of wrongful conversion. It was her duty to prove that her act did not cause loss to the plaintiff, not the plaintiff's duty to show that it did. To such a case as this the rule, omnia presumuntur contra spoliatarem, must apply and it must be dealt with on the principle enunciated in (1722) 1 Strang 505.[33] See Smith's Leading Cases, 13 Ed. Vol. 1, p. 393 under which a person who having converted property refuses to produce it so that its exact value may be known is liable for the greatest value that such an article could have. This principle has been applied in various similar cases: see (1919) 1 K. B 443[34] at p. 458; (1921) 2 K. B. 237[35] and 1932 A. C. 452[36]

[19] Lastly there survives the point raised for the first time in appeal that in the decree some provision must be made for Mt. Kasubai's residence and maintenance. Reliance is placed on 7 Bom 225[37] and 19 N. L. R. 69[38] at p. 71. That is a matter which depends on the discretion of the Court to be exercised on principle of justice and equity. In the present case it is strenuously contended by the plaintiff that inasmuch as Mt. Kasubai appropriated the profits, concealed some property in the name of her son-in-law and abused her fiduciary position vis-a-vis her minor daughter-in law as she was, the discretionary power should not be exercised particularly because any enquiry that may be ordered by this Court may be used for hampering the execution of the decree obtained by the plaintiff. Even though all these contentions may be well-founded, they would not destroy Mt. Kasubai's right of maintenance, but it appears that in the present case the conduct of Mt. Kasubai does not justify any leniency towards her. In 7 Bom. 225,[37] there was a bona fide dispute between the adoptive mother and the adopted son. In 19 N. L. R 69,[38] the plaintiff, who was allowed this concession, lost his claim because he was congenitally blind. The considerations which induced the Courts in those cases are not present in this case. We, therefore, do not feel pressed in this case to accede to the appellant's belated prayer.

[20] The result is that the appeal stands dismissed with costs.

Civil Revn. No. 163 of 1946. Decided on 12-3-1947, against decree of First Civil Judge, 2nd Class, Raipur, D/- 14-12 1945.

(a) Railways Act (1890), S. 113—Ticket lost during journey—Single fare recovered from passenger on way—Purchase of ticket at starting station established—Passenger can claim refund.

A ticket issued by a Railway Administration is an evidence of the contract between the railway administration and the passenger whereunder the former undertakes to carry the latter with due care for his safety from one place to the other for which the fare is paid and accepted. The rights and the liabilities under a contract do not terminate only because the evidence or one of the items of evidence of the contract is not available. The contract can be proved even otherwise than by the production of a ticket. When a valid contract between parties is established, the rights and liabilities under the contract must be governed by the general provisions of the Contract Act except to the extent they are affected by a special statute. Under the provisions of the Contract Act, the railway administration cannot retain to itself the consideration of the contract received twice though by a special statute it may be empowered to realise it and to retain it as long as the first payment of consideration is not established. Where a passenger has lost his ticket during his travel and the administration realizes the fare on one of the midway stations, thus realizing the fare for a single journey for the second time the fare thus realised is without consideration and is, on that account, liable to be refunded. The refusal to return the fare thus realized from a bona fide but an unfortunate passenger is so revolting to the sense of natural justice that the administration must justify such an action on a very clear authority. It is difficult to believe that legislature intended to punish an honest passenger and to permit an unjust enrichment to the railway administration.

S. 113, or any other provision or principle of law does not entitle the railway administration to appropriate to itself what was recovered as fare on another occasion for single journey, even after having been satisfied that the passenger did pay the fare and a ticket was issued to him. The section, though included in chapter headed "Penalties and offences" is not a penal provision but is evidently enacted to avoid administrative difficulties which arise in practice with reference to persons who have no tickets with them. It is clear from S. 113, Railways Act, that what is demanded and recovered from a passenger — leaving aside the excess charge—is a single railway fare for the distance the passenger has travelled. This is not recovered as a penalty or a fine and not even as an excess charge. It is recovered as a fare because the passenger has not at the time the evidence of his having paid the fare for the journey. In fact it may be said that the statutory obligation created by S. 113 in the matter of payment of fare is temporary i.e., as long as the passenger has not satisfied the railway administration that he had paid the fare and secured a ticket. That is the plain object of S. 113 and the meaning of the language used in that section. A power given for administrative convenience cannot be turned into a source of gain: 15 A. I. R. 1928 Nag. 30 and 13 A. I. R. 1926 Bom. 266, Rel. on. [Paras. 10, 11, 13, 14 and 16]

(b) Railways Act (1890), S. 113 (1) and (3)— Scope — Passenger intimating loss of ticket — Amount to be realised as excess.

Where a passenger has incurred a liability for excess charge under S. 113(1), the amount which can be realised from him on this account is mentioned in sub-section (3) of that section. Where the passenger has notified to the railway servant on duty the loss of his tickets voluntarily and without being detected by the railway officer the amount which can be realised from him as excess charge is 1/6 of that payable under sub-section (1) of the Act. [Para 8]

(c) Interpretation of statutes—Intention of legislature.

It is a fundamental rule of interpretation to which all others are subordinate that a statute is to be expounded according to the intent of those who made it. This intent is to be gathered, as far as possible, from the literal meaning of the language used by the legislature and where such language is plain and unambiguous, effect must be given to it apart from the notions of justice and expediency. When once the meaning is clear it is not within the province of a Court to scan the wisdom or the policy of the legislature, for it is not the duty of the Court to make the law reasonable but to expound it as it stands according to the real sense of the words. It is, on the other hand, equally well-established that in determining either the general object of the legislature or the meaning of its language in any particular part, the meaning which appears to be most in accord with convenience, reason, justice, and legal principles should in all cases of doubtful significance be accepted. Wherever the language of a statute admits of two constructions and if the construction in one way would lead to obvious injustice, Courts naturally act upon the view that such a result could not have been intended by the legislature. H. N. Chaudhuri—for Applicant.

P. N. Rudra—for Non-Applicant.

Order.—The plaintiff has filed this civil revision against the decision of the Civil Judge, Second Class, empowered under S. 18, C. P. Courts Act, dismissing his claim for refund partly, i. e, to the extent of Rs. 21-4-0

[2] To appreciate the questions involved in this revision the following facts are necessary to be stated.

(a) Desirous of travelling from Howrah to Raipur by Bengal Nagpur Railway, now owned by the non-applicant, the applicant paid at Howrah on 30 9-1943 third class single fare and the Railway Company issued to him a ticket No. 1577. The applicant also got his luggage booked at Howrah on payment and was granted a luggage ticket No. 37416. The applicant boarded the Bombay Mail, leaving Howrah in the afternoon of the 30th September and travelled in a third class compartment which, according to him, was not lighted during night and was also over-crowded.

(b) As the train was reaching Bilaspur, an intermediate station between Howrah and Raipur, the next morning, the applicant found to his regret that his purse containing inter alia the two railway tickets was stolen. The applicant thus lost the two tickets as a result of theft in a railway carriage. At Bilaspur, the applicant reported this fact voluntarily to the railway officer on duty. The officer demanded and recovered from the applicant Rs. 27-12-0 under the following heads:

Rs. 9 12-0 for single railway fare from Howrah to Bilaspur.
Rs. 9-12-0 for excess charge.
Rs. 8- 4-0 for luggage.

Rs. 27-12-0

The applicant continued the journey by the same train to Raipur where he was made to pay Rs. 3-8-0 i. e.

Rs 1-12 0 for fare from Bilaspur to Raipur.
Rs 1-12-0 for luggage.

Rs. 3- 8-0

(c) The applicant thereafter moved the railway administration for refund of the amounts realised from him at Bilaspur and Raipur on the ground that he had already paid the fare and the charge for luggage at Howrah and that the loss of tickets was due to reasons beyond his control. The railway administration did not countenance the applicant's claim and he was obliged to file the suit from which this revision arises.

[3] It is rather surprising that the facts should have been denied on behalf of the non-applicant. The payment of fare by the plaintiff and the issue of tickets to him at Howrah on 30 9-1943 are clear from the counter-foil of the ticket issued for luggage. The facts are however held established by the lower Court and the learned counsel for the non-applicant has not disputed them in this Court.

[4] On the facts found, the learned Judge of the lower Court decreed the plaintiff-applicant's claim for refund of Rs. 10-0-0 recovered from him at Bilaspur and Raipur, for luggage. The claim for the refund of Rs. 21-12-0 i.e. 11-8-0 recovered as single railway fare from Howrah to Raipur and Rs. 9-12-0 recovered as excess charge was however dismissed. The view taken by the lower Court was that the amount was legally demanded and recovered under S. 113, Railways Act, and was therefore not refundable. The decision of the Judicial Commissioner's Court in 23 N L. R. 121,[1] was relied on.

[5] Out of Rs. 21-12-0 which were recovered from the plaintiff-applicant, Rs. 9-12-0 were realised as excess charge. This is obviously an illegal recovery except to the extent of Rs. 1-10-0. Where a passenger has incurred a liability for excess charge under S. 113 (1), the amount which can be realised from him on this account is mentioned in sub-s (3) of that section. The applicant notified to the railway servant on duty the loss of his tickets voluntarily and without being detected by the railway officer and the amount which can therefore be realised from him as excess charge is Rs. 1-10 0 i.e. 1/6th of Rs. 9-12-0 otherwise payable under sub-s. (1) of the Act. The amount of Rs. 8-2-0 realised in excess from the applicant was recovered illegally and that amount is liable to be refunded. Thus the applicant's claim for Rs. 8-2-0 in addition to Rs. 10-0-0 for which a decree is passed by the lower Court must succeed.

[9] The next question, i. e., about the refund of Rs. 11-8-0 which were realised from the applicant at Bilaspur and Raipur by way of a single railway fare from Howrah to Raipur stands on a different footing. It depends on the correct appreciation of the object of S. 113, Railways Act, and on its correct interpretation.

[10] According to S. 66, Railways Act, a person desirous of travelling by a railway has to offer fare according to the copy of the list of the fares which under S. 65 a railway administration is obliged to exhibit at every station. On acceptance of the fare the railway administration supplies the person with a ticket. The ticket is an evidence of the agreement between the railway administration and the passenger whereunder the former undertakes to carry the latter with due care for his saftey from one place to the other for which the fare is paid and accepted. Under S. 67 of the Act the liability of the railway administration under the contract is subject only to the condition that there is room available in the train for which the ticket is issued. In the present case there was a contract under which for consideration received at Howrah, the railway administration undertook to carry the plaintiff from Howrah to Raipur.

[11] Under S. 69, Railways Act, the passenger is to present his ticket for examination on requisition and to surrender it at or near the end of the journey. Chap IX, Railways Act, which begins with S. 87 is headed 'Penalties and Offences'. Though S. 113 is one of the sections in that Chapter, it is clear that that section is not a penal provision and it merely deals with a situation created by an accident or a mishap where a passenger who was supplied with a ticket and was travelling lawfully has not, at a particular time, the ticket with him or was unable to present it immediately for examination or to surrender it on requisition. The section no doubt empowers the railway officer-in-charge to demand and realise from such passenger money under two distinct heads: one, the excess charge mentioned in sub-s. (3) of that section and the other the ordinary single fare for the distance the passenger has travelled. The section is evidently enacted to avoid administrative difficulties which arise in practice with reference to persons who have no tickets with them. Section 113, Railways Act, of 1890 corresponds substantially to S. 31 of the former Act 4 [IV] of 1879 which in its turn was based on English bye-laws on the subject. Section 31, as it stood, was held by the Calcutta High Court inapplicable to passengers who in fact had paid the fare and were supplied with tickets: vide 12 Cal. 192.[2] The difficulty of proving fraud, even where it exists, was found in practice to be insuperable. The words 'with him' were therefore introduced in the section. The railway officer had no means to ascertain the truth of the passenger's representation that he had paid the fare and obtained a ticket. It was therefore found expedient to empower the officer to demand and realise the excess charge and railway fare.

[12] The question in the case is not the legality of the demand or the recovery made by the officer in compliance with S. 113 but the right of the railway administration to appropriate or to refuse to refund the amount recovered by way of fare even after being satisfied that the passenger did pay the fare and a ticket was issued to him. In other words, the question is whether S. 113 or any other provision or principle of law entitles the railway administration to appropriate to itself what was recovered as fare on two occasions for a single journey.

[13] As already stated above, a ticket issued by a railway administration is merely an evidence of a contract and the rights and the liabilities under a contract do not terminate only because the evidence or one of the items of evidence of the contract is not available. The contract can be proved even otherwise than by the production of a ticket, and in this case it was actually proved by the evidence furnished by the counter-foil of the luggage ticket. A valid contract between parties being established the rights and liabilities under the contract must be governed by the general provisions of the Contract Act except to the extent they are affected by a special statute. Under the provisions of the Contract Act the railway administration cannot retain to itself the consideration of the contract received twice though by a special statute it may be empowered to realise it and to retain it as long as the first payment of consideration is not established.

[14] Where, as in this case, for a single journey, fare is realised twice, the fare realised on one of the two occasions is without consideration and is on that account liable to be refunded. It is immaterial for the purpose of this case which payment is without consideration i. e., the one made at Howrah or at Bilaspur and Raipur, because there was no consideration from the railway administration either for the first payment or for the second. The refusal to return the fare realized twice from a bona fide but an unfortunate passenger is so revolting to the sense of natural justice that the non-applicant must justify such an action on a very clear authority. It is difficult to believe that Legislature intended to punish an honest passenger and to permit an unjust enrichment to the railway administration.

[15] It is a fundamental rule of interpretation to which all others are subordinate that a statute is to be expounded according to the intent of those who made it. This intent is to be gathered, as far as possible, from the literal meaning of the language used by the legislature and where such language is plain and unambiguous, effect must be given to it apart from the notions of justice and expediency. When once the meaning is clear, it is not within the province of a Court to scan the wisdom or the policy of the legislature, for it is not the duty of the Court to make the law reasonable but to expound it as it stands according to the real sense of the words. It is, on the other hand, equally well established that in determining either the general object of the legislature or the meaning of its language in any particular part, the meaning which appears to be most in accord with convenience, reason, justice, and legal principles should in all cases of doubtful significance be accepted. Wherever the language of a statute admits of two constructions and if the construction in one way would lead to obvious injustice, Courts naturally act upon the view that such a result could not have been intended by the legislature. These are well-established principles in the matter of construction of statutes and it is in the light of these principles that one has to examine S. 113, Railways Act.

[16] It is, to my mind, clear from S. 113, Railways Act, that what is demanded and recovered from a passenger—leaving aside the excess charge—is a single railway fare for the distance the passenger has travelled. This is not recovered as a penalty or a fine and not even as an excess charge. It is recovered as a fare because the passenger has not at the time the evidence of his having paid the fare for the journey. Rather than obliging the railway administration to enquire if the passenger has committed a fraud or not, and then in the case of fraud to seek out the passenger and to recover fare from him, the legislature empowered the railway administration to recover the fare leaving it to the passenger to prove his bona fides and to put forward his claim for refund on that ground. Section 113, Railways Act, no doubt places the passenger under an obligation to pay the fare for the time being, but it does not take away his right to claim a refund and does not create any right in the railway administration to retain fare realised twice for a single journey. In fact, it may be said that the statutory obligation created by S. 113 in the matter of payment of fare is temporary, i. e., as long as the passenger has not satisfied the railway administration that he had paid the fare and secured a ticket. That, according to me, is the plain object of S. 113, and the meaning of the language used in that section. Moreover, that in my view is the only construction which is most in accord with the sense of convenience, justice and legal principles and should therefore be given effect to. A power given for administrative convenience cannot be turned into a source of gain.

[17] In 23 N. L. R. 121,[1] Findlay J. C. observed correctly that S. 113, Railways Act, was enacted to meet inconveniences that arise in practice and it follows that it was not meant for penalising an honest passenger who had paid his fare. These inconveniences are removed by empowering the railway officer to realise fare from the passenger, leaving it to him to seek his remedy against the railway administration. I do not agree with the learned Judicial Commissioner and I say so with great respect that a passenger, though his grievance be just, has no legal remedy but the Railway Company should allow the refund 'ex gratia'. In 50 Bom. 215[3] the learned Judges have pointed out that the liability to pay fare second time arises out of a statutory obligation under S. 113, Railways Act. That statutory obligation is, in my opinion, discharged on the passenger's making the payment; but without affecting his right to claim a refund of that payment on proof of his having already paid the fare or, in the alternative, to claim a refund of that payment which was made at the first instance on the ground that the consideration for that payment failed.

[18] There is no authority either in S. 113 or in any other provision in the Railways Act which empowers the railway administration to retain to itself the fare realised twice for a single journey and there is no legal principle on which this can be justified. In my view, the applicant had a right, on the proved facts of this case, to a refund of Rs. 11-8-0 on the ground that the railway administration realised from him Rs 23-0-0 for a single journey from Howrah to Raipur. In the result, the application is allowed except for Rs 1-10-0 which the Railway administration realised as excess charge under S. 113, Railways Act. The plaintiff's claim is, therefore, decreed for Rs. 29-10-0 with full costs in both Courts. Counsel's fees Rs. 30-0-0.

D in execution of his decree against A, B and C attached a house as belonging to them. E objected on the ground that at a partition between A, B and C the house had been allotted to B and he had purchased it from B. It was held that the sale was valid only to the extent of B's 1/3rd share which was released from attachment. There were certain findings in the order releasing the share which were against D: (i) that B sold the house to E for consideration, and (ii) that the transaction was genuine and not bogus. D did not file a suit under O. 21, R. 63 to establish his right to sell B's share in the house. Held, that the order releasing B's share from attachment became conclusive and D could not sell that share but he was not precluded from challenging the findings which were the basis of the order and were against him. [Para 11]

V. V. Kelkar — for Appellant.
R. N. Padhye — for Respondent No. 1.

Judgment. — This appeal arises out of a suit under O. 21, R. 63, Civil P. C., 1908, filed by respondent 1 Goverdhandas on 2-11-1934, in the Court of the First Subordinate Judge, Second Class, Harda, for a declaration that he was the owner of the house at Harda, which had been attached by the appellant, the firm of Nainsukhdas Sheonarayan of Bombay, in execution of a decree dated 25-7-1932 in Civil Suit No. 1033 of 1930 of the Bombay High Court, and that a 2/3rd share of the house was not liable to attachment and sale in execution of that decree.

[2] In order to understand the points involved in this appeal it is necessary to set out briefly a few relevant facts. The respondents are related. Respondent 2 Ballabhdas is the father of respondents 3 and 4, Vithaldas and Bindrabandas. Respondent 1 Goverdhandas is the son of Ballabhdas's sister and the first cousin of Vithaldas and Bindrabandas.

[3] Ballabhdas and his sons carried on business in the name of the firm of Ramchandra Ballabhdas at Harda and at Bhopal. They were indebted to a number of persons among whom was the Imperial Bank of India, Bhopal Branch. The bank filed a suit on 20-11-1929 in the High Court at Bhopal against the firm of Ramchandra Ballabhdas for Rs. 30,430-15-0 and obtained a decree on 7-5-1930 for that sum with interest at bank rate from 22-10-1929 till realisation; the decretal amount was payable in two instalments, the first instalment of Rs. 15,200 on 15-11-1930, and the balance together with costs on 15-5-1931. In the copy of the decree (Ex. D-2) and the order-sheet (Ex. P.-19) the suit is described as filed against Mr. Ramchand Ballabhdas, but it appears from the pleading in the present case that the suit was against the firm of Ramchandra Ballabhdas and that the respondents Ballabhdas and his sons were liable for the decretal amount: vide para. 6 (a) of the written statement of defendant 1, dated 12-7-1935 and of the plaintiff's written rejoinder dated 16-7-1936. Ballabhdas (P. W. 14) in his evidence stated that his sons were sureties for the debts due to the Imperial Bank and that their property was also sold for the satisfaction of the decree of the Imperial Bank. Bindrabandas (P. W. 13) stated that he paid money to the Imperial Bank in execution because he was a surety for his father.

[4] The appellant, the firm of Nainsukhdas Sheo Narayan of Bombay, filed Civil Suit No. 1033/1930 in the High Court at Bombay on 15-5-1930 against Ballabhdas and his two sons and obtained a decree on 25-7-1932 for Rs. 11,288-15-0 with interest at 6 p. c. p. a. from the date of the decree till realisation (Ex. D-3).

[5] One Gopaldas filed a suit in the Bhopal High Court on 16-11-1931 against Ballabhdas and his sons for dissolution of partnership, for rendition of accounts and for a decree for what might be found due on such account. A preliminary decree was passed on 18-3-1933. A copy of the judgment is Ex. D-1. A final decree (Ex. D-4) was passed against the defendant on 29-7-1935 for one lac of rupees and a charge was created on the joint family property which was in the possession of Ballabhdas as manager of the joint Hindu family before an alleged partition on 19-10-1929 which was declared null and void as against the plaintiff. Vithaldas and Bindrabandas were however not made personally liable for the decretal amount. Ballabhdas and his sons were also indebted to one Kesrimal to the extent of Rs. 4000. This was admitted by Vithaldas (P. W. 11) in his evidence.

[6] In execution of the decree of the Imperial Bank for the first instalment of Rs. 16,233-7-6 a house at Bhopal was sold, but the sale was set aside as Ballabhdas deposited Rs. 500 on 13-3-1931, and Rs. 4500 on 16-3-1931 and Bindrabandas deposited Rs. 11,233-7-6 on 6-7-1931. Bindrabandas had objected to the sale on the ground that the house belonged to him and that it was not liable to be sold in execution of the decree. The house was however eventually sold in execution of the decree for the second instalment which had fallen due on 15-5-1931 and it passed out of the family.

[7] The decree which the appellant had obtained in Civil Suit No. 1033 of 1930 in the Bombay High Court on 25-7-1932 was transmitted on 23-9-1932 to the District Court, Hoshangabad, for execution at Harda. In execution of that decree a house at Harda was attached as belonging to Ballabhdas and his sons.

[8] Goverdhandas, respondent 1, objected to the attachment on the ground that he was the owner of the house which had fallen to the share of Vithaldas at a partition between him and his father Ballabhdas and brother Bindrabandas and which Vithaldas had sold to him (Goverdhandas) under a sale deed dated 30-5-1931 (Ex. P-22) for Rs. 7000. The objection was partly allowed by an order dated 24-2-1934 (Ex/P-1) passed by the Court of the Subordinate Judge, First Class, Hoshangabad, in Miscellaneous Judicial Case No. 9 of 1933 in which it was held that Goverdhandas had acquired merely the 1/3rd share of Vithaldas in the house and that the said share was not liable to attachment and sale. Thereupon Goverdhandas filed a suit in the Court of the First Subordinate Judge, Second Class, Harda, on 2-11-1934, under O. 21, R. 63, Civil P. C., for a declaration that he was the owner of the entire house and that the 2/3rd share was not liable to attachment and sale in execution of the decree which the appellant had obtained against respondents 2 to 4.

[9] A revision application was filed by Goverdhandas against the order dated 24-2-1934 and one of us (Pollock, J.) refused to interfere in revision with that order in Civil Revision No. 298 of 1934 on 4-12-1936 (Ex P-13), on the ground that the applicant had another remedy of a suit under O. 21, R. 63, Civil P. C.

[10] The Court of the Subordinate Judge, Second Class, Harda, by the decree dated 6-9-1938, dismissed the suit. This decree was set aside in Civil Appeal No. 11-A of 1938 on 15-3-1940 by the District Court, Hoshangabad, and the claim of the plaintiff was decreed. It is against this appellate decree that the present appeal has been filed by defendant 1. The appellant firm was originally represented in the lower Court by Jainarayan. On his death on 17-5-1939 his sons were substituted in the District Court in his place as proprietors of the firm and they represent the firm in this appeal.

[11] The order dated 24-2-1934 in Miscellaneous Judicial Case No. 9 of 1933 was also partly against the appellant inasmuch as the 1/3rd share of Vithaldas in the house attached was released from attachment on the ground that it had been purchased by the respondent Goverdhandas. There are certain findings in that order which are against the appellant. These findings are (i) that Vithaldas sold the house to Goverdhandas for consideration and (ii) that the transaction was genuine and not fraudulent or bogus. As the appellant did not file a suit under O. 21, R. 63, Civil P. C., to establish the right of the firm to sell the 1/3rd share of Vithaldas in the house in execution of the decree, the order releasing the share of Vithaldas from attachment has become conclusive and it is not open to the appellant to sell that share in execution. The appellants, however, are not precluded from challenging the findings which were the basis of the order but are bound to displace those findings which were against the firm.

[12] The first question for decision in this appeal is whether the house in suit was allotted to the share of Vithaldas at a partition between him and his father Ballabhdas and brother Bindrabandas. A partition deed (Ex. P-29) was executed by Ballabhdas and his sons at Bhopal on 19-10-1929 and it was registered there on 21-10-1929. Under the deed the family estate was divided into three shares : Ballabhdas was given property valued at Rs. 45,170, Vithaldas and Bindrabandas were each given property valued at Rs. 1,11,178.

[13] The family also carried on business at Harda and the stock-in-trade of the shop there was valued at Rs. 1,18,606 and was divided half and half between Vithaldas and Bindrabandas each getting property valued at Rs. 59,303. A house at Harda was valued at Rs. 13,000 and was allotted to the share of Vithaldas. No mention was made of the debts payable by the family to others nor was any provision made in the deed for their payment.

[14] The partition deed dated 19-10-1929 was registered at Bhopal on 21-10 1929 but was not registered at Harda where it could have been registered under S. 26, Registration Act, 1908. As the house in dispute was situate at Harda, it was necessary that the partition deed should have been registered there, and as it was not done, the partition deed was not effective and operative so far as the allotment of the house to Vithaldas at the partition was concerned.

[15] The law has been summarised thus in paragraph 278, p. 228 of Halsbury's Laws of England, vol. 6 (Hailsham Edition) :

'Capacity to assign or acquire an immovable is governed entirely by the lex loci rei sitae.

An immovable can only be assigned in the form required by the lex loci rei sitae, and the Court will recognise as valid in point of form every assignment which is so valid by that law, although equities may in certain cases prevent the assignee from getting a good title. Thus, every assignment of land in England must be in the form required by English law.'

[16] In 43 Mad. 288[1] at p. 302, Wallis C. J. laid down the dictum in these terms :

'The instruments of which registration is compulsory under the Act are enumerated in S. 17, and the effects of failure to register are to be found in S. 49. The documents which were required to be registered by the earliest Registration Acts all related to immovable property meaning of course immovable property situated in British India; and it may be taken that the legislature has sufficiently manifested its intention that none of the enumerated documents affecting immovable property situated in British India should be valid unless so registered, even if executed outside British India, as held in (1869) 4 Ch. A. 741,[2] more especially as S. 26 provides for the registration of such documents at any time within four months after their first arrival in British India.'

[17] A partition of immovable property between co-parceners may be made orally and is not required by any law to be in writing. But if there is an instrument effecting a partition of immovable property, it falls under S. 17 (1) (b), Registration Act and is compulsorily registrable under that clause and if it is not registered, it does not affect any immovable property comprised therein and is not admissible as evidence of any transaction affecting such property under S. 49, Registration Act except for certain limited purposes stated in the proviso to the section which need not be set out as they are not material for the case.

[18] We hold that the deed of partition dated 19-10-1929 did not affect the house at Harda and was not admissible in evidence to prove that the house was allotted to the share of Vithaldas at a partition between him and his father, Ballabhdas and brother Bindrabandas.

[19] As the partition between Ballabhdas and his sons was reduced to writing, no oral evidence was admissible to prove the partition. Goverdhandas in his plaint stated that there was a partition prior to the execution of the partition deed on 19-10-1929 (Ex. P-29) but did not state the date when it was made, and it does not appear that he relied on any oral partition. Defendant 1, the firm of Nainsukhdas Sheonarayan, denied the partition and pleaded in the alternative that it was fraudulent as it was made to defeat or delay the creditors of defendants 2 to 4. The plaintiff did not state even in his rejoinder the date of the partition previous to 19-10-1929.

[20] Issues 2 and 3 (a) and (b) relate to the partition deed, dated 19-10-1929. The plaintiff did not object in the lower Court to the frame of the issues and did not contend that an issue should have been framed regarding an oral partition prior to 19-10-1929.

[21] Defendants 2 to 4 in their evidence stated that there was an oral partition between them a month previous to 19-10-1929 and lists were drawn up thus showing the allotment of property to the share of each of them. To the same effect is the evidence of Goverdhandas, (P. W. 15), an attesting witness to the partition deed dated 19-10-1929, who was then working as a cashier under Ballabhdas (defendant 2) in the firm of Ramkrishna Hemraj at Bhopal. Munshi Raghbar (P. W. 12), a pleader, was also an attesting witness and stated that he drafted the partition deed on the basis of the lists but he did not remember the date of the lists. He does not state that an oral partition between defendants 2 to 4 was made in his presence a month previous to the execution of the partition deed on 19-10-1929.

[22] There was no pleading in the suit or in the objection case to the effect that there was an oral partition a month before the execution of the partition deed on 19-10-1929. The lists which were alleged to have been drawn up at the time of the oral partition have not been filed in the case and they were not mentioned in the deed of partition dated 19-10-1929 (Ex. P-29) or in the pleadings of the plaintiff. If there had been an oral partition as stated by the witness, there would have been a recital to that effect in the partition deed. There is no such mention of a prior oral partition in the partition deed.

[23] No reason has been assigned why a partition deed was executed on 19-10-1929 if an oral partition had taken place a month before. In I. L. R. (1938) Nag. 604,[3] it was held that where parties to a contract agree to substitute a written instrument for an oral contract, then the ultimate contract is deemed to be contained in that instrument alone and no oral evidence of its terms can be given thereafter. The plaintiff in his replication suggested that the partition deed might be treated as a partition list, but even if it is so treated it would still require registration: vide I. L. R. (1942) Nag. 73[4].

[24] The lower appellate Court was not impressed with the oral evidence adduced by the plaintiff and found that even if oral evidence were admissible, it was insufficient to prove that the house in suit fell to the share of Vithaldas at a partition between him and his father Ballabhdas and brother Bindrabandas. No error or defect in procedure had been pointed out which might possibly have produced error or defect in the decision. In the absence of any vitiating circumstance the finding of fact arrived at by the lower appellate Court is binding in second appeal.

[25] The lower appellate Court did not give any finding whether the partition made on 19-10-1929 was fraudulent. The trial Court found that the partition was not real and was a device to embarrass the creditors of Ballabhdas and his sons. In our opinion, the finding is correct. The partition deed was executed on 19-10-1929, at a time when Ballabhdas and his sons were heavily indebted. The details of their indebtedness have already been stated in paras. 3 to 5 of our judgment and need not be restated. No provision was made in the partition deed for the payment of debts. Ballabhdas and his sons stated in their evidence that there was a private understanding at the time of partition that the two brothers were to pay the debt due by their Harda shop to defendant 1 and that their father was to pay the debt due by their Bhopal shop to the Imperial Bank, Bhopal. Ballabhdas did not pay the debt due to the Imperial Bank, as he was bound to do in accordance with the private understanding and the property at Bhopal allotted to the share of Bindrabandas was sold in execution of the decree of the Bank. In order to save the property of Bindrabandas, Vithaldas sold his house at Harda to Goverdhandas and the negotiation for the sale of the house was conducted by their father with Goverdhandas at Hyderabad. Ballabhdas also raised money on pledge of the ornaments of Bindrabandas. Notwithstanding the alleged partition, Ballabhdas and his sons acted as members of a joint family. In the suit which Gopaldas had filed against defendants 2 to 4 the partition was declared null and void as against the plaintiff: vide Ex. D-1, judgment, dated 18-3-1933: Our conclusions regarding partition may be thus summarised: (1) The partition made on 19-10-1929 was not real and was fraudulent. (2) The partition deed dated 19-10-1929 was inadmissible in evidence to prove that the house at Harda fell to the share of Vithaldas at a partition between him and his father Ballabhdas and brother Bindrabandas. (3) No oral evidence was admissible to prove that the house at Harda was allotted to the share of Vithaldas at a partition. (4) The evidence adduced in the case does not prove that the house was allotted to the share of Vithaldas. (5) The house in suit remained joint property of Ballabhdas and his sons.

[26] The second question for decision is whether the transaction embodied in the sale-deed dated 30-5-1931 (Ex. P-22) was genuine and for consideration. (Their Lordships considered the evidence on this point and in the course of their judgment observed as follows) :

[27] The Sub-Registrar, Harda, made an endorsement on the sale-deed that Rs. 7000 the consideration of the sale-deed, was paid in his presence by Jasraj, the agent of the plaintiff, to Vithaldas. Under S. 58 (c), Registration Act, 1908, a Sub-Registrar has to endorse on every document presented for registration the payment of money made in his presence in reference to the execution of the document. Under S. 60 (2) of the Act, there is a presumption that the facts mentioned in the endorsements referred to in S. 59 have occurred as therein mentioned. The endorsement by the Sub-Registrar of the payment of consideration of the sale-deed in his presence is prima facie evidence that the amount was actually paid by the agent of the plaintiff to Vithaldas : vide 23 Cal. 950[5] at p. 954, 11 Luck. 393[6] and 13 Luck 455[7]. (After further considering the evidence their Lordships proceeded:)

[28] The finding of the appellate Court that the transaction of sale was genuine and for consideration is a finding of fact which is supported by legal evidence on record, is not vitiated by any error of procedure and is binding on us in second appeal. Accordingly it must be accepted in second appeal that the transaction embodied in the sale deed dated 30-5-1931 (Ex. P-22) was genuine and for consideration.

[29] The third question is whether the sale deed was executed in order to defraud the creditors of defendants 2 to 4. The Court of the Subordinate Judge, 1st Class, Hoshangabad, in the objection case held that the sale was not fraudulent but that the sale of the house was effected in order to raise funds for setting aside the sale of the ancestral residential house of defendants 2 to 4 at Bhopal.

[30] The trial Court held that the sale was effected in order to defraud the creditors of defendants 2 to 4. The lower appellate Court held that the sale was not fraudulent and was not made for defeating or delaying the creditors of defendants 2 to 4. This is a finding of fact and would be binding in second appeal in the absence of any vitiating circumstance.

[31] The learned counsel for the appellant challenged the finding on the ground that it had been arrived at by ignoring the rule stated by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in 15 N. L. R. 68[8] for the appreciation of evidence in a case where the bona fides of a transaction is involved. The rule stated by their Lordships was that it is essentially necessary that the facts should be considered in relation to each other and weighed as a whole. (Their Lordships considered the facts and evidence and in the course of the discussion observed as follows :

[32] In 43 Cal. 521[9] it was held by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee :

> "The transfer which defeats or delays creditors is not an instrument which prefers one creditor to another, but an instrument which removes property from the creditors for the benefit of the debtor. The debtor must not retain a benefit for himself. He may pay one creditor, and leave another unpaid."

This decision was followed and applied in a series of cases some of which may be mentioned here. In cases in which no consideration of the law of Bankruptcy applies there is nothing to prevent a debtor paying some creditors in full and leaving others unpaid although the result may be that the rest of the assets will be insufficient to provide for payment of other debts : 27 N. L. R. 382,[10]. I. L. R. 1937 Nag. 291[11] and 13 Luck. 655.[12] (Their Lordships continued the discussion on facts and proceeded).

[33] The lower appellate Court has considered the facts in relation to each other and weighed them as a whole and there has been no breach of the rule stated in the Privy Council case. There has been no error of procedure to vitiate the finding of the lower appellate Court. It must accordingly be accepted in second appeal that the sale was not executed by Vithaldas to defraud his creditors but that it was executed to raise funds to save the ancestral residential house of defendants 2 to 4 at Bhopal which had been sold in execution of the Imperial Bank, Bhopal.

[34] The last question for decision is what interest did Goverdhandas acquire under the sale deed dated 30-5-1931 (Ex. P-22). Did he acquire merely the 1/3rd share of Vithaldas or did he acquire the entire house inclusive of the interest of Ballabhdas and Bindrabandas?

[35] The sale deed was executed in favour of the plaintiff by Vithaldas and it was attested by his father Ballabhdas and brother Bindrabandas. The solution of the question turns on the effect of attestation on the rights of the parties.

[36] The Court of the Subordinate Judge, 1st Class, Hoshangabad, in the objection case held that Goverdhandas acquired the 1/3rd interest of Vithaldas in the house and released that share as not liable to attachment and sale in execution of the decree of defendant 1 against defendants 2 to 4. Goverdhandas thereupon filed a suit under O. 21, R. 63, Civil P. C. for a declaration that he was the owner of the house and that the 2/3rd share also was not liable to attachment and sale in execution of the decree.

[37] The Court of the Subordinate Judge, 2nd Class, Harda, in the title suit held that the plea of estoppel which the plaintiff might have against defendants 2 and 4 was not available against defendant 1, that S. 41, T. P. Act had no application, and that the plaintiff acquired merely the 1/3rd share of Vithaldas in the house and not the entire house and was consequently not entitled to the declaration claimed.

[38] On appeal the Court of the District Judge, Hoshangabad, held that the plea of estoppel which was available to the plaintiff against defendants 2 and 4 was also available against defendant 1, that the purchase of the plaintiff was protected under S. 41, T. P. Act, that the plaintiff was the full owner of the house, and that the 2/3rd share of Ballabhdas and Bindrabandas was also not liable to attachment and sale in execution of the decree of defendant 1 against defendants 2 to 4.

[39] The lower Courts reached opposite conclusions on estoppel and on the applicability of S. 41, T. P. Act to the case. The question in second appeal is which view is correct. In I. A. Sup. Vol. 40[13] at p. 43, their Lordships of the Judicial Committee observed :

'It is a principle of natural equity, which must be universally applicable, that where one man allows another to hold himself as the owner of an estate, and a third person purchases it for value from the apparent owner in the belief that he is the real owner, the man who so allows the other to hold himself out shall not be permitted to recover upon his secret title unless he can overthrow that of the purchaser by showing, either that he had direct notice, or something which amounts to constructive notice, of the real title, or that there existed circumstances which ought to have put him upon an enquiry that, if prosecuted, would have led to a discovery of it.'

[40] The above rule is now embodied in S. 41, T. P. Act which is in these terms :

'Where, with the consent, express or implied, of the persons interested in immovable property, a person is the ostensible owner of such property and transfers the same for consideration, the transfer shall not be voidable on the ground that the transferor was not authorised to make it :

Provided that the transferee, after taking reasonable care to ascertain that the transferor had power to make the transfer, has acted in good faith.'

[41] The lower appellate Court in reaching the conclusion that S. 41 of the Act was applicable overlooked the proviso in that section. There is no reference to the proviso in the judgment of the lower appellate Court and there is no discussion of the question whether Goverdhandas, after taking reasonable care to ascertain that Vithaldas had power to make the transfer, had acted in good faith.

[42] There were two stages in the case which led to the execution of the sale-deed, firstly there was a negotiation for sale of the house by Ballabhdas with Goverdhandas at Hyderabad, and secondly there was the execution of the sale-deed at Harda. At the time of the negotiation for sale of the house, Goverdhandas was informed by Ballabhdas that the house at Harda had been allotted to the share of Vithaldas in a partition in 1929. Goverdhandas admits that he had not seen the deed of partition dated 19-10-1929 (Exhibit P-29) and did not ask Ballabhdas to show him the deed showing the allotment of the house to the share of Vithaldas. If he had seen the partition deed, he would have found that it was not registered at Harda and it was inoperative to affect immovable property situate there, or to prove that the house at Harda was allotted to the share of Vithaldas. The fact that Ballabhdas was negotiating for the sale of the house which had fallen to the share of Vithaldas was a circumstance which should have led Goverdhandas to inquire why Ballabhdas was negotiating on behalf of Vithaldas.

[43] Ballabhdas also tried to raise money from Goverdhandas on pledge of ornaments belonging to Bindrabandas. This was another additional circumstance which should have led Goverdhandas to be more circumspect in the matter. Nothing was settled at the time of the negotiation as regards the persons who were to execute the sale-deed. Goverdhandas stated in his evidence :

"I sent my munim Jasraj to Harda with Ballabhdas with instructions that he should make enquiries about the Harda house and purchase the same for the price not exceeding Rs. 7,000 and purchase the same if he was satisfied . . . . . I gave further instructions to make proper enquiries and have the document duly executed according to the law of the place and pay the amount. I further instructed him to get the document executed in the presence of defendants 2 to 4 so that there should be no trouble in the future from defendants 2 to 4."

The only representation that was made by Ballabhdas was that the house at Harda had fallen to the share of Vithaldas at a partition. That is a fact as it was so recorded in the deed of partition.

[44] The question whether the partition was effective in the absence of registration at Harda was a question of law. In order to operate as an estoppel the representation must be of a fact and not on a matter of law : 12 N. L. R. 100.[14] Ballabhdas was estopped from denying the factum of partition but was not estopped from challenging the effectiveness of the partition for want of registration. Bindrabandas was not present at Secunderabad at the time of the negotiation and no estoppel could arise as against him for any representation that Ballabhdas might have made.

[45] Estoppels under S. 115, Evidence Act, are by the very terms of the section not confined to the parties but extend to their representatives. The appellant firm had a decree against defendants 2 to 4 and was executing it against them. It was not claiming under them but was claiming adversely to them and cannot be said to be a representative of either of the judgment-debtors and an estoppel which might be available against Ballabhdas would not operate as against the appellant firm.

[46] The sale-deed was executed at Harda. Goverdhandas was not present at the time of the execution of the sale-deed but was represented by his munim Jasraj who arranged for the execution of the sale deed. Jasraj is dead and he has not been examined as a witness. There is no evidence to prove whether he made any enquiry and why he had the sale deed executed by Ballabhdas (Vithaldas?) alone.

[47] As already found in a previous paragraph, the house at Harda remained the joint property of the defendants notwithstanding the deed of partition dated 19-10-1929 because it was not registered at Harda. Ballabhdas (Vithaldas?) had thus a 1/3rd share of the house and was entitled to sell that share.

[48] In the sale deed dated 30-5-1931 (Ex. P-22) there is a recital that the house at Harda had fallen to the share of Vithaldas under the partition deed dated 19-10-1929 between defendants 2 to 4. A perusal of the partition deed would have disclosed to Jasraj that it was registered at Bhopal and was not registered at Harda. If Jasraj had made enquiries he would have found that the deed had not been registered at Harda and that for want of registration at Harda the deed was inoperative and Vithaldas was not entitled to transfer the entire house to Goverdhandas. In his evidence Goverdhandas had not stated what enquiry Jasraj had made in order to find out whether Vithaldas had power to make the transfer.

[49] The attestation by a person of a document ordinarily proves no more than that the signature of an executing party had been attached to a document in the presence of a witness and it does not involve the witness in any knowledge of the contents of the deed nor a affect him with notice of its provisions. An attestation may take place in circumstances which show that the witness did in fact know of the contents of the document but no such knowledge ought to be inferred from the mere fact of attestation: vide 18 N. L. R. 1.[15]

[50] The evidence of defendants 2 to 4 shows that the attestation by Ballabhdas and Bindrabandas was with full knowledge of the contents of the sale deed dated 30-5-1931. The circumstances in the case also indicate that the attestation by Ballabhdas or Bindrabandas must have been with knowledge of the contents of the sale deed and that it was made in order to assure Jasraj that they had no objection to the execution of the sale deed by Vithaldas. That however would not clothe Vithaldas with power to transfer the entire house to Goverdhandas. It cannot be said in this case that Goverdhandas or his agent Jasraj, after taking reasonable care to ascertain that Vithaldas had power to make the transfer had acted in good faith, and therefore the condition in the proviso to S. 41, T. P. Act, was not fulfilled. The transfer was thus operative only to the extent of the 1/3rd share which Vithaldas had, notwithstanding that he purported to transfer the entire house to Goverdhandas.

[51] Section 41, T. P. Act, is an exception to the ordinary rule that a transferor cannot convey a greater title to the transferee than he himself has and has to be construed strictly. The lower appellate Court relied on 15 Pat. 721[16] and 10 Luck. 652[17] for the conclusion it reached. In neither of these cases was the question of the applicability of S. 41, T. P. Act, involved. The cases cannot also be quoted as authorities for the proposition that an estoppel which might be available to a transferee as against the transferor is also available against the attaching creditors of the transferor. In the Patna case[16] the decision was based on estoppel under S. 115, Evidence Act. There a co-sharer mortgaged certain house alleging it to be his self-acquisition and the other co-sharers stood by and, being aware of the contents, attested the document, and the mortgagee on this representation advanced the lone and in execution of a decree on the basis of the mortgages purchased the mortgaged property. He was resisted at the time of delivery of possession by persons who claimed to have purchased in execution of a money decree against the co-sharers of the mortgagor and under a sale deed executed by them. The mortgagee brought the present suit in ejectment. It was held that the attesting co-sharers and the purchasers of their interest were estopped from challenging the title of the mortgagee auction-purchaser. The dispute was between the title of the two purchasers. The principle underlying the decision is that a purchaser of the interest of a debtor whether by private alienation or by auction sale is bound by the estoppel which is available against his transferor. The position of the attaching creditor was not considered and it was not held that the attaching creditor is also bound by the estoppel which might operate as against his judgment-debtor.

[52] Goverdhandas should have instructed his munim Jasraj to get the sale deed executed by defendants 2 to 4 because he ought to have realised from the negotiation which Ballabhdas had with him regarding the sale of the house at Harda and the pledge of the ornaments, that Ballabhdas was acting as a manager on behalf of himself and his sons. Instead of giving specific instructions he left the matter to his munim Jasraj. In the absence of the evidence of Jasraj it is not possible to know the reason why he got the sale deed executed by Vithaldas alone and had the attestation made by Ballabhdas and Bindrabandas. A reasonable enquiry by a prudent person would have disclosed that Vithaldas had no power to transfer beyond his 1/3rd share and if he took the sale deed from Vithaldas for more than his share the sale deed was not binding so far as the interest of other co-sharers who had not joined in the execution of the sale deed was concerned.

[53] In the Lahore (Lucknow ?) case,[17] it was held that the persons who had attested the agreement with knowledge of the contents thereof were estopped from setting up a title adversely to the person to whom the representation was made and who had altered his position to his detriment on the faith of that representation. In that case also the question of the attaching creditor was not considered and it was not decided how far estoppel against a person is available not against the person making the representation or the person deriving a title from him but claiming adversely to the person making representation.

[54] Goverdhandas has not stated that Vithaldas was an ostensible owner in possession of the house at Harda with the consent of Ballabhdas and Bindrabandas. Nor has he stated that the consideration was paid to Vithaldas because he acted on the faith of the representation that Vithaldas was the full owner. Goverdhandas was no stranger to defendants 2 to 4 and it cannot be said that he was misled to his detriment because of the representation made by Ballabhdas to him.

[55] The learned counsel for the plaintiff-respondent, Seth Goverdhandas relied on 18 Lah. 783[18] in support of his contention that S. 41, T. P. Act, was applicable. Thakurdas, claiming to be an adoped son of one Bagh Mal, mortgaged on 23-10-1920 certain property in favour of Damodar Das for Rs. 4000. The mortgage deed was attested by his natural brother Shori Lal. The mortgagee obtained a final decree for sale on 14-8-1934. On 3-12-1934 Shori Lal filed a suit for a declaration that he was entitled to a half share of the property of Bagh Mal under the terms of a will dated 23-1-1903 and that he had attested the mortgage deed without the knowledge of the will or that he had a half interest under the will. It was held that the object of S. 41, T. P. Act, is to protect a bona fide transferee for good consideration who has made proper enquiries, from being prejudiced by the conduct, however innocent, of the real owner in allowing the world at large to think that someone else is the owner of the property and that it was immaterial that the attestation was made in ignorance of his rights. The suit of Shori Lal was dismissed as barred under S. 115, Evidence Act.

[56] The learned counsel for Goverdhandas relied on A. I. R. 1940 Mad. 523[19] and submitted that the question whether a person has taken reasonable care to ascertain that his transferor had power to make the transfer, so as to get the protection of S. 41, is one of fact and has to be decided with reference to the circumstances of each case. This is undoubtedly true but in this case the finding of the lower appellate Court is vitiated as it has overlooked the proviso to S. 41, T. P. Act, and has not considered the question whether Goverdhandas, after taking reasonable care to ascertain that Vithaldas had power to make the transfer, had acted in good faith. In the absence of such a finding, S. 41 of the Act had no application. Neither S. 115, Evidence Act, nor S. 41, T. P. Act, has any application to the case. We accordingly hold that Goverdhandas merely acquired 1/3rd interest of Vithaldas in the house under the sale deed dated 30-5-1931 and is not entitled to a declaration that the 2/3rd share of Ballabhdas and Bindrabandas in the house is not liable to attachment and sale in execution of a decree of defendant 1 against defendants 2 to 4.

[57] The appeal is allowed. The decree of the lower appellate Court is reversed and that of the trial Court dismissing the suit of the plaintiff is restored. Respondent 1 will bear the costs of defendant 1 in all the Courts.

Judgment. — This appeal arises out of a suit for damages for wrongful attachment of the tonga and pony of the plaintiff-respondent in execution of the decree obtained against the plaintiff's husband by the defendant-appellant.

[2] There is a concurrent finding of the two lower Courts that the tonga belongs to the plaintiff and the learned counsel for the defendant-appellant has shown no good ground for interfering with that finding.

[3] The law on the question of wrongful execution of process against property is laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in 17 Cal. 436[1] at p. 442:

"The summary proceeding under S. 278 was taken by the respondent for the purpose of getting the release of an attachment issued in a suit to which he was not a party; and it does not appear to their Lordships that, in order to entitle him to recover full indemnity for the wrongful attachment of his goods, the respondent is bound to allege and prove that the appellants resisted his application maliciously, and without probable cause.

"The appellants mainly relied upon the English case in 1 H. & C. 621[2] which was cited as an authority for the proposition that a judgment-creditor is not responsible for the consequences of a sale, under a judicial order, of goods illegally taken in execution in satisfaction of his debt. 1 H. & C. 621[2] would have been an authority of importance had the law of execution been the same in India as in England, but there is in that respect no analogy between the two systems. In England the execution of a decree for money is entrusted to the Sheriff, an officer who is bound to use his own discretion, and is directly responsible to those interested for the illegal seizure of goods which do not belong to the judgment-debtor. In India warrants for attachment in security are issued on the ex parte application of the creditor, who is bound to specify the property which he desires to attach, and its estimated value. In the present case, by the terms of the perwana, no discretion was allowed to the officer of Court in regard to the selection of the goods which he attached; his only function was to secure under legal fence all bales of jute in the respondent's premises which were pointed out by the appellants. The illegal attachment of the respondent's jute on 28-11-1883 was thus the direct act of the appellants, for which they became immediately responsible n law; and the litigation and delay, and consequent depreciation of the jute, being the natural and necessary consequences of their unlawful act, their Lordships are of opinion that the liability which they incurred has been rightly estimated at the value of the goods upon the day of the attachment."

[4] This Privy Council case was followed in 2 Rang. 181[3] wherein A had brought a suit against B and obtained an order for the attachment before judgment of goods belonging to C, and it was held that this was a case in which a trespass to the goods having been committed by A, C had a cause of action against A and was entitled to recover from him damages without proving either an absence of reasonable and probable cause or malice in fact.

[5] The law has been well summarized in Ratanlal and Dhirajlal's Law of Torts, Edn. 13 (1943), at pp. 207 to 209 :

"A party to a suit is liable, though he acts innocently or mistakenly or inadvertently, if by his or his agent's or attorney's order the officer of the Court takes the goods of the wrong person, a stranger, in execution; 3 Bom. 74[4] . . . . . Proof of malice is not necessary when the property of a stranger not a party to a suit, is taken in execution."

[6] It was, however, contended by the learned counsel for the appellant that the attachment was not wrongful. I am unable to agree with him. The property belonged to the plaintiff Anjeerabai, and it was attached in execution of a decree of another person, viz., her husband. She had a right against all the world to possess it, and that legal right was violated by the defendant-appellant by attaching the property. Ratanlal and Dhirajlal in their Law of Torts, Edn. 13 (1943), say at pp. 4 and 5 :

"The crucial test of a legally wrongful act or omission is its prejudicial effect on the legal right of another. . . . . Every infringement of a private right denotes that an injury or wrong has been committed, which is imputable to a person by whose act, omission, or forbearance, it has resulted."

[7] Damages have therefore been rightly awarded to the plaintiff. The decision of the Court of first appeal is hereby upheld and this appeal is dismissed with costs.

Chunnialal — Plaintiff — Applicant v. Deoram and another — Defendants — Non-applicants.

Civil Revn. No. 86 of 1945, Decided on 9-7-1946, to revise order of Dist. Judge, Nimar, D/- 10-1-1945.

(a) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 6, R. 17—Real questions in controversy—Such questions are those on which issues are framed—Amendment involving complete change of front in defence cannot ordinarily be allowed—Lambardar suing for possession of abadi site on ground that transferor had non-transferable licence therein — Defendant admitting this in trial Court — In appeal defendant raising new question by amendment that transferor was proprietor of site—Amendment held ought not to be allowed.

No doubt a Court has very wide powers of allowing amendment but amendments will be allowed only for the purpose of determining the real questions in controversy between the parties. The real questions in controversy are those on which issues are framed in the trial Court. [Para 9]

Ordinarily, under law, a Court will not allow an amendment which involves a complete change of front in the defence. Just as a plaint cannot be allowed to be amended so as to introduce a new and inconsistent cause of action which would change the nature of the suit, so also the defence cannot be allowed to be altered so as to introduce a different set of circumstances inconsistent with the circumstances pleaded to begin with. [Paras 5 and 9]

Where, therefore, in a suit by the lambardar for possession of an abadi site on the ground that the defendants-transferors had a non-transferable licence in respect of the same and the defendants could not acquire the site without the consent of the plaintiff, it was admitted in the trial Court that the transferors were mere licencees of the abadi, but the defendants by their amendment wanted to raise for the first time in appeal a new question of controversy, viz., that the transferors were proprietors and therefore had transferable interest in the site:

Held, that the plea that the transferors were owners was inconsistent with the plea that they were licencees and the amendment sought for being in the nature of a complete change of front in the defence ought not to be allowed: 31 A.I.R. 1944 Lah. 319 (F. R. S. Dabir — for Applicant.

Y. V. Jakatdar — for Non-Applicants.

Order.—The plaintiff-applicant brought a suit for possession of an abadi site on the ground that the defendants-transferors had a non-transferable licence in respect of the same and the defendants could not acquire the site without the consent of the plaintiff lambardar. The defence was that the plaintiff's consent as lambardar was obtained, and in the alternative it was pleaded that as the defendants were co-sharers in the village no consent was required and that S. 203, C. P. Land Revenue Act did not apply for a transfer in favour of a co-sharer.

[2] The trial Court negatived both the defences and decreed the plaintiff's claim. The defendants appealed and again urged the same two defences. The lower appellate Court in its decision negatived the two defences. During the hearing of the appeal an application was filed by the defendants for permission to amend the defence and to withdraw the pleas that were raised in the trial Court. The lower appellate Court permitted the defendants to withdraw the pleas taken in the trial Court and to set up a defence that the transferors were owners of the house prior to the first settlement and therefore not licencees but proprietors and as such were entitled to transfer the site without reference to the lambardar. As this involved a fresh trial the case was remanded to the trial Court. The plaintiff-applicant feeling himself aggrieved by this decision comes up in revision.

[3] His main contention is that the lower appellate Court had no jurisdiction to allow the defendants leave to amend the written statement as the amendment converted the defence into another of a different and inconsistent character. It was argued in the lower appellate Court and here also by the learned counsel appearing for the non-applicants that they pleaded in the Court below that S. 203, C. P. Land Revenue Act was not applicable to the facts of the present case, that therefore, when they are stating that the transferors were the owners before 1865 they are only pleading that S. 203, C. P. Land Revenue Act is not applicable to the facts of the case, and that they were not raising any inconsistent defence, but adding one more ground to their defence that S. 203, C. P. Land Revenue Act was not applicable.

[4] Reading the written statement of the defendants in the Court below I find that they pleaded that S. 203, Land Revenue Act was not applicable as it was a transfer in favour of co-sharers. It was thus a very specific plea, and if they now want to say that it is not applicable because of different circumstances altogether, they are raising a new defence. It is not only a new defence but an inconsistent one. It is rightly urged before me on behalf of the applicant that at the stage of the pleadings in the trial Court the fact that the transferors were licencees in the abadi and had no interest which could be transferred without reference to the lambardar was not disputed, and that it was therefore that it was pleaded that the consent of the lambardar was obtained and the transfer made and that it was pleaded in the alternative that when a transfer was made to co-sharers no consent was required as there was an agreement to that effect between the parties at the time of the imperfect partition. What is tried to be introduced by the amendment is a statement that the transferors had a transferable interest as they owned a site before the settlement of 1865. Admittedly this plea was not raised when the defendants went to trial in the trial Court.

[5] This is a new plea, and it is stated in the application for amendment that the defendants were not aware of this circumstance when they made their pleadings in the Court below and they, therefore, wanted an opportunity to make that pleading at the stage of the appeal. The plea that the defendants-transferors were owners is inconsistent with the plea that they were licencees. Ordinarily, under a law, Court will not allow such an amendment as it involves a complete change of front in the defence. Mulla at p. 599 of his Civil Procedure Code, Edn. 11, has referred to English and Indian cases on the point and has pointed out that the Court will not allow an amendment that will involve a complete change of front in the defence: see also I. L. R. (1944) Lah. 443=A. I. R. 1944 Lah. 319,[1] where it was laid down that no doubt in a sense an appeal is a continuation of a suit but that this is only in a limited sense, and that it does not, however, mean that the rights which could be pleaded and enforced before a suit was finally adjudicated by the first Court, could be pleaded as of right for the first time during the pendency of the appeal.

[6] Their Lordships of the Privy Council in 48 Cal. 832[2] at p. 835, stated dealing with the case of an amendment that

"full powers of amendment must be enjoyed and should always be liberally exercised, but nonetheless no power has yet been given to enable one distinct cause of action to be substituted for another, nor to change, by means of amendment, the subject-matter of the suits."

[7] The amendment sought for being in the nature of a complete change of front in the defence ought not to be allowed. The lower appellate Court in allowing the amendment relied upon A. I. R. 1937 P. C. 42.[3] That case has no application to the facts of the present case. That was a case in which a statement was made in the trial Court, and the case was tried on the basis of that statement, but there was no regular application for amendment, and what was stated by the High Court was that the plaintiff should be permitted to amend and proceed with the case regularly. In the present case no plea was advanced in the trial Court that the transferors were the owners of the property and therefore could transfer.

[8] Another case relied on by the lower appellate Court is A. I. R. 1940 Lah. 201[4] where there was a mere technical defect in the pleading and that was allowed to be amended. A. I. R. 1941 All. 298[5] and A. I. R. 1938 Rang. 461[6] which are the other two cases referred to by the Judge are also beside the point.

[9] In 1939 N. L. J. 525[7] an amendment which introduced a new plea, distinct and inconsistent with the original plea, was not permitted to be raised. It is true that the Court has very vide powers of allowing amendment, but amendments will be allowed only for the purpose of determining the real questions in controversy between the parties. Thereal questions in controversy between the parties are those on which issues are framed in the trial Court. It was admitted in the trial Court that the transferors were mere licencees of the abadi. The defendants by their amendment wanted to raise for the first time in appeal a new question of controversy, viz., that the transferors were proprietors. Just as a plaint cannot be allowed to be amended so as to introduce a new and inconsistent cause of action which would change the nature of the suit, so also the defence cannot be allowed to be altered so as to introduce a different set of circumstances inconsistent with the circumstances pleaded to begin with.

[10] It was contended on behalf of the non-applicants that in cases where amendment was allowed no revision lay and therefore there should be no interference. I have pointed out that the Court in this particular case has acted without jurisdiction in allowing the amendment of the nature indicated in the judgment. A question of jurisdiction is involved. In any case, the Court has acted illegally and irregularly in allowing amendment at this stage. In 18 Nag. L. R. 30[8] it was laid down that the object of R. 1 (2), O. 23, Civil P. C., is not to enable a plaintiff, after he has failed to conduct his suit with proper care and diligence and after his witnesses have failed to support his case, to obtain an opportunity of commencing the trial afresh in order to avoid the result of his previous misconduct of the case and so to prejudice the opposite party, and that the High Court can revise an order allowing a plaintiff to withdraw from a suit with liberty to institute a fresh suit. The present case is of a similar nature. It gives liberty to the defendants to make out a new case after they had failed in the trial Court and after they had virtually failed in appeal on the case as made out in the trial Court. Such an order is certainly revisable by this Court in revision.

[11] I allow the application for revision with costs and decline to permit amendment of the pleadings by the defendants. As the appeal as filed before the lower appellate Court on the pleas raised in the trial Court failed as stated by the lower appellate Court itself, and as no argument was advanced before me to show that that decision was wrong the decree of the trial Court holding the plaintiff entitled to take possession of the site is confirmed. Counsel's fee Rs. 25.

Deoman Bhagwan—Appellant v. Atmaram Suryabhan—Respondent.

Second Appeal No. 12 of 1944, Decided on 11-2-1947, against the judgment and decree of 3rd Addl. Dist. Judge, Akola, D/- 19-11-1943.

(a) Civil P.C. (1908), Sch. 3, Para. 11—Sale without sanction of Collector — Validity.

A person, of whose property the Collector has assumed management under Sch. 3, is incompetent to transfer that property without the sanction of the Collector under Sch. 3, Para. 11, and hence a sale made without such sanction is invalid. [Para 4]

Annotation : ('44-Com.) C. P. C., Sch. 3, Para. 11, N. 1, pt. 2.

(b) Transfer of Property Act (1882), S. 43 — Sale without sanction under Sch. 3, Para. 11, Civil P. C.—Fact known to vendee — Vendor if estopped from pleading invalidity of sale — Evidence Act (1872), S. 115.

There can be no estoppel against a statute, nor can estoppel arise if the true facts are known to the party pleading the estoppel. Thus, where a person executes a sale deed on the fraudulent representation that he has obtained the requisite sanction of the Collector under Sch. 3, Para. 11, but the true fact that no such sanction is obtained is known to the vendee, no question of estoppel would arise either under S. 43, T. P. Act or under S. 115, Evidence Act and the vendor would be entitled to plead the invalidity of the sale: 4 A. I. R. 1917 Nag. 215 (F. B.), Foll.; 30 A. I. R. 1943 P. C. 29, Disting. [Para 5]

(c) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 100 — Finding of fact, record of.

Since findings of fact by the lower appellate Court are to be treated as final they should be clearly stated leaving no room for doubt or difference: 30 A.I.R. 1943 P.C. 24, Foll. [Para 5]

Judgment.—This is a second appeal against the judgment and decree of Mr. N. H. Mujumdar, Third Additional District Judge, Akola, in Civil Appeal No. 79-A of 1943 decided on 19-11-1943.

[2] The suit from which this appeal arises was filed by the respondent, Atmaram Maratha, for possession of field survey No. 48 having an area of 14.23 acres, situated in mouza Nandkhed, taluq and pargana Balapur in the Akola district in Berar. The case of the plaintiff (respondent in this matter) was that defendant 1, Deoman (appellant here) had fraudulently got from him a sale-deed (Ex. D.3) in respect of this field on 22-5-1935 on a promise to pay Rs. 1200 as consideration for the sale, that this Deoman did not pay the consideration and that the plaintiff-respondent was, therefore, entitled to get the holding in dispute back from him. Mesne profits were also claimed for the period of occupation by defendant 1, Deoman. The plaintiff also pleaded that at the time of the sale the property was under the management of the Collector under Sch. 3, Civil P. C., and that the transaction, therefore, was void.

[3] The trial Court found in favour of the defendant-appellant and the judgment and decree of that Court were reversed in the lower appellate Court. The learned Judge of the first appellate Court held that out of the total consideration Rs. 731 which were agreed to be paid to one Hari Tukaram, had not been paid. This finding cannot now be challenged. He also held that no question of estoppel arises nor did S. 43, T. P. Act, apply to this case.

[4] Mr. T. P. Naik, on behalf of the appellant relies upon the judgment in A. I. R. 1943 P.C. 29[1] and contends that S. 43, T. P. Act, covers this case because the plaintiff made a false representation to the vendee that permission to sell this disputed field had been obtained from the Collector. It is now admitted by both the plaintiff and the defendant that prior to the sale the permission of the Collector as required by para 11 of Sch. 3, Civil P. C., was not obtained. The sale must, therefore, be held to be invalid because the vendor was incompetent to transfer the property without such sanction. The learned counsel for the appellant, however, wishes to make one reservation that the sale should not be entirely ignored because if there was a false representation made by the vendor then he should be estopped from setting up his own fraud to save his property. His contention is that in A. I. R. 1943 P. C. 29[1] their Lordships of the Privy Council did not say that the incompetency which arises under para. 11 is a general incompetency because in that case a personal covenant contained in the self-same document was enforced against the transferor. It is obvious that there were two separate contracts, one in relation to the property and the other quite independent of it and, their Lordships of the Privy Council held that portion of the contract enforceable which had nothing to do with the incompetency arising under the Civil Procedure Code. Under para. 11 the judgment-debtor whose property is under the Collector's management is precluded from dealing with that property without the Collector's permission. But he is free to enter into any other contract which is independent of the property. The contract which their Lordships were considering was capable of being divided into two parts one part being bad because it offended against Sch. 3 and the other perfectly valid and binding because it had nothing to do with the property in respect of which the judgment-debtor was under a disability being merely a personal covenant to discharge the debt. No such question arises in this case and the case relied upon by the learned advocate appearing on behalf of the appellant does not apply.

[5] This case is on all fours with an earlier case reported in 13 N. L. R. 130[2] in which the applicability of S. 43, T. P. Act, 1882, to similar circumstances was negatived by a Full Bench of this Court. That case was approved in 14 N.L.R. 181[3] by their Lordships of the Privy Council who expressly overruled 36 Bom. 510[4] which was cited to me and which seems to be the sheet-anchor of the appellant's case. In view of the clear statement of the law by the Full Bench and approved by their Lordships of the Privy Council, it is unnecessary to determine whether any representation was made and if so whether the appellant himself knew the true facts. Even on the ground of estoppel the appellant would have no case because the evidence clearly shows that he was not only aware that sanction of the Collector was needed but that such sanction had not been obtained. There can be no estoppel against a statute nor can an estoppel arise if the true facts were known to the appellant. The evidence and the finding of the first appellate Court is that both sides at the time of the execution of the sale-deed knew that the field specified in the plaint was under the Collector's management and that no permission had been taken. Thus if a question of estoppel whether contained in S. 43, T. P. Act or S. 115, Evidence Act be allowed to be raised the plaintiff's case would fail on the evidence in the case. The learned Judge of the Court of appeal below has not given a clear finding as to the knowledge of the appellant but that seems to be the conclusion which he reached on the evidence of the case. I may point out for his benefit that a finding of fact has to be clearly stated leaving no room for doubt or difference, and I quote with respect the observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in A. I. R. 1943 P. C. 24.[5]

"Since findings of fact by the lower appellate Court are to be treated as final they should at least be clear and specific—not ambiguous or inferential."

On a complete examination of the evidence in this case I find that the conclusion reached by the learned Judge of the first appellate Court as to the knowledge of the appellant about want of sanction and the necessity for that sanction is correct. The appellant, therefore, was correctly adjudged as having got no title from the said sale-deed and the appeal must inevitably fail. The appeal is dismissed with costs on the appellant.

Second Appeal No. 562 of 1943, Decided on 12-12-1946, from judgment and decree of 3rd Addl. Dist. Judge, Akola, D/- 26-6-1943.

(a) Contract Act (1872), S. 128 — Liability of surety when arises.

A contract of guarantee must be construed strictly in favour of the surety. 30 A. I. R. 1943 Bom. 243, Rel. on. [Para 4]

Under S. 128 the liability of a surety is co-extensive with that of the principal debtor unless it is otherwise provided for by the contract. The contract of guarantee has, therefore, to be construed to find out the exact point of time when the liability of the surety arises. In some cases it may be that the surety's liability may begin simultaneously with liability of the person guaranteed. But it often happens that the remedy against the principal is barred when the liability of the surety arises. The question depends on the terms of the contract of guarantee by which the surety has bound himself : 6 A. I. R. 1919 Cal. 636, Rel. on. [Para 4]

Where the liability arises only on the happening of a contingency the surety is not liable on his contract until that contingency has actually happened : 21 I. C. 437 (All.) ; 1937 All. L. J. 1265 ; (1918) 2 K. B. 833 and 17 A. I. R. 1930 Cal. 17, Ref. [Para 4]

(b) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 34, Rr. 1 and 6—Suit on mortgage — Surety for payment of deficiency arising on sale of mortgaged property also joined — Conditional decree for balance if can be passed against him—Contract Act (1872), S. 128.

In a suit on mortgage, though a surety for the mortgagor who has contracted to make good the deficit which may be found due on sale of the mortgaged property, is a necessary party by virtue of S. 91, T. P. Act read with O. 34, R. 1 no conditional decree for the balance can be passed against the surety. The reason is that the liability of the surety would arise only if the mortgaged property is found insufficient to repay the debt. Such a claim for relief against the surety would be premature. [Paras 5, 7 and 9]

A. Ahmed—for Respondent 1.

Judgment.—This is a second appeal against the judgment and decree of Mr. N. H. Mujumdar, Third Additional District Judge, Akola, in Transfer Civil Appeal No. 53-A of 1943, decided on 26-6-1943.

[2] The suit was on the footing of a mortgage bond and the present appellant having stood surety for the repayment of the amount was joined as a party and against him relief was claimed that in case the sale of the property did not satisfy the debt, the balance should be ordered to be recovered from the surety. The trial Court passed a conditional decree and in so far as it affects the surety the wording of this decree in the appellate Court is:

"In default the property described on the reverse shall be sold and in case the mortgaged house is sold and the sale proceeds do not fully satisfy the decree, the balance due shall be recovered from defendant 2 . . ."

The contract of guarantee is incorporated in a mortgage bond, dated 14-11-1925. This mortgage bond is Ex. P-1. It was simple mortgage and according to the covenants the mortgage debt was to be paid on or before 29-11-1927. The plaintiff (respondent 1 in this matter), brought this suit against the mortgagor and the surety (appellant before me) on 24-11-1939. The claim against the mortgagor was decreed, and it was also ordered as shown above that if the mortgaged property was found insufficient to repay the decretal amount the balance was recoverable from the surety.

[3] Before taking up the two arguments urged before me on behalf of the appellant it is necessary to reproduce the material part of the mortgage bond which deals with the contract of guarantee. It reads thus:

"In case the mortgaged property passes to others because of any body's rights in any way being found to the property mortgaged by the debtor, I will pay your amount mentioned above with sharti (penal or conditional) interest. I further agree that I myself will personally make good the whole of the deficit also that may be found on the sale of the mortgaged property . . . . . ."

It was argued that the suit against the surety-appellant should have been brought within six years from the date of default, namely, 29-11-1927. It was also argued that the suit was premature inasmuch as this surety had agreed to make good the deficit found after the sale of the hypothecated property. These two arguments are destructive of each other. In view of what I hold on the second argument it is not necessary to consider the first.

[4] A contract of guarantee must be construed strictly in favour of the surety. This is settled law: see 45 Bom. L. R. 510.[1] Further, under S. 128, Contract Act the liability of a surety is co-extensive with that of the principal debtor unless it is otherwise provided for by the contract. The contract of guarantee has, therefore, to be construed to find out the exact point of time when the liability of the surety arises. In some cases it may be that the surety's liability may begin simultaneously with the liability of the person guaranteed. But there are cases in which this may not happen. It was held in 53 I. C. 999[2] at p. 1000 as under :

"The liability of a surety does not necessarily in all cases arise simultaneously with that of the principal. It often happens that the remedy against the principal is barred when the liability of the surety arises. The question depends on the terms of the contract of guarantee by which the surety has bound himself."

If there is no stipulation to the contrary the liability of the surety arises at once: see 44 Cal. 978[3] at p. 990. It has been held in a large number of cases that where the liability arises only on the happening of a contingency the surety is not liable on his contract until that contingency has actually happened: see 11 A.L.J. 689;[4] 1937 A. L. J. 1265;[5] (1918) 2 K. B. 833[6] at pp. 840, 843 and 57 Cal. 764.[7]

[5] In the present case the agreement was that the surety was to make good the deficit which may be found due on the sale of the mortgaged property. The surety is entitled to say that the plaintiff must take action against the mortgaged property before he can claim any relief against him. This is borne out by the cases which have been cited above in which the claim was held to be premature. In my opinion, therefore, the claim of the plaintiff (respondent 1 in this matter) against the surety-appellant is premature.

[6] It was argued that under S. 91, T. P. Act the surety for the payment of the mortgage debt or any part thereof is entitled to institute a suit for redemption and may redeem the mortgaged property and that under O. 34, R. 1, Civil P. C. the plaintiff has to join in a suit for foreclosure or sale all persons having an interest either in the mortgage security or in the right of redemption. The surety, therefore, was a necessary party to the suit and the plaintiff having joined him merely claims a conditional decree against him. In support of this contention reliance is also placed upon the analogy of O. 34, R. 6, Civil P. C. Under O. 34, R. 6 of the Code it is laid down :

"Where the net proceeds of any sale under the last preceding rule are found insufficient to pay the amount due to the plaintiff, the Court, on application by him may if the balance is legally recoverable from the defendant otherwise than out of the property sold, pass a decree for such balance."

It was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council in 47 Cal. 370[8] that a decree can be passed even if the mortgaged property has not been brought to sale and in 36 C. W. N. 709[9] and A. I. R. 1928 Lah. 653[10] it was laid down that a conditional decree passed in anticipation of the sale of the property is not void.

[7] Their Lordships of the Privy Council in 47 Cal. 370[8] were interpreting S. 90, T. P. Act, 1882 and held that a personal decree, in anticipation of an attempt to sell the property can be passed against the mortgagor. Their Lordships observed that it was not necessary to put a strict and technical construction upon the section because no reason could be assigned in its favour and from which no advantage could possibly be derived by a mortgagor. Their Lordships also held that the order, though made at the time of the decree for the sale of the mortgaged estate, operates at a future date, and, therefore, causes no hardship to the mortgagor. The case of a surety who is only bound by his contract stands on a somewhat different footing, and in his case there is a considerable disadvantage to him if a decree is passed against him before the mortgagee has first attempted to realize his money from the mortgagor and the property involved in the mortgage. Also in the case of a surety the cause of action arises only when the bond is enforceable against him. A cause of action is said to accrue when all facts exist which the plaintiff has to prove as part of his case. It is true that the surety is a necessary party in a suit filed for the enforcement of the mortgage but it is one thing to join him as a necessary party and quite another to claim a decree against him. The plaintiff could have joined the surety as a necessary party under O. 34, R. 1, Civil P. C. without claiming any relief against him. That he was required to do by virtue of S. 91, T. P. Act read with O. 34, R. 1, Civil P. C. This is because the surety can, as a person interested claim to redeem the property. The mortgagee's right to claim relief against the surety would arise if the mortgaged property was found insufficient to repay the debt. That clearly shows that unless the cause of action against the surety has arisen no relief can be claimed against him.

[8] On redemption of the property by the surety or on payment of the amount under the mortgage bond the surety would be entitled under S. 92, T. P. Act to subrogation and even apart from this section he would be entitled to all the rights which the creditor had against the principal debtor. The surety may elect to satisfy the mortgage debt and claim his right against the principal either under S. 92, T. P. Act or Ss. 140 and 141, Contract Act. If he does not elect to do so the right of suit against the surety on his own bond still subsists and the accrual of that right depends upon the conditions of the bonds entered into by the surety.

[9] The learned Judges of the two Courts below failed to keep this distinction in mind and though the learned appellate Judge was of opinion that the suit was in a sense premature he fell into error that S. 91, T. P. Act read with O. 34, R. 1, Civil P. C. entitled the plaintiff to claim relief of a conditional nature against the surety. In my opinion the suit of the plaintiff is premature so far as the surety is concerned. The decree will be modified by omitting the part operating against the surety. The costs of the appellant in this Court and the lower appellate Court will be borne by respondent 1 who will bear his own costs in the two Courts. Costs of the trial Court will be borne as ordered by that Court.

Civil Revn. No. 488 of 1945, Decided on 17-1-1947, from order of 1st Addl. Dist. Judge, Akola, D/-4-8-1945.

Civil P. C. (1908), O. 21, R. 89—Sale in execution of money decree—Subsequent reversal of decree on appeal — Application for setting aside sale, under R. 89—Deposit made under R. 89 (a) but no deposit under R. 89 (b) — R. 89 if complied with.

The sum referred to in R. 89 need not be received through the Court, nor need it have been received in cash. It can also be in kind, and the receipt can even be constructive: 15 A. I. R. 1928 Nag. 126, Rel. on. [Para 4]

Where the property of the judgment-debtor was sold in execution of money decree, but before the sale was confirmed the decree was reversed on appeal and thereupon the judgment-debtor applied under O. 21, R. 89 to have the sale set aside and made a deposit of 5% under R. 89 (a) for payment to the purchaser but did not make any deposit under R. 89 (b) for payment to the decree-holder on the ground that the decree having been reversed nothing was due to the decree-holder :

Held that although an application under R. 89 imported an admission that the sale was good despite any subsequent reversal of the decree the decree was no longer good and as between the judgment-debtor and the decree-holder it was wiped out and therefore there was under the law a constructive receipt within the meaning of R. 89 (b) by the decree-holder of what was once due to him. Hence the deposit under R. 89 (a) without deposit under R. 89 (b) was sufficient compliance with R. 89: 21 A. I. R. 1934 Nag. 21, Approved; 20 A. I. R. 1933 Mad. 598, Not approved; 18 A. I. Order. — This is a stranger auction-purchaser's application for revision. Non-applicant 1 whom I will call the decree-holder, obtained a simple money decree against non-applicant 2 whom I will refer to as the judgment-debtor. In execution the property in question here was put up to sale and was purchased by the applicant Vithoba on 12-4-1944. Three days later the decree was reversed on appeal. On 4-5-1944, that is to say, within 30 days of the sale, the judgment-debtor applied under O. 21, R. 89, to have the sale set aside. He deposited the 5 per cent. payable to the auction-purchaser under O. 21, R. 89 (a), but made no deposit under R. 89 (b) for payment to the decree-holder on the ground that the decree having been reversed nothing was now due to the decree-holder. The first Court set aside the sale, and on appeal the lower appellate Court confirmed this order. The auction-purchaser now seeks to revise these orders.

[2] I agree with the lower appellate Court that the auction-purchaser is not affected by the subsequent reversal of the decree on appeal. His sale is good and can only be set aside under Rr. 89, 90 and 91. Neither R. 90 nor R. 91 has been called in aid in this case and so we are left with R. 89, and all I have to determine is whether in such circumstances the deposit of 5 per cent. under cl. (a) for payment to the purchaser without any deposit under cl. (b) for payment to the decree-holder is sufficient compliance with R. 89. I am of opinion that it is.

[3] The only case exactly in point cited before me was 56 Mad. 808,[1] but, with due respect to the learned Judge who decided that case, I prefer the Nagpur view. There is no reported case exactly in point in this Province, but the scope of R. 89 was exhaustively considered by Subhedar A. J. C. in 31 N. L. R. 67[2] and the principle which he laid will, in my opinion, apply here.

[4] It is to be observed that the judgment-debtor is not required to deposit the whole of the amount specified in the proclamation of sale. He need only deposit such amount "less any amount which may, since the date of such proclamation of sale, have been received by the decree-holder."

I agree with Subhedar Addl. J. C. and with Halifax Addl. J. C. in another ruling, A. I. R. 1928 Nag. 126[3] that the sum referred to there need not be received through the Court, nor need it have been received in cash. It can also be in kind, and the receipt can even be constructive. The law would, in my opinion, have grown very foolish and ultra-technical if it required a person to pay into a man's hands a sum of money which that man would be bound at the same moment to return. When A owes B a sum of money and B is under the law under an obligation to return that or a like sum, is not compelled to go through the farce of counting out a number of coins for the pleasure of seeing B hand them back the moment they are handed over. The law permits A and B mutually to cancel each other's debt, and that in law amounts to payment by A to B of the money A owes B, and a like payment by B to A of the sum B owes A. In the same way if the debt which A once owed B is cancelled for this reason or that, and the reason can, in my opinion, be anything—either an adjustment, or a constructive payment, or a novation, or, as here, a cancellation of the debt by a competent Court, then A need not go through the farce of handing over money in order that he might get it back again. The Court will, where necessary, construe these facts to import constructive receipt of the sum specified.

[5] I agree with the learned Madras Judge that an application under O. 21, R. 89, Civil P. C., imports an admission that the sale was good. But the position adopted by the judgment-debtor here does not seek to challenge the validity of the sale. He admits that it is good despite the reversal of the decree. But O. 21, R. 89 does not require him equally to admit that the decree obtained against him still stands. With all due respect, the fallacy of the Madras reasoning seems to be there. The learned Judge assumes that because the judgment-debtor says he no longer owes the decree-holder anything, therefore he says the sale is bad. In my opinion, that is not the effect of an application like the present. The sale is good, as the Privy Council held, despite any subsequent reversal of the decree but the decree is no longer good and as between the judgment-debtor and the decree-holder is wiped out, and therefore there is under the law a constructive receipt within the meaning of R. 89 (b) of the decree-holder of what was once due to him.

[6] The Privy Council decision in 27 N. L. R. 95[4] does not apply because the 5% for payment to the auction-purchaser was never made there. This ruling has been considered and explained in 31 N. L. R. 67.[2]

[7] The application fails and is dismissed. There will be no order as to costs as no one has appeared for the other side.

Misc. First Appeal No. 200 of 1946, Decided on 26-2-1947, from order of Addl. Dist. Judge, Wardha, D/- 15-10-1946.

(a) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 73 and O. 21, R. 89 — Parties — Creditor applying for rateable distribution.

A creditor applying for rateable distribution has no locus standi in proceedings for setting aside sale under O. 21, R. 89, or in appeal therefrom. The only persons concerned in these proceedings are the persons applying, decree-holder and the auction-purchaser: [Para 9]

(b) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 21, R. 89 — Setting aside sale in part.

Order 21, R. 89 does not contemplate of a sale being set aside in part to the extent of the share of the applicant judgment-debtor; it is either set aside or not. Nor is it necessary that all the persons owning property should be the applicants. [Para 11]

(c) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 21, R. 89 — Application under — Mention of auction-purchasers in — Necessity of.

The auction purchasers are no doubt necessary parties to the proceedings for setting aside sales but it is not necessary that their names should be mentioned in the application under O. 21, R. 89, as their names are in the execution record. It is sufficient if notices are issued to them. [Para 12]

Order 21, R. 89 (1), cl. (b) is satisfied by an unequivocal admission of the decree-holder that his decree was satisfied within 30 days of the date of sale. Judgment.—In execution of a decree passed in C. S. No. 31 of 1933 by the Additional District

Judge, Wardha, the immovable property of the judgment-debtors consisting of village shares was attached and put to auction on 3-1-1946 and 4-1-1946. It was purchased by different persons who are impleaded in this appeal as respondents 2, 3, 4 and 5. The total amount for which the property was sold was Rs. 12,700 though the decretal amount due was Rs. 18,752-3-8.

[2] On 1-2-1946, as per agreement between the decree-holder, who in this case is a deity represented by Mr. N. R. Nagle, the President of the 'Laxminarayan Deosthan Committee,' and the judgment-debtors the decree was agreed to be satisfied by payment of Rs. 10,000 in cash and execution of a promissory-note for Rs. 2000 which as a fact was executed by some of the judgment-debtors viz., Laxmansingh and Pratapsingh. On the same day Mr. Nagle, on receipt of the amount and the promissory-note, passed a receipt of full satisfaction of the decree which runs as follows:

"I, the undersigned, Narayan Rao Rajaram Nagle, pleader, Hinganghat, president on behalf of the plaintiff Shree Laxminarayan Dewasthan, Kapsi, execute the receipt (this receipt) as follows:

In the said execution case the immovable property of the defendants was sold by auction on 3-1-1946 and 4-1-1946. The said execution having this day been privately compromised (i. e., a decision having this day been privately arrived at in respect of the said execution case), a sum of Rs. 12,000, twelve thousand rupees, has been agreed to be taken in full satisfaction of the decree. Out of the same, I have this day received Rs. 10,000, ten thousand rupees, in cash and for the balance of Rs. 2,000 two thousand rupees, the defendants have executed a promissory note.

In all I have taken and received Rs. 12,000 twelve thousand rupees as above. The remaining amount has been remitted. This execution case has been fully satisfied and nothing remains due from the defendants in respect of this execution case. Hence the auction sale may be set aside."

[3] On 1-2-1946, the judgment-debtor Pratapsingh deposited in Court the amount payable by way of commission to the auction-purchasers and applied under O. 21, R. 89, Civil P. C., to set aside sales, producing therewith the decree-holder's receipt for full satisfaction of the decree. This application appears to have been countersigned by Mr. N. R. Nagle for the decree-holder obviously by way of his consent to the setting aside of the sales.

[4] The auction-purchasers, who were noticed, however opposed the application and the contentions raised on their behalf are mainly these: (a) That O. 21, R. 89 does not recognize payments made privately to the decree-holder. The failure of the judgment-debtor to deposit the decretal amount in cash is fatal to the application to set aside the sale. (b) That payment alleged to have been made was at best Rs. 12,000, i. e., for less than the decretal amount. (c) That a private compromise between the decree-holder and the judgment-debtors for satisfaction of the decree cannot affect the rights of the auction-purchasers. (d) That as there are various claims for rateable distribution the decree-holder is fraudulently trying to appropriate the bulk of the money to himself.

[5] At a very late stage on 22-6-1946 i. e., nearly two months after the case was closed for arguments, a statement was put in on behalf of the decree-holder opposing the application to set aside sale on the ground that the promissory note for Rs. 2,000 was not executed by the judgment-debtor No. 3 and the judgment-debtors failed to pay Rs. 2,000 due on promissory note as orally undertaken by them to do.

[6] Seth Gopaldas Mohta of Hinganghat, who is a recorded co-sharer in these villages, viz., Nandpur, Jejuri and Chicholi, the shares in which were put to auction, applied under S. 151, Land Revenue Act for pre-emption. He has in law no locus standi in proceedings under O. 21, R. 89, but he also put in a statement opposing the setting aside of the sale on grounds, similar to those raised by the auction-purchasers.

[7] The executing Court did not frame issues, did not fix the case for evidence and disposed of the application for setting aside sale after hearing arguments. This is the order appealed against by the judgment-debtors.

[8] In the order under appeal the learned Judge held that money paid privately is equivalent to a deposit under O. 21, R. 89, Civil P. C. and what is necessary is in fact only an unequivocal acknowledgment of the decree-holder that the decree was satisfied and it is immaterial whether the decree was satisfied by payment of full decretal amount or a part and whether the decree-holder received cash or anything which he treated equivalent thereto. The learned Judge, it must be said, most curiously accepted what was stated in the belated statement of the decree-holder dated 22-6-1946 as true and held that the decree-holder was not satisfied because in his view the agreement between the decree-holder and the judgment-debtors was in the nature of an executory contract and it failed as the amount due on promissory note was not paid within one month as orally agreed. In paras. 5 and 6 of the order, the learned Judge proceeded to deal with objections never raised by the parties and observed that the auction-purchasers were not impleaded in the application to set aside sales and that as only one of the judgment-debtors had applied to set aside sales it may, at the most, be that the sales could be set aside to the extent of his share. Finally the learned Judge took into consideration the fact that there were other creditors who were entitled to rateable distribution and held that the sales cannot be set aside and O. 21, R. 89, Civil P. C. cannot be read in derogation of S. 73, Civil P. C.

[9] The auction-purchasers (respondents) have not appeared in this Court to oppose the appeal. The only person who was represented and who opposed the appeal was Seth Gopaldas Mohta who was a pre-emptor and also one of the creditors applying for rateable distribution. The question which at the outset arises for determination is if a creditor applying for rateable distribution has any locus standi in proceedings for setting aside sale or in appeal therefrom. It is clear from O. 21, R. 89, that the only persons concerned in these proceedings are the person applying, the decree-holder and the auction-purchaser. The question of rateable distribution is one between the decree-holders inter se in which neither the judgment-debtor nor the auction-purchaser has any concern. The creditor applying for rateable distribution is entitled to a share in the sale-proceeds if and when the amount becomes distributable. The amount deposited in Court by auction-purchaser does not become distributable until the sale is confirmed. The learned counsel for the respondent referred me to S. 64 and to O. 21, R. 72 but these provisions established that wherever it was thought necessary or proper to safeguard the position of a person applying for rateable distribution a specific reference to S. 73 was made. There is no reference to S. 73 in O. 21, R. 89, Civil P. C. In my view Seth Gopaldas Mohta has no locus standi in this appeal. The appeal has, however, been argued very fully and very vehemently on either side and I propose to decide it in the light of the arguments advanced.

[10] As held in A. I. R. 1943 Bom. 336[1] the Court has no option but to set aside auction sale if the applicant complies with the provisions of O. 21, R. 89, Civil P. C. and the executing Court dealing with an application under this provision has to concentrate its attention on its requirements. The first requirement is that the person applying must be the person owning such property or holding an interest therein by virtue of a title acquired before such sale; second is that the applicant should deposit in Court for payment to the purchaser and for payment to the decree-holder as required by cls. (a) and (b).

[11] There is no dispute in this case that the person applying is a person owning such property and that he deposited the sum necessary for payment to the purchaser and applied within 30 days of the date of sale for setting aside sale. The learned lower Court's view that the sales could at best be set aside to the extent of the share of the applicant judgment-debtor is something extremely novel. A moment's reflection should have convinced the learned Judge that O. 21, R. 89 does not contemplate of a sale being set aside in part; it is either set aside or not. Nor is it necessary that all the persons owning property should be the applicants. It is always dangerous, the learned Judge should have realized, to deal with imaginary objections. Evidently no such objection was taken because it was obviously untenable, specially when the judgment-debtors are members of a joint Hindu family as the judgment-debtors Nos. 1 to 3, most probably, are.

[12] What is required by Art. 166, Limitation Act, is that an application should be filed within 30 days of sale and it is clear from O. 21, R. 89 that the deposit should also be within the time that the application could be filed. This was obviously done. Notices were issued to the auction-purchasers and they not only appeared but opposed the application without ever suggesting that they were not impleaded in the application. What the learned Judge evidently means is that the names of the auction-purchasers are not mentioned in the application under O. 21, R. 89, Civil P. C. This is not necessary as the names of the auction-purchasers are in the execution record. The auction-purchasers are no doubt necessary parties to the proceedings for setting aside sales and the order setting aside sales passed without notice to them would be bad. That position did not arise in the present case as notices were issued and served and the auction-purchasers took part in the proceedings.

[13] The only point contested by the auction-purchasers in the lower Court was the due compliance with cl. (2) of O. 21, R. 89(1). According to them it could be complied only by depositing in Court full amount due on the decree and it was further suggested very vaguely that there were claims for rateable distribution.

[14] The learned Judge of the lower Court held and in my view quite correctly that clause 'B' is satisfied by an unequivocal admission of the decree-holder that his decree was satisfied within 30 days of the date of sale. Neither the auction-purchaser nor even the Court can ignore that admission. It was held in A. I. R. 1938 Cal. 252[2] that when the sale was set aside on the admission of the decree-holder that the decree was satisfied out of Court the auction-purchaser cannot have it restored on the ground that the alleged satisfaction was untrue. The receipt dated 1-2-1946 passed by Mr. Nagle contains an unequivocal and unconditional admission of the fact of full satisfaction of the decree. The last words of the receipt are:

"This execution case has been fully satisfied and nothing remains due from the defendants."

This is further corroborated by the fact that Mr. Nagle countersigned the application filed on the same day for setting aside the sale. The promissory note dated 1 2 1946 appears to have been intended to be executed by three persons but it was actually executed only by two. It was not executed by Govindsingh, the younger brother of Pratapsingh. It is, however, immaterial as the promissory note executed only by Laxmansingh and Pratapsingh was accepted by the decree-holder and he passed a receipt for satisfaction of the decree. On the matters as they stood on 1-2 1946 there was no dispute between the applicant (judgment-debtor) and the decree-holder.

[15] It was argued by the learned counsel for the respondent that any compromise between the decree-holder and the judgment-debtor regarding satisfaction of the decree after the date of auction was bad and could not affect the interest of a third person i e , the auction-purchaser and the decisions which uphold such a satisfaction are opposed to what their Lordships of the Privy Council held in 27 N. L R. 95.[3] The learned counsel failed to distinguish between an adjustment of a decree and a satisfaction of the decree. Their Lordships were dealing with a case of mere adjustment and not of satisfaction and it is on this ground that the Privy Council case has been distinguished in 31 N. L. R. 67,[4] and in other cases, including the Full Bench decision of the Madras High Court reported in I.L.R. (1940) Mad. 609.[5] In I L.R. (1937) 2 Cal. 606,[6] it was held that an agreement between the judgment-debtor and the decree-holder outside Court whereby the decree was satisfied was sufficient compliance with O. 21, R. 89, Civil P. C.

[16] On the view taken by the learned Judge of the lower Court and, with which I agree, on the record as it stood on 2-1 1946 all the requirements of O. 21, R. 89 appear to have been complied with. The application for setting aside sale has, however, been disallowed by the lower Court on two grounds and I now deal with these grounds.

[17] In Para. 4 of the order the learned Judge remarked:

"In view of this the alleged satisfaction of the decree would have concluded the matter but for the fact that the amount has not been paid in full. I would pertinently point out that the judgment debtors have not replied to the allegation of the decree-holder that the amount of Rs. 2000 was agreed to be paid in full within one month ..... The other two judgment-debtors have not come up before me and have not yet cared to execute the promissory note upto now. It will thus be seen that the alleged agreement of 1-2-1946 was only executory ....."

[18] I feel obliged to observe that this part of the order of the learned Judge is not satisfactory. In the first place the learned Judge was in my view not right in allowing the decree-holder as a matter of course and to permit him to resile from the original position taken by countersigning the application for setting aside sale and to forward a case wholly contradictory thereto by filing a statement on 22-6-1946 when the case was already closed for argument on 27-4-1946. The lower Court not only allowed that statement to be placed on record but treated the allegations therein as true because they were not denied by the judgment-debtors. The judgment-debtors had no opportunity to deny the allegations made at the stage of argument and they were not called upon to do so Moreover, O. 8, R. 5, Civil P. C. cannot apply to the allegations made by the non-applicants who are, at best, in the position of defendants and the allegations cannot be deemed to have been admitted because they are not expressly denied. The questions which arose and which required determination were:

(a) Whether the statement dated 22-6-1946 should be admitted on record and taken into consideration?

(b) Whether in view of the unequivocal receipt of satisfaction of the decree, it is open to the decree-holder to plead and prove non-satisfaction?

(c) Having accepted the promissory note executed by two judgment-debtors, is it open to the decree-holder to plead and prove that the promissory-note was incomplete because it was not executed by the third judgment-debtor?

(d) Is it open for the decree-holder to prove that the amount due on promissory-note was payable within one month and not on demand as recited therein, and is oral evidence admissible on that point?

[19] If the Court finds all the above points in decree-holder's favour, then the parties should have an opportunity for adducing evidence and the final decision should be in the light of that evidence. There was no plea that the agreement dated 1-2-1946 was executory. I entirely disagree with the observations and the conclusion of the learned Judge in Para 4 of the order.

[20] At the conclusion of Para. 7 of the order the learned Judge opined that O. 21, R. 89 cannot be read in derogation of S. 73, Civil P. C. What this exactly means is difficult to understand. Does this mean that sales cannot be set aside under O. 21, R. 89 if other creditors of the judgment-debtor have applied for rateable distribution or does it mean that the judgment-debtor should in that case deposit in Court not only the amount payable under the decree in execution but also under decrees in favour of creditors who applied for rateable distribution and does it mean that O. 21, R. 89 should be interpreted differently when there are applications for rateable distribution and when there are no applications? Order 21, R. 89 does not at all refer to S. 73, Civil P. C. and it is difficult to see its relevancy in deciding an application under O. 21, R. 89, Civil P. C. The two provisions are entirely different dealing with different subjects and there is no occasion for reading one in derogation of the other. The Courts cannot be permitted to read into O. 21, R. 89 something which it does not contain. As already observed above the creditors claiming rateable distribution have no locus standi in dealing with an application under O. 21, R. 89, Civil P. C. and that O. 21, R. 92 of the Code being imperative the sales have to be set aside if the provisions of O. 21, R. 89 as they stand in the Code of Civil Procedure are complied with. The conclusion of the learned Judge in Para. 7 of the order is wrong.

[21] The result is that the order of the lower Court rejecting the judgment-debtors' application for setting aside sales and consequently confirming the sales is set aside. The case is remanded to the lower Court for fresh decision with advertence to what is observed in Para. 18 above. The appeal is allowed with costs.

Second Appeal No. 650 of 1942, Decided on 11-11-1946, from appellate decree of Dist. Judge, East Berar, Amraoti, D/- 29-8- 1942.

Hindu law — Joint family — Debt—Joint family business— Promissory note executed by manager for ancestral business — Adult member joining — All adults made defendants in suit based upon it — Minor members are bound by decree.

Where a person executes a promissory note as the manager of a joint Hindu family for the purposes of financing an ancestral joint family business, decree passed upon the promissory note is binding on the other members of the joint family, including the minor ones. [Para 5]

The fact that the other adult members had joined in the execution of the promissiory note and were made defendants in the suit would not lead to the conclusion that the signature of the manager is referrable only to his personal capacity. Signature of the other adult members is obtained by the creditor merely to safeguard himself. [Para 13]

In a suit based upon such a promissory note the minor member of the joint family is not a necessary party. The adult members who had joined in the execution of the promissory note and are made the defendants in the suit, act as managers on behalf of themselves and the minor member of the family : 20 A. I. Judgment.—This is a second appeal from the reversing judgment and decree of Mr. M. G. Nashikkar, District Judge, East Berar, Amraoti, in Civil Appeal No. 11-A of 1941, decided on 29-8-1942.

[2] The suit out of which this appeal arises was brought by Jangli (plaintiff-respondent) against one Gendalal (defendant-appellant) for partition of certain joint family property obtained by Gendalal in auction sales following decrees passed in various suits. The dispute related to many items of property but the present appeal is concerned with a house which was described in the plaint as item (A). There is also a cross-objection filed by the respondent for damages, for use and occupation of the house but the cross-objection was not pressed, and we say nothing about it except that it is dismissed with costs.

[3] The suit really is one for declaration that one-fourth share in the house in item (A) belonged to the plaintiff and that the auction purchaser could not get any right in that share inasmuch as the decree was passed only against the uncles of the plaintiff. No objection was taken to the frame of the suit and, therefore, it is not necessary to say anything about it.

[4] The plaintiff alleged that Civil Suit No. 109 of 1925 of the Court of Subordinate Judge, First Class, Ellichpur, was filed by Girdhar Kirad against his uncles Gurudin, Rama and Gangadin in their personal capacity and that his share was not affected by the decree passed in that suit. That suit was brought by Girdhar Kirad on the basis of a promissory note executed by Jangli's three uncles, namely, Gurudin, Rama and Gangadin The promissory note in the suit is Ex. D-8 in this matter Girdhar Kirad had at first also joined Jangli in the suit, vide Ex. D-7, but later on he applied that Jangli should be discharged, and the suit, therefore proceeded against the remaining three defendants. The decree was passed in the suit on 18-11-1925. The decree is not on record but a certified copy of the judgment is Ex. P-4. The house in question was brought to sale and was purchased by the present appellant and he has been in possession of it from 25-8-1928. At all material times, up to 25-8-1928 the present plaintiff (respondent in this matter) was a minor. The sole question in this case is whether the decree in Civil Suit No. 109 of 1925 is binding upon the plaintiff (minor) and whether the share of the minor in the house had been conveyed to Gendulal the present appellant, in the execution sale that followed it.

[5] The case of the defendant was that Gurudin, the uncle of the plaintiff, Jangli, was admittedly the manager of the joint Hindu family of which the plaintiff was a member and which had not been divided and in which there was no partition up to the date of the suit. The promissory note was executed by the uncle and his two brothers, Rama and Gangadin, as manager and adult members of the joint Hindu family, and the uncle being admittedly the manager of that family, the debt was binding upon the whole family including the plaintiff. It was also urged by the defendant that the money was borrowed by the joint family for the purpose of financing a stationery and a pan bidi shop which was an ancestral business. This business was started by Sital, the grandfather of the plaintiff and the father of defendant 3, in Civil Suit No. 109 of 1925.

[6] The case of the plaintiff was that he was not a party to the suit as he was discharged before the termination thereof and, therefore the decree which was ultimately passed was not binding upon him. He also contended that there was nothing to show that the suit was brought against Gurudin in a representative capacity, and that after the discharge of the present plaintiff the suit must be deemed to have proceeded against the remaining three defendants in their personal capacity only.

[7] Both the learned lower Courts below have found that the stationery and pan bidi shop was an ancestral business of this joint Hindu family and that Sital, the grandfather of the plaintiff who started this shop, as well as the uncles of the plaintiff were in the habit of borrowing money for financing the shop. The learned first appellate Court also gave a finding that this debt was raised for the business of the shop. These findings are binding upon us and we, therefore, start with the assumption that this was a joint family debt.

[8] The learned Court of first instance found in favour of the defendant, Gendulal, and held on the evidence in the case that the share of the plaintiff was also affected. But the learned first appellate Court came to the conclusion that the share of the plaintiff was not conveyed to the auction-purchaser. The present appeal has been preferred by the defendant in the suit.

[9] It is necessary at this stage to say that a manager of a joint Hindu family can bind the other members by his signature provided it can be shown that he was acting as a manager. In 29 N. L. R. 312[1] it was held by Niyogi A. J. C., that the members of a joint Hindu family cannot be held liable if the promissory note does not show that the member signing it did so in the capacity of a manager. This view of law must be held to be modified by the observations of the Privy Council in 30 N. L. R. 60[2] where their Lordships say :

"The promissory notes were signed by Pandurang in his own name and not in the name of the firm, and in their Lordships' opinion the promissory notes being signed by Pandurang in his own name is equally consistent either with a borrowing by him for his own individual purposes, or a borrowing for the purposes of the joint family business, ..."

In Second Appeal No. 64 of 1940[3] it was recently held by Niyogi J., Officiating Chief Justice, and one of us that the view in 29 N. L. R. 312[1] must be read as having been modified by the Privy Council decision. In the case referred to here their Lordships of the Privy Council declined to infer that in such cases there is a presumption that the borrowing is for the purpose of the joint family business. Reading the earlier case 46 Cal. 663[4] and 30 N. L. R. 60[2] together it is apparent that when the signature of a manager of a joint Hindu family appears on a document it neither signifies that the debt was taken for the joint family nor that the manager was acting qua manager. Either position can be established aliunde. In the present case there is a finding that the debt was a joint family debt. The learned District Judge, however, considered that the existence of the signatures of the other adult members of the joint family indicated that the manager had not signed qua manager but had signed in his personal capacity and that the other adult members had also signed in their personal capacity. He also held that the fact that after 1925 the creditor started insisting upon the signatures of the other brothers who had recently attained majority clearly showed that the debts were taken in their personal capacity and, therefore, were not binding upon the rest of the family.

[10] In this the learned District Judge was clearly wrong. He had already given a finding that the debt which was the subject-matter of the suit was borrowed for the purpose of the ancestral business which was being continued by the joint family after the death of Gurudin's father. He had also held that Gurudin was admittedly the manager. This finding having been given, the conclusion based upon the evidence of the existence of other signatures upon the promissory note is inconsistent with it. The learned District Judge also held that a manager cannot act in a dual capacity at the same time. He held that the signature of Gurudin must be related either to his position as a manager of the joint family or must be taken to have been made in his personal capacity.

[11] In the case of a manager of a joint family his signature may not only bind the joint family but may even bind him personally if he owns property besides the joint family property.

[12] It was held in A. I. R. 1923 Bom. 244[5] that if the suit is based on a promissory note the other members of the joint Hindu family are not bound unless the plaintiff sues the family on the debt. The reasons given by their Lordships were that many difficulties would otherwise arise in a suit of this kind, not because of any clash between the two capacities of the manager but because of the defence which the other members of the joint family could raise if the suit were based on the debt. The Bombay view does not appear to have been endorsed in several other cases and the law on the subject summarised by Mulla in his Principles of Hindu Law, Edn. 9, at p. 269, is in the following words:

"It has been held in several cases that where the manager of a joint family borrows money on a promissory note for a joint family business or to meet a joint family necessity, the other members of the joint family may be sued on the note, though they are not parties to the note, but their liability is limited to their share in the joint family property unless they can be treated as contracting parties. If the suit is filed before partition, the creditor may sue the manager only and seek for a declaration that the whole joint family property is liable or he may implead the other members also. After partition, he must implead the other members in order to enable him to proceed against the portions allotted to them."

This view of the law is based upon 23 Mad. 597,[6] 11 C. W. N. 139,[7] 44 ALL. 393[8] and 45 ALL. 434.[9]

[13] It is obvious from this that a manager borrowing upon a promissory note may expose the other members to a liability on the note itself. In the present case the debt was for the family business and signature of the manager must, therefore, be referable to his capacity as the manager. The signatures of the other members of the family were obtained by the creditor merely to safeguard himself.

[14] The only question that remains now to be considered is what is the effect of the conduct of the plaintiff in Civil Suit No. 109 of 1925 in asking the Court to discharge the present plaintiff and the order passed by the Court discharging the present plaintiff from the earlier suit. It is to be remembered that for the purpose of suits filed against a joint family it is not necessary to join all the members. In 46 ALL. 709[10] it was held that where all the adult members of a joint Hindu family join in executing a mortgage of the joint ancestral property it is a legitimate presumption that they are acting as managers on behalf of themselves and the minor members of the family. The latter are not necessary parties to the suit. In 47 Cal. 924[11] the minors had brought a suit that the right of redemption was not lost to them by reason of a decree having been passed in a suit in which they had not been properly represented. Their Lordships held that inasmuch as the minors admitted the mortgage and that it was binding upon them they could not avoid the consequences of the sale by saying that they were minors at the time of the sale and that their interests were not effectively represented. Their Lordships held that the equity of redemption was extinguished because the sale was not set aside. In our opinion the same results would follow where the Court after considering the facts holds that the debt was a joint family debt and was binding upon the family. In such a case the absence of the minor members of the family from the array of defendants would not serve to preserve their rights.

[15] The plaintiff in this suit further contended that the manager was not described as such in the plaint. In 8 Pat. 788[12] it was held that in a suit against the joint Hindu family the karta may effectively represent the other members of the family even though he is not described as such in the records of the case. In our opinion, the failure to implead the present plaintiff in the array of the defendants makes no difference to the decree which was passed in the Civil Suit No. 109 of 1925 and the interest of the plaintiff was conveyed in the sale which took place on that decree unless the plaintiff can set aside that sale on some ground. The present claim of the plaintiff that it was not a joint family debt and that Gurudin did not execute the promissory note in his capacity as a manager of the joint Hindu family has been negatived by the two Courts below. The finding given by the learned District Judge that the signature of Gurudin is referable only to his personal capacity is clearly not tenable in view of the finding given by him as to the nature of the debt and the wrong assumption of law that the signature could not be made in his dual capacity. The result is that the appeal succeeds, the decree of the lower appellate Court is reversed and the decree of the trial Court is substituted in its place. The appeal is allowed with costs.

Misc. Second Appeal No. 136 of 1945, Decided on 10-2-1947, from order of First Addl. Dist. Judge, Amraoti, D/- 21-3-1945.

(a) Berar Land Revenue Code (1928), S. 179 (a) and (b)—Occupant of sub-division selling his portion—Superior right of pre-emption between other occupant of same sub-division and occupant of other sub-division of same survey number.

Under S. 179 (a), on a sale of his portion by one of the occupants of a sub-division A of a survey number, the other occupant of the same sub division has a superior right of pre-emption, to that of the occupants of the other sub-division B of the same survey number, even though they have jointly a larger interest in the survey number. It is only when no occupant of the sub-division A wishes to exercise the right of pre-emption, that the cl. (b) of S. 179, comes for consideration. [Para 5]

(b) Berar Land Revenue Code (1928), S. 173 — Scope—"Occupant" in S. 54 and S. 173— Scope of —Co-heirs under Mahomedan law, cannot claim right of pre-emption jointly.

Section 173 is meant only to enlarge the definition of the term 'occupant' in S. 54 of the Code for the purpose of Ch. XIV, dealing with pre-emption. For the purposes of pre emption, a person i. e., a juristic person is an occupant in a survey number if he has a right of an occupant, whether in his sole right or jointly with others. This section is relevant only to determine the right of a person to pre empt. It is not relevant for the purposes of determining priority between rival pre-emptors, which in some cases depends on the extent of interest which the rival occupants claiming the right of pre-emption have in the survey number. The right to pre-empt is to be distinguished from priority amongst persons entitled to pre-empt; the former does not depend upon the extent of interest held by an occupant in the survey number, while the latter, in some cases, does. The basic principle of pre-emption, at least under the Berar Land Revenue Code, is that it is an individual right of an occupant and can be exercised by him for himself and in his own right. It is not a joint right in favour of several occupants and cannot be exercised by them jointly in joint interest even though the interest which they held in the survey number may be undivided. Two or more occupants cannot thus form a group and exercise the right of pre-emption jointly and cannot claim priority on the strength of their joint interest in the survey number. Where the plaintiffs are co-heirs under Mahomedan law for the purposes of determining priority under cl. (b) of S 179 of the Code, the interest of one of them has to be taken into consideration and not the interests of all the co-heirs jointly. [Paras 7, 9 and 10]

W. B. Pendharkar — for Appellant.

G. T. Bhide — for Respondents.

Judgment. — This miscellaneous second appeal arises out of Civil Suit No. 357-A of 1944 instituted by respondents 1 to 3 with which was consolidated the appellant's Civil Suit No. 356-A of 1944. Both suits were for the enforcement of a right of pre-emption under the Berar Land Revenue Code arising on account of a sale of 2.20 acres out of the sub-division 44/1 by Annapurnabai under the sale deed dated 12-7-1943 for Rs. 300.

[2] The facts which need be mentioned are these. Survey No. 44 of mauza Pardi in Taluq and District Amraoti is divided into two sub-divisions viz. 44/1 and 44/2. Mt. Annapurnabai was an occupant in sub-division No. 44/1 owning 2.20 acres, a part of the sub-division, while the appellant and his brother, Awadhoot own 3.15 acres in the same sub-division. Hasanali, father of respondents 1 to 3, owned 2.29 acres in the sub-division No. 44/2 and the same is inherited by respondents 1 to 3 under the Mahomedan law as co-heirs, each of them having 1/3rd share of that area which is cultivated jointly i. e., the area is not divided by metes and bounds.

[3] Respondents 1 to 3, on the one hand and the appellant on the other claimed a preferential right of pre-emption; respondents based their claim on the ground that they have jointly a larger interest in the survey number while the appellant based his claim on grounds, firstly that he is an occupant in the sub-division 44/1 itself and secondly that his interest in the survey number is larger than any one of the plaintiffs. The Courts below held that the respondents have a preferential right to pre-empt. Civil Suit No. 357-A of 1944 was decreed by the first Court and that decree is maintained by the first appellate Court.

[4] The sole question in this second appeal is whether the appellant or the respondents have a preferential right of pre-emption on the undisputed facts stated above. In my opinion, the question must be answered in favour of the appellant.

[5] I am surprised to find that the Courts below have missed a point which, to my mind, is obvious, in determining priority under S. 179, Berar Land Revenue Code. According to clause (a) of S. 179, the occupant who has the largest interest in the sub-division, a portion of which is being transferred, has priority in the absence of any occupant in that sub-division who is related to the occupant transferring his or her share. It is not alleged that any relation of Annapurnabai is an occupant in sub-division No. 44/1 and therefore obviously the appellant who is an occupant in that sub division has a right to pre-empt. In fact, no question of priority arises in the case between the appellant and respondents 1 to 3 as the latter are not the occupants in the sub-division though they are occupants in the survey number. Claue (b) of S. 179, Berar Land Revenue Code comes for consideration only when no occupant in the sub division wishes to exercise the right of pre emption. Thus, the appellant, an occupant in the sub-division, has decidedly a superior right of pre-emption and it is only if he fails to pre-empt, that respondents 1 to 3 have the right of pre-emption.

[6] The Courts below have determined the question of priority, treating the case as one falling under cl. (b) of S. 179. As pointed out above, cl. (b) has no application to the case. Assuming however that the case was governed by cl. (b) of S. 179, still the decisions of the Courts below are entirely wrong. The Courts below have not correctly appreciated the fundamental principles of pre emption under the Berar Land Revenue Code, and the appellate Court failed to comprehend the scope and purpose of S. 173 of the Code.

[7] Section 173, Berar Land Revenue Code is meant only to enlarge the definition of the term 'occupant' in S. 54 of the Code for the purpose of Ch XIV, dealing with pre-emption. For the purposes of pre emption, a person i. e. a juristic person is an occupant in a survey number if he has a right of an occupant, whether in his sole right or jointly with others. This section is relevant only to determine the right of a person to pre-empt It is not relevant for the purposes of determining priority between rival pre-emptors, which in some cases depends on the extent of interest which the rival occupants claiming the right of pre-emption have in the survey number. The right to pre-empt is to be distinguished from priority amongst persons entitled to pre-empt; the former does not depend upon the extent of interest held by an occupant in the survey number, while the latter, in some cases does. The learned Judge of the lower appellate, Court has not kept this distinction in view.

[8] The Judge of the lower appellate Court has relied on a passage from Hirurkar's Treatise on Berar Land Revenue Code at p. 386. That passage is in the notes under S. 173 and is not relevant in the matter of determining priority under S. 179 of the Code. The learned author meant only to point out that each one of the co-owners or the tenants-in-common is under S. 173, a person having the right of an occupant for the purpose of exercising the right of pre-emption under Ch. XIV, Berar Land Revenue Code.

[9] The basic principle of pre-emption, at least under the Berar Land Revenue Code, is that it is an individual right of an occupant and can be exercised by him for himself and in his own right. It is not a joint right in favour of several occupants and cannot be exercised by them jointly and in joint interest even though the interest which they hold in the survey number may be undivided. Two or more occupants cannot thus form a group and exercise the right of pre-emption jointly and cannot claim priority on the strength of their joint interest in the survey number. It is therefore that S. 173, Berar Land Revenue Code has declared a person having the right of an occupant jointly with others to be an occupant so that, if he desires, he may be able to exercise the right of pre-emption for himself. The Berar Land Revenue Code does not permit a decree for pre-emption being passed in favour of more persone than one. This is clear from sub-section (2) of S. 179 of the Code. By virtue of S 173, of the Code each one of the three plaintiffs is an occupant entitled to exercise the right of pre-emption. They are moreover equally entitled to the right but no decree can be jointly passed in their favour. Under sub-section (2) of S. 179, the person to exercise it shall have to be determined by lot.

[10] In the absence of division by metes and bounds, the position of co-heirs under the Mahomedan law is that of tenants-in common. They have a distinct interest though possession and management may be joint. They are not joint tenants and there is thus no unity of interest, which is to be distinguished from the unity of possession, between them. Thus the interest of each one of the three plaintiffs is 1/3rd of 2.29 acres, i. e. roughly 36 gunthas. For the purposes of determining priority under cl. (b) of S. 179 of the Code, the interest of one of the plaintiffs i. e. 36 gunthas has to be taken into consideration and not the joint interest of the three plaintiffs.

[10a] The appellant and his brother, Awadhoot own 3.15 acres in sub-division NO. 1 of survey NO. 44. The lower appellate Court has not permitted the appellant to reply on the position that he and his brother Awadhoot are co-parceners, and that position is not also necessary for the decision of this appeal. The interest of the appellant is 1/2 of 3.15 acres i. e. 1 27½ as against 36 gunthas of an individual plaintiff respondent. The appellant has thus the largest interest in the survey number and is entitled to priority even under cl. (b) of S. 179, assuming that priority is to be determined under that clause.

[11] The result is that the appeal succeeds and the decree of the lower appellate Court is set aside with costs. A fresh decree shall now be drawn up giving the appellant a first right of pre-emption if he deposits within one month from the date of this decree Rs. 300 and, on such deposit being made, the interest to be pre-empted should be placed in his possession The appellant is also authorized to deduct his costs certified against respondent 4, from the amount of Rs. 300 deposited by him. In the event of the appellant's failure to exercise the right of pre-emption in compliance with the directions of the decree, his suit would stand dismissed with costs and the trial Court should then decide by lot the person (out of the plaintiffs) who shall be entitled to exercise the right. The person so determined would be entitled to exercise the right of pre-emption and to be placed in possession of the right on his depositing the amount of Rs. 300 within one month of the date of determination. In the event of a failure on the part of the person so determined to pre-empt, Civil Suit No. 357-A of 1944, would be dismissed with costs.

Misc. Second Appeal No. 80 of 1945, Decided on 18-12-1946, from order of Addl. Dist. Judge, Buldana, D/- 22-3-1945.

(a) C. P. and Berar Relief of Indebtedness Act (14 [XIV] of 1939), S. 13 (3) —Lahan-gahan mortgage—During pendency of suit on, amount scaled down and instalments granted—Mortgagee obtaining certificate under S. 13 (3) — Civil Court can enforce mortgage in terms thereof—Payment of balance due—Effect of.

While the suit on a lahan-gahan mortgage was pending, the mortgagor applied to the Debt Relief Court which scaled down the amount due and made it payable by instalments. Two instalments having been defaulted the mortgagee applied to the Deputy Commissioner under S. 13 (3) and obtained a certificate and applied to the Civil Court for enforcement of the mortgage and for possession of the property:

Held that (1) by virtue of the provisions of S. 13 (3) the Civil Court had jurisdiction to enforce the mortgage in terms thereof as if a final mortgage decree had been passed in terms of the mortgage: 33 A. I. R. 1946 Nag. 45 and S. A. No. 238 of 1944, Approved; Misc. S.A. No. 173 of 1944, Rel. on. [Para 8]

(2) No doubt the mortgage being a lahan-gahan the Court could have exercised its discretion under O. 34, R. 4 (3) in favour of the mortgagor by allowing him to redeem the property by depositing the amount due and refusing a decree for foreclosure in favour of the mortgagee. [Para 11]

(3) But on the grant of a certificate by the Deputy Commissioner under S. 13 (3) the final mortgage decree came into existence by operation of law namely S. 13(3) and the Civil Court at that stage was merely an executing Court and therefore could not exercise the discretion which O. 34, R. 4 (3) conferred on it before the stage of a final decree. [Para 13]

(4) Therefore the only way in which the Court could proceed was to give effect to the mortgage as if a final mortgage decree had been passed in terms thereof. As the mortgage provided that if the mortgagor failed to pay off the mortgage money punctually the property would stand foreclosed the mortgagee was entitled to be put in possession. [Para 14]

(b) C. P. and Berar Relief of Indebtedness Act (14 [XIV] of 1939), S. 13 (3)—Certificate under—Civil Court cannot go behind certificate.

The Civil Court when executing the order of the Debt Relief Court by virtue of the provisions of S. 13 (3) cannot go behind the Certificate of the Deputy Commissioner under S. 13 (3). [Para 15]

(c) C. P. and Berar Relief of Indebtedness Act (14 [XIV] of 1939), S. 13 (3) — Certificate under—Failure to state that claim shall be enforced as if a decree had been passed—Effect of.

All that S. 13 (3) requires the Deputy Commissioner to do is to issue the certificate. Once he does that the law comes into operation and directs that the claim shall be enforced as if a decree had been passed. It does not matter whether the Deputy Commissioner says this or not in the certificate. [Para 17]

Judgment.—The main contention raised in this appeal revives a matter which has been settled by three Judges of this Court in three separate cases regarding the interpretation of certain sections of the Relief of Indebtedness Act. The facts are as follows.

[2] The appeal is by the judgment-debtor. He executed a mortgage on 2-11-1926 in favour of the decree-holder-respondent. The decree-holder filed Civil Suit No. 362-A of 1940 on the basis of this mortgage in the Civil Court. On 15-10-1940, while the suit was pending, the judgment-debtor (mortgagor) applied to the Debt Relief Court for a scheme. The claim of Rs. 1340-4-0 made in the Civil Court was scaled down to Rs. 1226-0-0 by the Debt Relief Court on 26-11-1941. This sum was made payable in 25 instalments, the first 24 being of Rs. 50-0-0 each and the last of Rs. 26-0-0.

[3] Two instalments were defaulted, and accordingly the decree-holder applied to the Deputy Commissioner under S. 13 (3), Relief of Indebtedness Act for a certificate. The certificate was granted on 12-9-1941. Accordingly, the decree holder filed the application, out of which this appeal arises seeking execution and asking for possession of the property. The application was made on 11-10-1944.

[4] The judgment-debtor objected that the decree-holder was not entitled to possession. According to him, the effect of the Debt Relief Court's order was to wipe out the original contract and to leave in its place what might be termed a simple money decree payable by instalments. When the Deputy Commissioner issued the certificate under S. 13 (3) of the Act all that happened was that a sort of exigibility clause came into force and the whole amount payable under this simple money decree became recoverable at once. The contract, however was not revived. Therefore, the lower Court had no power to execute this decree as if it was a mortgage decree and place the decree-holder in possession.

[5] This contention was overruled by the lower Court, and the learned Judge directed the decree-holder to be placed in possession. An appeal to the lower appellate Court against this failed, and accordingly a second appeal was filed here. This is the appeal I am now hearing. An order for stay was obtained on 24-4 1945, and shortly afterwards, on 1-5-1945, the judgment-debtor deposited the whole of the balance due under the Debt Relief Court's order into Court. It is contended that this completely satisfies the decree-holder's claim, and accordingly the order directing possession to be delivered to the decree-holder should be reversed.

[6] The question whether the Civil Courts have power to execute an order of a Debt Relief Court under S. 13 (3) of the Act as if a mortgage decree has been passed, has been considered by Pollock J. in I.L.R. (1945) Nag 973,[1] by Grille J. in Second Appeal No. 238 of 1944 and by Hidayatullah J. in Miscellaneous Second Appeal No. 173 of 1944. All three learned Judges are agreed that such a decree is possible, and the later two cases follow the earlier one. Pollock J.'s decision can be gathered from the head-note in the reported case which is to this effect :

"Where there has been a preliminary decree for foreclosure, an order passed by the Deputy Commissioner under S. 13(3), C. P. and Berar Relief of Indebtedness Act has the effect of a final foreclosure decree."

[7] It is argued that this takes no notice of the fact that the effect of the Debt Relief Court's order is to wipe out the original contract. The mortgage was not for instalments and accordingly the moment the Debt Relief Court scales down the debt and makes it payable by instalments it wipes out the original contract and substitutes something different for it. The Act nowhere provides that the original contract shall be revived, and as S. 13 (3) speaks of the "balance remaining due" being recoverable it is evident that there was no intention to have the original contract revived.

[8] It is true the rulings cited do not refer to this exact point but they have dealt with the effect of the words "the balance remaining due shall be recoverable..." and the learned Judges have reached the conclusion that the section though inartistically worded is reasonably plain and means that in the case of a mortgage what has to be executed is a mortgage decree. In my opinion, the words "in the case of a mortgage, lien or charge as if a final decree had been passed by a Court of civil jurisdiction" would be meaningless if we were no longer to look to the original contract. The very fact that the different types of contract, namely, mortgage, lien or charge, have been set out in the section indicates that they have still to be looked to and given effect to as far as is possible after the Debt Relief Court's order scaling down the debt is taken into consideration. I respectfully agree with the three decisions above cited that in the case of a mortgage one must look to the mortgage and enforce the claim in terms of the mortgage.

[9] An examination of the cases cited will show that a preliminary decree had been passed in the first two of the cases. In the present case there has been no preliminary decree. The application to the Debt Relief Court was before that stage could be reached in the Civil Court. Accordingly to that extent the first two rulings are not in point. But the third ruling is. In that case no suit had been filed on the mortgage, and accordingly it is in point here. I respectfully agree with Hidayatullah J. that in such a case the effect is the same as when a preliminary decree has been passed.

[10] The next point urged is that this is a lahan-gahan mortgage, and accordingly the Court has a discretion under O. 34, R. 4 (3), Civil P. C. either to pass a decree for foreclosure or one for sale; and it is argued that as the full amount due under the Debt Relief Court's order has now been deposited in Court, the discretion should be exercised in favour of the mortgagor, and if that is done then the order directing delivery of possession to the decree-holder will be wrong.

[11] In my opinion, the stage at which the Court could exercise its discretion is gone. Had the judgment-debtor pursued his remedies in the Civil Court he would have been right in his present contention because the mortgage we are considering is admittedly a lahan-gahan mortgage. But he chose to go beyond that and to go to the Debt Relief Court. He was not bound to go, but as he was given an option he chose to exercise the option and go there. Accordingly, he is now bound by the special rules which obtain when such a course is pursued.

[12] The law, once that is done, so far as the present matter is concerned, is contained in S. 13 (3), Relief of Indebtedness Act. That lays down that once the Deputy Commissioner has given his certificate then,

"the balance remaining due shall be recoverable as if a decree, and in the case of a mortgage.... as if a final decree, had been passed by a Court of civil jurisdiction."

[13] Now what kind of final decree? It is evident that the Court executing this decree cannot pass the final decree. That is done by the law, namely, S. 13 (3) of the Act. The Civil Court at that stage is merely an executing Court, and therefore cannot exercise the discretion which O. 34, R. 4 (3) confers on the Court before the stage of final decree. Once we reach that position then it becomes obvious that the only way in which the section can be reasonably interpreted is to mean that one must look to the mortgage and execute the "decree" in terms of it.

[14] The mortgage here is a lahan-gahan mortgage and gives no option to the judgment-debtor or to the decree-holder. It says, "If I fail to pay off the amount punctually then the above immovable property will stand foreclosed (lahan-gahan)." The matter will, therefore, have to be construed as if the decree which the Court is now supposed to be executing contained those words. If it contained those words then there is no doubt that the order directing delivery of posse-sion is right. In my opinion, that is the only way in which we can proceed, and therefore the order of the lower Court was right.

[15] It was then argued that before a final decree can be passed notice should, or at any rate ought, to be issued to the judgment-debtor. Whether such a notice is required by the law is a matter of dispute, and the various High Courts are not agreed on the point. But that apart, I am clear that the Civil Court when executing the order of the Debt Relief Court cannot go behind the Deputy Commissioner's certificate. The only person who could issue the notice would be the Deputy Commissioner because the law regarding execution in the Civil Court does not take effect until he has issued his certificate. That being the case, and the Deputy Commissioner acting under the Debt Relief Act not being subordinate to this Court, I have no power to go behind his certificate.

[16] It is also argued that the certificate of the Deputy Commissioner here is vague and therefore no executable decree is present before the Court. The certificate follows the wording of the section and is in these terms:

"I hereby order that the order dated 26-11-1941 of the Debt Relief Court, Buldana, fixing the instalments in case No. 275/1941 shall cease to have effect and the balance Rs. 1176-0-6 and costs Rs. 1-8-0 remaining due shall be recoverable as if a decree, and in the case of a mortgage, lien, or charge, as if a final decree, had been passed by a Court of civil jurisdiction."

[17] It is to be observed that the latter part of this certificate is in the alternative, and therefore it is argued it is inexecutable. In my opinion, the latter part of the certificate should be ignored. It is evident that S. 13 (3) has not been happily worded, but in my view all that it requires the Deputy Commissioner to do is to issue the certificate. Once he does that then the law comes into operation and he has nothing further to do. It is a law which directs that the claim shall be enforced as if a decree had been passed. It does not matter whether the Deputy Commissioner says this or not. That is not for him. That being the case, there being a certificate here and there being a mortgage, we have to enforce this mortgage according to its terms and regard the matter as if a decree in terms of the mortgage had been passed. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Judgment. — This appeal arises out of a dispute over certain inam fields. The parties are descended from Gulam Ali, one of the original grantees, as shown in the following genealogical tree:

GULAM ALI
|
Imdad Ali
|
Hasan Ali
|
Munawar Ali
|
Chandni Begum — Imami Begum (Defendant).
Jainab Begum (Plaintiff).

[2] By a suit in 1915, the shares of Chandni Begum and Imami Begum on the one hand and Munawarali on the other were partitioned, and by a second suit in 1923 the shares of Chandni Begum and Imami Begum were partitioned inter se. Chandni Begum is now dead, and the question is whether her daughter, the plaintiff, is entitled to succeed to her share.

[3] The inam was granted for personal maintenance and is governed by R. 5 of the Berar Inam Rules, except in so far as the special terms of the grant apply. The inam was granted "to the claimants and their lineal descendants in perpetuity." The question then is whether a daughter's daughter is a lineal descendant.

[4] The parties are Shias, and under the Shia law the daughter's daughter is as much an heir as a son's son, as no distinction is made between agnates and cognates. In 26 N. L. R. 119,[1] their Lordships of the Judicial Committee, dealing with an inam governed by R. 5, held that the words in that rule 'Successions limited to direct lineal heirs and undivided brothers' could not mean that the succession was limited to lineal male heirs, and that if you wished to limit the word 'heirs' either to the male or female line it was essential that you should do so in direct terms or by necessary implication. Again, in A. I. R. 1929 P. C. 162,[2] their Lordships held that the term "lineal descendants" includes all descendants and is not restricted to male descendants. Those two decisions conclude the matter.

[5] The appeal must therefore be allowed. There will be a decree in the plaintiff's favour with costs throughout.

Misc. Second Appeals Nos. 28, 27, 29 and 30 of 1946, Decided on 28-7-1947, from order of Addl. Dist. Judge, Damoh, D/-19-10-1945.

(a) C. P. Tenancy Act (1 [I] of 1920), Ss. 55 (1) (d) and 58-A (introduced by the amending Act of 1940)—Sections are not retrospective—Rent decree obtained by lambardar — Surrender of holding to newly appointed lambardar — Execution of decree after commencement of amending Act.

Before the commencement of the amending Act of 1940, A obtained a decree for arrears of rent against a tenant of an occupancy holding in a village of which A was the lambardar. B, the mortgagee of the village, having purchased the village in execution of his mortgage decree, was subsequently appointed the lambardar of the village and the tenant surrendered the holding to him. A having sought the execution of the rent decree by sale of the holding after the commencement of the amending Act of 1940 :

Held (1) that the new Ss. 55 and 58-A, not being retrospective in operation, the case was not governed by those sections: 33 A.I R.1946 Nag.119, Disting. [Para 4]

(2) that the holding became B's khudkasht property by reason of the surrender and being in possession of B for over three years, the tenant's rights to the holding, if any, were extinguished and A could not get those rights in execution, there being no tenancy right at the time of the execution of the decree which he could bring to sale. [Paras 4 and 5]

(b) C. P. Tenancy Act (1 [I] of 1920), S. 89 — Surrender and transfer—Distinction.

A surrender is not the same thing as a transfer. A surrender is an act by which the tenant puts an end to the contract of tenancy involving an extinction of the tenancy right ; it must, therefore, come into force immediately and its operation cannot be postponed till the surrendering tenant's death. An alienation, on the other hand, does not affect the contract between the landlord and tenant and does not extinguish the tenant right The alienee acquires the tenant right intact and gets the benefit of the contract with the landlord with its incidental obligations : 21 A. I. R. 1934 Nag. 89, Foll. [Para 4]

(c) Interpretation of statutes — Retrospective operation.

Acts which have the effect of impairing contracts and affect vesting rights must be strictly construed and in interpreting such laws the Courts must lean against giving retrospective effect to their provisions. Unless there is something in the language of an Act showing a contrary intention the duty and practice of the Courts of Justice is to presume that the Act is prospective and not retrospective : 25 A. Judgment. — This order disposes of four miscellaneous (second) appeals, namely, 27, 28, 29 and 30 of 1946 as all are on the same point.

[2] The facts of this case may be briefly stated as under. The appellant, Seth Lalchand obtained decrees for arrears of rent against Nandu (non applicant 1) in this appeal as well as against various other tenants who are impleaded in other sister appeals. He was the lambardar of the villages Madia and Kuraiya. He had executed a mortgage of his interest in these villages in favour of Musammat Kausalya Bai (respondent 2), who is also respondent 2 in all the other appeals. Mt. Kausalya Bai obtained a mortgage decree, and in execution of that decree she put to auction the appellant's share and herself bought it. Thus she obtained proprietary interest in these villages on 11 12-1932. The appellant, however, continued to be the lambardar of these villages till 16 1-1934 on which date Mt. Kausalya Bai was appointed lambardar of the villages. On 6 3-1944, the appellant applied for execution of his rent decrees against his tenants and prayed for the sale of their occupancy holdings. All his execution applications were dismissed by the trial Court and on appeal therefrom the orders of dismissal were upheld by the first appellate Court.

[3] The objections in all these cases were that the tenants who figured as respondent 1 in all these four appeals had been either ejected or had surrendered their holdings to the lambardar Mt. Kausalya Bai, that Mt. Kausalya Bai was in possession of the agricultural lands which formed the holdings of the judgment-debtors tenants for over three years, that the tenants' right to the holdings, if any, had been extinguished and that the appellant could not bring to sale the holdings, which were not in existence when the applications for execution were made.

[4] For the purposes of all these four appeals before me, I am concerned only with those tenants who had surrendered their occupancy holdings to Mt. Kausalya Bai during the period of 1933 to 1936 inclusive and whether the said holdings had already become khudkasht land of Mt. Kausalya Bai long before the appellant applied for execution of his rent decrees on 6-3-1944. It is contended in this appeal by the learned counsel for the appellant that under the new S. 58-A, C. P. Tenancy Act the rent of the holding of an occupancy tenant shall be a first charge thereon and it is further contended that the provisions of new S. 55 (1) (d) of the Act with regard to recovery of rent shall apply to proceedings instituted after the commencement of this Act in execution of decrees for arrears of rent passed before the commencement of the Act. It is, therefore, argued that on the basis of these two sections read together the appellant is entitled to execute his decrees against all the holdings in question on the footing that they were occupancy holdings and should be deemed to continue as occupancy holdings for the purpose of satisfying the primary charge on them as regards the payment of rent. It should be borne in mind that these sections, namely, Ss. 55 and 58-A, were introduced in the C. P. Tenancy Act by amending Act of 1940. According to the contention of the learned counsel for the appellant the rent is fastened upon the holdings as a primary charge whether they remain in the hands of the original tenant or whether they go into the hands of a transferee, and it is argued that this statutory charge cannot be defeated by any subsequent transfer of the said holdings. The cases with which I am concerned are, however, not cases of transfer but cases of surrender, and a surrender is not the same thing as a transfer. It is laid down by the Bench consisting of Niyogi and Pollock, A. J. Cs. in 30 N. L. R. 175[1] as under:

"A surrender is an act by which the tenant puts an end to the contract of tenancy involving an extinction of the tenancy right; it must, therefore, come into force immediately and its operation cannot be postponed till the surrendering tenant's death. An alienation, on the other hand, does not affect the contract between the landlord and tenant and does not extinguish the tenant right. The alienee acquires the tenant right intact and gets the benefit of the contract with the landlord with its incidental obligations."

This is the reason why by reason of the surrender of the holdings by the tenants to the landlord Mt. Kausalya Bai all those holdings became her khudkasht property. The learned counsel for the appellant invited my attention to Puranik J.'s ruling reported in I. L. R. (1946) Nag. 39[2] in support of his contention that the appellant was entitled to execute the decrees against the holdings in question under new Ss. 55 and 58-A, C. P. Tenancy Act. This ruling is, in my opinion, easily distinguishable on the ground that the occupancy holding in the decided case had not ceased to be an occupancy holding; nor had it lost its original character as an occupancy holding by reason of any surrender in favour of the landlord and become converted into khudkasht land of the landlord. This ruling is, therefore, inapplicable to the facts of the case before me which are fundamentally different. There is also another difficulty and it is this. The holdings in question had become khudkasht land of Mt. Kausalya Bai by reason of various surrenders long before the appellant filed his execution applications. The legality of these transactions cannot be decided on the basis of new Ss. 55 and 58-A which were enacted in the year 1940. If the said prior transactions are sought to be governed by new provisions of law, which subsequently came into existence, that would amount to giving retrospective effect to the said provisions. Acts which have the effect of impairing contracts and affect vesting rights must be strictly construed and in interpreting such laws the Courts must lean against giving retrospective effect to their provisions. Unless there is someting in the language of an Act showing a contrary intention, the duty and practice of the Courts of Justice is to presume that the Act is prospective and not retrospective: vide I. L. R. (1938) Nag. 91.[3] Therefore, the provisions of new Ss. 55 and 58-A are, in my opinion, inapplicable to the case, and that the ruling in I. L. R. (1946) Nag. 39[2] based thereon is equally inapplicable.

[5] Respondent 2, Mt. Kausalya Bai had been in exclusive possession of the holdings of Nandu, Kishundas, Kare and Mt. Jagrani Bahu (respondent-tenants) for over seven years before the appellant applied for execution of rent decrees against them. All the tenants' right to possession had also become barred by time under Art. 1, Sch. II, C. P. Tenancy Act. Their tenancy rights, if any, were extinguished and the appellant could not get those rights in execution of his decrees for the simple reason that there was no occupancy right in existence at the time of the execution of the decrees which the appellant could bring to sale.

[6] The appeal fails and is hereby dismissed with costs. Counsel's fee Rs. 50 in all the cases.

(a) Hindu law — Marriage — Form — Presumption as to — Pat marriage in churi form—Payment to former husband for obtaining divorce—Effect.

The presumption under Hindu law is that a marriage should be deemed to be in an approved form and that a pat marriage in churi form or in any other form is no exception : 33 A. I. R. 1946 Nag. 232, Rel. on. [Para 6]

The essence of Asura form of marriage is that a bride's price should be paid to the father or other relatives who give away the bride in consideration of the marriage and a marriage between a man and a divorced woman is not to be regarded as being in an unapproved form of marriage under Hindu law : 37 Bom. 295, Rel. on. [Para 6]

Hence the marriage of a divorced woman with a man in churi form cannot be said to be in an unapproved form from the mere fact that certain amount was paid and ornaments were returned to the former husband for obtaining divorce from him. [Para 6]

Judgment.—This appeal arises out of a suit commenced by the plaintiffs-appellants for possession of plaint mentioned property against the defendants-respondents. This property originally belonged to one Mt. Sita (also called Chhitiya) who died on 12-7-1941, without leaving any issue. The admitted facts of the case are that the property in suit was gifted to Mt. Sita by her father Khiladi who died after 1930. Mt. Sita was first married to one Brijlal Kurmi who died some time in 1930. After the death of her husband she was remarried to one Rama Kurmi in churi form. She did not pull on well with Rama for a long time, and left her husband and returned to her village. It is alleged that she had had illicit connection with Lola (defendant 1) and lived with him, with the result that Lola got into possession of all her property after her death. As Mt. Sita died without any issue and as the property in suit was admittedly her stridhan property, the question arose as to who could succeed to it as her heir under Hindu law. The appellate Court held, as pleaded by defendant 1 Lola, that Sita was remarried to Lola in churi form and was his legally wedded wife according to the custom of their caste, but the learned trial Judge having assumed that the churi form of marriage was an unapproved form of marriage under Hindu law, held that the plaintiffs-appellants, as agnatic relations of her parents, were preferential heirs and excluded Lola (defendant 1). The plaintiffs' suit was accordingly decreed to the extent of the landed property.

[2] On appeal by Lola the decree of the Court of first instance was reversed and the plaintiffs' suit was dismissed. The first appellate Court of Jubbulpore held that the churi form of marriage having been recognised as valid by custom, the presumption of Hindu law that a marriage should be deemed to be in an approved form must prevail, in the absence of any allegation or proof that bride's price, techically called Sulka, was received by the father or other guardian for giving the girl in marriage. The lower appellate Court having thus held that remarriage of Mt. Sita with Lola was in an approved form her husband Lola was alone entitled to succeed to her stridhan property in suit to the exclusion of the plaintiffs who were the agantic relations of her parents. The Court of appeal below, therefore, dismissed the plaintiffs' suit with costs.

[3] In the appeal before me, the plaintiffs have admitted all the findings of fact, namely, Lola was married to Mt. Sita in churi form and that marriage was legal and valid according to the custom of their caste. It is also admitted that before her remarriage with Lola she obtained a divorce from Rama and that that divorce was also valid according to custom. It was, however, contended that this remarriage of Sita with Lola is in an unapproved form, technically called Asura, inasmuch as an amount of Rs. 50 was paid to Rama in cash and her ornaments were returned to him for obtaining the said divorce as evidenced by Ex. D-3. As it is clear from this Ex. D-3 that some consideration was paid for obtaining the divorce her subsequent remarriage with Lola could not be deemed to be in Brahma form.

[4] Therefore, the only material point for consideration in the appeal is whether Mt. Sita's remarriage with Lola was in Brahma form or Asura form, and it is the determination of this point which will decide the course of succession to the property of Sita in suit.

[5] Before I deal with this question of Hindu law it is necessary to bear in mind that the plaintiffs never raised any plea in this behalf; nor was any issue drawn up by the Courts below. The plaintiffs' case all along in the lower Courts was that Lola was mere paramour of Mt. Sita and nothing more. The factum of remarriage between Mt. Sita and Lola was emphatically denied by the plaintiffs. It is obvious that in the face of this total denial of the fact of remarriage no challenge was put forward by them against the form of marriage. In these circumstances it is really not necessary for me to look into the evidence and decide the point as to whether the remarriage was in a Brahma or Asura form in the absence of any plea or issue on the point; see A. I. R. 1930 P. C. 57[1], but as the point was, however, argued before the first appellate Court and as it has been argued before me I should like to record my decision thereon.

[6] As stated above, the presumption under Hindu law is that a marriage should be deemed to be in an approved form and that a pat marriage in churi form or in any other form is no exception: vide I. L R. (1946) Nag. 378.[2] The fact that Rs 50 were paid and ornaments were returned to Rama for obtaining divorce is neither here nor there. According to the plaintiffs' pleading Rs. 50 were paid by defendant 1 as a fine for having improper intimacy with Mt. Sita. Whether the said amount was paid as fine or whether it was paid towards the expenses of marriage which Rama had incurred, the fact remains that it was paid only for obtaining a divorce and not in connetion with the churi marriage of Mt. Sita with Rama. Apart from the fact that there is no plea put forward by the plaintiffs that any bride's price was paid it is well-established that the essence of Asura form of marriage is that a bride's price should be paid to the father or other relatives who give away the bride in consideration of the marriage and that a marriage between a man and a divorced woman is not to be regarded as being in an unapproved form of marriage under Hindu law: vide 37 Bom. 295[3] It is quite clear that the payment under Ex. D-3 was in connexion with the divorce and not with remarriage of Sita with Rama; nor was it a payment by Lola to Sita's father or her relations. Therefore, my conclusion is that Ex. D 3 on which the learned counsel for the appellants has concentrated his whole line of attack does not and cannot by any stretch of reasoning support his contention that Mt Sita's churi marriage with Lola was in an unapproved form.

[7] As I have already held that the presumption of Hindu law in favour of approved form of marriage holds good in this case and as there is nothing to rebut that presumption, the appeal before me fails and is hereby dismissed with costs.

Judgment.—This is a miscellaneous (first) appeal against the order of Mr. V. B. Sarwate, First Additional District Judge, Nagpur, in Execution Case No. 7A of 1937 passed on 27-3-1942.

[2] The appellant is an auction-purchaser who bought a house on 1-11-1940 for Rs. 6050. When he did not deposit 25 per cent. of the purchase-money, the house was attempted to be resold by the sale amin the same day but no bidders were found. Later, under orders of the Court, the house was again brought to sale and on 4-10-1941 the appellant bought it for Rs. 2100. The present appeal concerns proceedings under O. 21, R. 71, Civil P. C. for the recovery of the deficiency in price. The auction-purchaser who is the appellant resisted this recovery on various grounds. The lower Court has ordered that the expenses attending the resale and the deficiency of price be recovered from the auction-purchaser.

[3] The decree under which the sale had taken place is Ex. P-1. It was a maintenance decree in favour of one Mt. Vatsala Bai, widow of Ganpat Rao Deshmukh, and included an amount of Rs 2460 as arrears of maintenance from March 1936, to July 1939, inclusive. The execution application was filed on 2 4 1940 and the total amount claimed was Rs. 3008-12-8 In the decree, it is mentioned that the maintenance allowance shall be a charge on the immovable property left by the decree-holder's deceased husband Ganpat Rao Deshmukh and that the defendant shall allot a portion of the house at Nagpur for the residence of Vatsala Bai.

[4] In the sale proclamation which was issued these two facts were not mentioned, but the decree-holder who was responsible for the omission later applied to the Court that she was willing to waive these rights provided the auction-purchaser paid the full amount under the first sale. The auction-purchaser who had earlier signified his readiness to pay the full amount of Rs. 6050 provided the rights of respondent were waived, did not care to accept the offer of the decree-holder.

[5] Since this matter was not amicably adjusted the Court ordered the sale of the property with the result mentioned above. On the application of the decree-holder the learned Additional District Judge has ordered the auction-purchaser to pay the difference between the two prices, under O. 21, R. 71, Civil P. C. The contentions of the auction-purchaser were rejected. Hence this appeal.

[6] It was first contended that O. 21, R. 71, Civil P. C. is subject to the considerations mentioned in R. 84 of the same Order. Under R. 84 if 25 per cent. of the price is not deposited the Officer conducting the sale has to resell the property 'forthwith.' It is said that 'forthwith' means as expeditously as possible. It is argued that the sale which took place a year later does not comply with the terms of R. 84. Therefore, the auction-purchaser is not liable to make up the deficiency. As to the attempted and abortive sale on the same day, it is said that that was a bogus and fictitious transaction and no sale at all. It is, therefore, contended that since R. 84 has not been strictly complied with the auction-purchaser is not bound and R. 71 does not apply to his case.

[7] In support of this contention reliance is placed on A. I. R. 1937 Lah. 924[1] That ruling follows an earlier case of the same High Court reported in A. I. R. 1929 Lah. 744[2] The earlier case of the Lahore High Court was dissented from in 53 Mad. 900[3] and A. I. R. 1937 ALL. 556.[4] A delay of a few months does not matter has been held in A. I. R. 1944 Pesh. 27[5] at p 28 and A. I. R. 1940 Mad. 566.[6] The same meaning has been given to the word 'forthwith' in I. L. R. (1941) Nag. 485[7] at p. 492. In 29 N. L. R. 52[8] and in A. I. R. 1944 Pesh 27[5] at p. 28 it has been held that O. 21, R. 71, Civil P. C. applies to all cases in which a resale has been occasioned due to the failure of the auction-purchaser to deposit either the 25 per cent. of the sale price or the balance thereof. I respectfully agree with the cases which dissent from the Lahore view and say with all due respect that the Lahore High Court's view is too strict, and contrary to the intention disclosed in O. 21, R. 71, Civil P. C. In all cases where the word 'forthwith' occurs it must ordinarily be understood to mean 'within a reasonable time'. See Maxwell's Interpretation of Statutes Edn. 8, p. 351, where the following passage occurs :

> "When a statute requires that something shall be done 'forthwith', or 'immediately', or even 'instantly,' it would probably be understood as allowing a reasonable time for doing it."

In fact, as has been said in 53 Mad. 900,[3] it would be in the interests of the auction-purchaser that the sale be properly advertised so that the deficiency arising on a resale be as little as possible. I am of opinion that the deficiency in price can be recovered from the auction-purchaser in this case unless he can escape liability in any other way.

[8] It was next contended that as the facts of the maintenance being a charge on the property, and the right of residence given to the decree-holder were not mentioned in the sale proclamation, the auction-purchaser was thereby misled and offered a larger price. As a result of this the auction-purchaser claims that he is excused from making up the deficiency. In support of this contention reliance is placed on 36 Bom. 329,[9] A. I. R. 1931 Bom. 367,[10] 16 Cal. 535,[11] 25 Cal. 99[12] and A. I. R. 1937 Lah. 924.[1] The respondents argue that the auction-purchaser has a right to resort to O. 21, R. 90, Civil P. C., to have the sale set aside and he cannot, having once bought the property, challenge the sale except under O. 21, R. 90 of the Code. Reliance is placed on I. L. R. (1939) Nag. 357.[13] That case, however, only lays down that an auction-purchaser is one of the persons whose interests are affected by the sale and has a right of making an application to get the sale set aside on the ground of illegality or material irregularity in conducting the sale. It has been held in a large number of cases that the auction-purchaser can resist the demand for the deficiency in price on the ground that he was deceived and misled into making a larger bid by reason of material omission in the proclamation of the sale. It was said in 16 Cal. 535:[11]

"In the present case, after the decree-holder has succeeded in misleading the defaulting purchaser to bid a high price, by withholding information as to encumbrances which it was his duty to notify, if he were allowed to recover the deficiency of price at the re-sale, it would be allowing him to take advantage of his own neglect of duty. That would so manifestly inequitable that we are unable to hold that the Legislature could have ever intended such a result."

In the Bombay cases it was laid down that the defaulter can question the defect in the sale proclamation and escape liability if it can make out a case showing a sufficient ground for exemption. The sufficiency of the grounds were examined in A. I. R. 1931 Bom. 367,[10] but in that case the grounds were not found to be sufficient.

[9] Bearing these cases in mind, I have therefore to see whether there was such a misdescription of the property or such omission in the sale proclamation of vital information which was likely to induce the auction-purchaser to offer a bigger price than he would have otherwise done, and whether he did so to his own prejudice. This case is different from the rulings cited because the same person has been the purchaser on both the occasions and no equities except those existing between the decree-holder and the auction-purchaser have to be considered. It is true that the judgment-debtor has challenged the sale but if the price fetched at the first sale is recovered, the question of inadequacy of price disappears.

[10] Two facts, here, are mentioned : firstly that this is a charge decree and fact of a recurring charge was not mentioned and secondly that the right of residence has not been mentioned. It must be pointed out that the decree-holder was willing to forego both these rights and at one time the suggestion had also emanated from the auction-purchaser that if these rights were given up he was willing to pay the full price. Though the decree-holder is willing to stand by this offer the auction-purchaser obviously does not want now to implement what he stated in his application dated 17-1-1941.

[11] As to the charge and the right of residence, I fail to see how they interested the auction-purchaser. They were not mentioned in the sale proclamation and the decree-holder would prima facie have been estopped from urging them at a subsequent stage. As to the charge the property was being sold in furtherance of the charge decree itself. It was argued that the charge is a recurring charge and would bind the property when the arrears of maintenance accumulate. No authority was cited in support of the contention that this would be so even if the charge was not mentioned in the sale proclamation. In Chitaley's Transfer of Property Act, Vol. II, under S. 100, note 27 at p. 1483. there is a passage which supports the contention that a charge continues to bind the property in the hands of the auction-purchaser. It is said there :

"But where a charge is of a recurring nature, as in the case of maintenance allowance, if the property is sold in execution of a decree for arrears, the liability in respect of future payments remains after the sale and is not extinguished by it. The effect of the sale is to satisfy the claim for the arrears only. The charge for future maintenance still remains attached to the property and the auction-purchaser gets the property subject to the charge."

In support of this passage three cases are cited.* They are 45 Cal. 530,[16] 20 Pat. 86[17] and I. L. R. (1943) Nag. 713.[18] To these may be added A.I.R. 1939 ALL. 579[19] which is relied upon in the Note:— His Lordship while quoting a passage from Note 27 has, it is submitted, by oversight, cited in the footnotes cases given under Note 28 by Chitaley in his Commentary on the Transfer of Property Act, Vol. II, p. 1483. In support of the passage quoted in the judgment two cases are cited by Chitaley. They are : A. I. R. 1940 Cal. 60;[14] A. I. R. 1933 All. 934[15]—Ed.

Patna case and A. I. R. 1933 ALL. 934[15] and A. I. R. 1940 Cal. 60[14] at p. 62. The first case is not in point. A. I. R. 1939 ALL 579[19] was a case in which the sale proclamation distinctly stated that the property was being sold subject to the charge. That apart one of the reasons given in support of the conclusion is that such a charge created by a decree does not fall either within charges created by act of parties or by law. This view was not approved in 20 Pat. 86[17] and I. L. R. (1943) Nag. 713.[18] The latter case does not lay down the proposition for which it is cited in the passage referred to above. The other cases do support the proposition urged by Mr. Bobde. I do not propose to examine this matter in detail because I am satisfied that the charge not having been mentioned in the sale proclamation by the decree-holder in whose favour the charge operated, the decree-holder was prima facie estopped from enforcing it against the auction-purchaser. In Chitaley's Civil Procedure Code, Vol. II, (1944 Edn.) it is said :

"But a mortgagee may be estopped by his conduct from setting up the mortgage against a bona fide purchaser. Thus, a decree-holder on whom a duty is cast by this rule (O. 21, R. 66) to give full and true information, so far as it is known to him, will be estopped from setting up, as against the auction-purchaser, any mortgage in his own favour, which he has not mentioned in his application under this rule, and which does not appear in the sale proclamation, provided the auction-purchaser has actually bought without notice of the mortgage." (p. 2246).

The same view is expressed on the same page in respect of charges in the following words :

"In the case of a charge, however, it will not, as a general rule, be binding on the purchaser if he has no notice of such charge."

It is not necessary to discuss whether the doctrine of notice contained in S. 100, T. P. Act, applies to an auction-purchaser or not. In the present case on either view the auction-purchaser was safe if there was no notice to him as he says there was none, and the decree-holder even till to-day says that the charge is waived. The charge in favour of the decree-holder had to be mentioned in the sale proclamation to bind the auction-purchaser.

[12] The next question is whether the property sold a second time was different from the property sold the first time. That it was the self-same property cannot be denied. I have compared the sale proclamations issued on the two occasions and in neither has the fact that the charge continues been mentioned. Thus apart from the knowledge which the auction-purchaser may have possessed from sources other than the proclamation of sale the resulting position as to the property in the two sales was the same. What I have said about the charge applies equally to the right of residence. That is not even mentioned in the application for execution. In view of this also the difference in price must be paid by the auction-purchaser.

[13] In my opinion failure to mention these rights in the sale proclamation prima facie estops the decree-holder from enforcing these rights if they existed. I find it necessary to state in this case that the decree-holder apart from his conduct in not mentioning the charge and the right of residence, in the sale proclamation has again and again reiterated that she is willing to waive these rights. The decree-holder's reiteration of this fact that these rights are waived must prima facie be taken to bind her.

[14] In my opinion the order of the trial Court is correct, though the law was somewhat inaccurately stated by the learned Additional District Judge. The result is that the sale for Rs. 2100 is confirmed and the auction-purchaser must also pay the difference between the price offered by him at the first sale and the second sale as well as the expenses attending the first sale as has been ordered by the trial Court. The appeal is dismissed.

[15] As to the costs of this appeal, the costs would have followed the event but I decline to grant costs to the respondents. On the date of arguments the learned counsel for the respondents were absent. Arguments were heard in their absence. Later they applied for the re-hearing of the case. This was allowed by me as the learned counsel for the appellant had no objection. I, however, think that such conduct must be discouraged. I, therefore, order that costs will be borne as incurred.

Order. — This is a revision by the defendant against the decree passed against him by the Judge, Small Causes at Sakoli, in a suit brought by the landlord of his village for Rs. 10 as the price of manure from the defendant's cattle. The plaintiff landlord alleged that the defendant was a thalwa i. e., non-agriculturist resident of the village and according to the wajib-ul-arz of the village, the landlord is entitled to the manure from the cattle of a thalwa in the village.

[2] The defendant denied the plaintiff's claim. According to him, he was a sub-tenant and not a thalwa. He cultivated lands of others either on rent or on batai contract and the landlord was not therefore entitled to the manure from his cattle. He also contended that the suit was excluded from the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court under Art. 13 of Sch. 2, Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. The quantity and the price of manure were also disputed.

[3] The lower Court overruled the defendant's contention on the point of jurisdiction. It held that the defendant was a thalwa and not a sub-tenant. The claim of the plaintiff was decreed for Rs. 6 i. e., the value of three cartloads of manure at the rate of Rs. 2 per cart.

[4] The important question that arises in the revision is the question of jurisdiction. The suits which fall under any of the Articles of Sch. 2, Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, are exempted from the cognizance of a Court of Small Causes. Article 13 which is relevant in this case runs thus:

"A suit to enforce payment of the allowance or fees respectively called malikana or hakk or of cesses or other dues when the cesses or dues are payable to a person by reason of his interest in immovable property or in an hereditary office or in a shrine or other religious institution."

[5] According to the wajib-ul-arz all cattle in the village are entitled to free grazing in the banjar land in the village. The banjar land in the village belongs to the landlord though there may exist some communal rights over it, the cattle belonging to a thalwa i. e., one who holds no land in the village and does not therefore pay anything to the landlord is allowed to graze on the banjar land in the village, but the landlord by reason of his interest in the banjar land is given the right of receiving manure from those cattle. The plaintiff's suit is in substance for receiving manure for the year 1944-45 which the defendant failed to deliver to him and as required by O. 20, R. 10, Civil P. C., that manure is valued at Rs. 10 so that the Court could pass a decree for the value of the manure. The plaint is not drafted very artistically.

[6] In holding that the plaintiff's suit did not fall within Art. 13 of Sch 2, the learned Judge of the lower Court followed the decision of Sir Henry Drake-Brockman J. C. reported in 11 N. L. R. 100[1] In that case the defendant had, in breach of the terms of the wajib-ul-arz already sold away the manure before the institution of the suit. The plaintiff knew this and therefore his suit, as held by the learned Judicial Commissioner, was not to recover the manure to which he was entitled under the wajib-ul-arz but was one for damages for manure wrongfully sold and it did not, according to the learned Judicial Commissioner, therefore, fall within the scope of Art. 13. It is observed in I. L. R. (1938) 2 Cal. 60[2] that the dues contemplated by Art. 13 must be dues arising directly from the interest in immovable property and cannot include dues which are indirectly connected with something arising out of an interest in immovable property. It was on that principle that interest due for default of payment of rent in time was held recoverable in a Small Cause Court suit. The learned Judicial Commissioner no doubt observed, though that observation was not necessary for the decision of the appeal before him that even if the claim be regarded as one for the manure itself as a 'due' within the meaning of that term as used in Art. 13 aforesaid still that 'due' was not payable to the plaintiffs by reason of their interest in immovable property. The reliance was placed on the observations in 36 Mad. 18[3] and 19 Mad. 329.[4]

[7] In I. L. R. (1944) Nag. 825[5] Bobde J., as he then was, observed in connection with the aforesaid observations that they were not necessary for the decision of the case before the learned Judicial Commissioner and were rather obiter. I respectfully agree with Bobde J. If these remarks were, however, not obiter I would have found considerable difficulty and I say so with all respect, in agreeing with the learned Judicial Commissioner that the plaintiff's claim for manure was based on custom and was not one for 'dues' payable to a person by reason of his interest in immovable property. Under S. 78, Land Revenue Act, the settlement officer has to ascertain and record the custom in each estate in regard to the rights of persons resident in the estate or village in the common land of the mahal or its produce and other rights in regard to matters specified in that section and any other rights and customs which the Provincial Government may direct to be recorded. The village administration paper or the wajib-ul-arz which is prepared according to S. 79, Land Revenue Act, embodies the result of the inquiry under S. 78 and other sections. It is thus a record not only of customs but of rights and customs. Clause 6 of the wajib-ul-arz (EX. P-1) is headed as 'the rights over the banjar land of the village' and it runs thus:

"All the cattle in the village graze free on the entire banjar land in the village but in view of the grazing of the cattle of thalwas the proprietor takes the manure."

[8] It is thus clear that the clause deals with a right and not only with a custom and the right to take manure is because the cattle of thalwas graze in the banjar land which is owned by the proprietor. To my mind, it is a case which falls within Art. 13 of the Act and is, therefore, clearly excepted from the jurisdiction of the Court of Small Causes.

[9] 19 Mad. 329[4] relied on by the learned Judicial Commissioner was a suit by a zamindar to recover arrears of kattubadi and karnam's emoluments due by the defendants as owners of kattubadi-inams. The question was whether the suit was of a small cause nature and the second appeal did not therefore lie. The plaintiff's contention that kattubadi was a charge on immovable property was not accepted. As to emoluments payable to a karnam it was held that if the claim was made by the karnam himself it might come within Art. 13 but a suit filed by a zamindar is of a different character and must rest on some custom or a contract. The question in 36 Mad. 18[3] was again the same viz., whether the suit by the zamindar for recovery of land cesses from an inamdar was of a small cause nature. Though a zamindar is liable to pay land cesses to Government and he did pay it, as between him and the inamdar it is the inamdar who is liable to pay land cesses on his inam land. The suit is thus based on an implied contract or on the principle embodied in S. 69, Contract Act. These cases are, therefore, not in point.

[10] In 40 ALL. 663[6] the plaintiff landlord filed a suit against a Teli resident in the village on the basis of a term in the wajib-ul-arz under which the Teli was liable to give a certain quantity of oil to the landlord. It was held that the suit fell within Art. 13 and was thus excepted from the jurisdiction of the Court of Small Causes. It was observed that the suit was certainly for dues which were claimed by the plaintiff as payable to him by reason of his interest in immovable property. This decision was followed by Bobde J., in I. L. R. (1944) Nag. 825[5] cited above where the landlord sued a cobbler resident in the village for dues payable to him under the term of the wajib-ul-arz. It was observed that the wajib-ul-arz provided for payment to the landlord because of his interest in the village.

[11] The plaintiff's claim in the lower Court for manure of cattle grazing on his banjar land falls directly within Art. 13 of Sch. 2, Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. The suit was therefore excepted from the jurisdiction of the Court of Small Causes. The decree passed by the lower Court is, therefore, void. The plaint shall have to be returned to the plaintiff for presentation to a proper Court for trial. The revision is allowed with costs. Counsel's fee Rs. 20.

(a) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 47(2)—Conversion of suit into proceedings under S. 47—Mortgage renovated by agreement—Suit on mortgage—Conversion of.

Before converting a suit into a proceeding under S. 47 the Court must apply its mind and see whether the suit involves such questions as fall under S. 47 and in respect of which separate suit is filed. [Para 4]

When on an application by the mortgagor to the Debt Conciliation Board, his debt on the mortgage is conciliated and an agreement is executed providing that the debt is to be satisfied by transfer of some property to the mortgagee, but the mortgagor does not carry out the agreement and thereupon the mortgagee files a suit on the mortgage ignoring the agreement before the Board, the mortgage having been renovated by the subsequent agreement has no legal existence and cannot therefore be sued upon. The suit is not hit by S. 47 and cannot therefore be converted into a proceeding under S. 47. [Para 5]

Where a Court orders a suit to be treated as a proceeding under S. 47, it is not the date when that suit was so treated, but the date on which the suit was instituted which should be taken as the date on which proceedings under S. 47 were initiated. If on the date on which the suit is instituted the application under S. 47 of the Code is barred by limitation, the Court has no discretion to ignore the law of limitation and to treat that application as filed within limitation: 27 A. A District Judge is no doubt empowered under the C. P. Courts Act to divide work conveniently between different Sub-Judges and for that purpose to determine particular cases up to a particular jurisdiction to be tried by the one Sub-Judge or the other. But it is not within the power of the District Judge to take away, to reduce or to enhance the inherent jurisdiction of a Court fixed by the C. P. Courts Act. [Para 14]

Judgment.— The defendants-appellants are the mortgagors. They borrowed a debt from the plaintiff and executed a mortgage deed dated 24-1-1930 in his favour. The cause of action of this mortgage accrued on 24-1-1930. On 5-9-1936, the mortgagors applied to the Debt Conciliation Board for conciliation of their debt. The Board passed an order dated 8-9-1938 conciliating the debt and an agreement was accordingly executed and registered on 8-9-1938 (Ex. 1-D-2). This agreement provided that the debt due on the mortgage was to be satisfied by transfer of some immovable property by the mortgagors in favour of the mortgagee. The mortgagors did not carry out this agreement and no deed of conveyance was, as required by the agreement, executed.

[2] Thereupon the mortgagee filed a suit against the mortgagors on 25-1-1943 for recovery of the mortgage debt on the strength of the mortgage dated 24-1-1930. He ignored completely the agreement before the Board Ex. 1-D-2 and fell back on the original cause of action. This suit was originally filed in the Court of First Sub-Judge but it was subsequently transferred by the District Judge to the Court of Second Sub-Judge on 28-9-1944. One of the issues, that is issue No. 4(a) in the suit, was whether the suit on the original cause of action, ignoring the agreement before the Debt Conciliation Board, was maintainable. The trial Court held that it was not maintainable and that the remedy of the mortgagee was on the execution side for specific performance of the agreement reached and recorded before the Debt Conciliation Board. The trial Court, however, considered that it was a fit case in which under S. 47(2), Civil P. C., the suit can be treated as a proceeding in execution under S. 47 and it ordered accordingly.

[3] By the latter part of the order, namely by treating the suit as a proceeding under S. 47 of the Code, the defendants felt aggrieved. They, therefore filed an appeal but the lower appellate Court dismissed their appeal and they have filed this miscellaneous second appeal.

[4] Under S 47 (2), Civil P. C., a suit which involves questions relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree, can, subject to any objection as to limitation and jurisdiction, be treated as a proceeding under S. 47 of the Code. It is, however, necessary before converting a suit into a proceeding under S. 47 that the Court must apply its mind and see whether the suit involves such questions as fall under S. 47 of the Code and in respect of which separate suit is filed.

[5] The suit filed by the mortgagee was not for specific performance of the agreement. If it was so, then obviously it would involve questions relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree, and at least to that extent there was no objection in converting that suit into a proceeding under S. 47, Civil P. C. The suit filed by the plaintiff was, however, not to enforce agreement before the Debt Conciliation Board which on registration had the force of a decree. The plaintiff, on the other hand, ignored that agreement altogether and filed the suit on the basis of the mortgage itself. Now, the suit on the basis of a mortgage was not maintainable because that mortgage was renovated by a subsequent agreement and, therefore, had no legal existence and could not, therefore, be sued upon. The suit was not hit by S. 47, Civil P. C. Thus, the mortgage suit filed by the plaintiff could not be converted into a proceeding under S. 47 of the Code. It is not that any suit can be converted into a proceeding under S. 47, but it must be one to which S. 47, Civil P. C., is a bar. It is immaterial if the suit is not maintainable on any other account such as the plaintiff's in the present case was. In my opinion, the lower Courts were wrong in ordering that the suit filed by the plaintiff for enforcement of the mortgage should be treated as a proceeding under S. 47, Civil P. C.

[6] There are other objections to the decisions of the Courts below and the most important of them is the question of limitation. The agreement which is now sought to be enforced is one dated 8-9-1938. The plaintiff's suit on the basis of the mortgage was instituted on 25-1-1943 and the Court decided to treat that suit as a proceeding under S. 47, Civil P. C., some time in the year 1944. Even assuming that as a result of the order of the trial Court the suit could be treated as a proceeding under S. 47, that proceeding could at best be said to have been instituted on 25-1 1943. That means nearly 4½ years after the date of the agreement, and thus even on that date on which the suit was instituted, the application of S. 47, Civil P. C., was barred by limitation.

[7] The lower appellate Court has entirely misunderstood the case reported in 1939 N. L. J. 500.[1] In that case the suit was instituted within less than a year of the date of the agreement before the Debt Conciliation Board, and therefore, if the date of the institution of the suit be regarded as the date on which proceedings under S. 47, Civil P. C., were started, no question of limitation would arise; or that where a Court orders a suit to be treated as a proceeding under S. 47, Civil P. C., it is not the date when that suit was so treated, but the date on which the suit was instituted which should be taken as the date on which proceedings under S. 47, Civil P. C., were initiated. It is indeed surprising that the lower appellate Court should read into that decision a novel proposition, namely, that even if the application under S 47 of the Code is barred by limitation the Court has still a discretion to ignore the law of limitation and to treat that application as filed within limitation. The learned Judge of the lower appellate Court was obviously wrong. The Judge also observed that this was a case of a registered decree, which obviously it is not, and therefore, limitation was not six years instead of three years.

[8] The learned counsel for the respondent did not think it proper to support this part of the judgment of the Court below. It is a registered agreement which has the force of a decree and thus registration is a pre-requisite for an agreement before the Debt Conciliation Board to have the effect of a decree. It is not that the decree is registered but the agreement is registered so that the agreement should have the force of a decree. According to the procedure for registration of decrees it is never the original decree which is registered. It is only the certified copy of that decree which is presented for registration before the Sub-Registrar and registration of the certified copy of the decree is taken to be the registration of the decree. In the case of an agreement before the Debt Conciliation Board, it is the agreement itself, like any other document, which has to be registered. I do not think it is necessary to dilate on this point any further in view of the fact that the observations of the learned Judge of the lower appellate Court are obviously incorrect and the counsel for the respondent did not support them.

[9] The learned counsel for the respondent, however, urged before me that neither Art. 181 nor Art. 182, Limitation Act, applied, as the registered agreement before the Board was not actually a decree of the civil Court. It is merely to be treated as a decree for certain purposes. If this argument is stretched to its logical conclusion it means this—and it is frankly admitted to be so—that in the matter of executing a notional decree under S. 12 (2) or S. 13, Debt Conciliation Act, there is no limitation at all and in fact the learned counsel interpreted S. 12 (2), Debt Conciliation Act, in a manner as to keep the agreement alive forever so that it could be executed as a decree at any time. In my view, this was never the intention of the Legislature and this is not borne out by the provisions of the Debt Conciliation Act.

[10] In the first place, the interpretation put by the learned counsel on S. 12 (2) is not correct. What is kept alive is not the agreement but it is the mortgage and the provision is that in spite of the fact that the mortgage deed may be incorporated into an agreement, the mortgage is kept alive so that the mortgagee in the matter of realisation of that debt shall have preference against simple money credit. Moreover, under S. 12 (2), Debt Conciliation Act, a registered agreement before the Board has the force of a decree, and even though it is not in fact a decree passed by the Court of civil jurisdiction still for the matter of enforcement, that is regarded as a decree of the civil Court. There is thus no difference between a notional decree and a decree which is actually passed by a civil Court in the matter of execution of that decree. This notional decree must either be treated as a decree passed by a civil Court or not, there cannot be any half-way house. If it is not to be treated as a decree passed by a civil Court then that Court shall have no jurisdiction to execute the decree as it could only execute the decree passed by it or which is transferred to it for execution under the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code. If a notional decree is to be treated as a decree passed by a Court of civil jurisdiction, then for all purposes including limitation, it can be at a par with any other decree passed by a civil Court and in that view limitation for an application under S. 47, Civil P. C., would be governed by Art. 181, Limitation Act. In fact, the respondent is on the horns of the dilemma; he wants to take advantage of S. 47, Civil P. C., and at the same time does not want to admit that a notional decree is for purposes of execution a decree of a civil Court. It is obvious that if it is not a decree of a civil Court then the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code, including S. 47 of the Code would not apply In my view, therefore, it is clear that limitation for an application under S. 47, Civil P. C., whether arising in a decree passed by a civil Court, or arising in a proceeding in execution of a notional decree under the Debt Conciliation Act is governed by Art. 181, Limitation Act.

[11] As stated above, under S. 47 (2), Civil P. C., a suit can be treated as a proceeding under S. 47, subject to the question of limitation and jurisdiction. Here in the present case, even if these proceedings are treated as having been initiated on 25-1-1943, the date on which the suit was instituted, still this was long barred The Courts below therefore went wrong in treating the suit as a proceeding under S. 47, Civil P. C.

[12] The learned counsel for the respondent relied on S. 29, Limitation Act. In my view that section has no application because here we are not concerned with the provisions of the special Act. The decree that is to be executed is the notional decree of the civil Court and it is beyond doubt that Art. 181 or Art. 182 would apply to such a case.

[13] The learned counsel relied on A. I. R. 1936 Bom. 396,[2] where a doubt has been expressed regarding the applicability of Art. 182, Limitation Act, in respect of an award passed by the Registrar, Co-operative Societies. To my mind there should be no doubt on that point but anyhow the case does not decide anything positively and need not be considered further. On the other hand, the learned counsel for the appellants relied on 31 Mad. 24[3] and I. L. R. (1934) Mad. 495[4] which appear to be in point.

[14] The learned counsel for the appellants also raised a question of jurisdiction but in my view it has no substance. According to him, the suit for enforcement of the mortgage was originally instituted in the Court of Sub-Judge First Class which Court had, according to the distribution memo then prevalent to try cases having more than Rs. 500 as its value for purposes of jurisdiction. The Sub-Judge, Second Class, is according to the distribution memo, empowered to try cases below Rs 500. This particular case was however transferred by the District Judge from the Court of the Sub-Judge, First Class, to the Court of Sub-Judge, Second Class, for special reasons. It was contended that the execution for enforcement of the agreement would according to the distribution memo lie in the Court of the Sub-Judge, First Class, and not in the Court of Sub-Judge, Second Class, as its value would be more than Rs. 500. Even if it be so, according to me, that does not matter much as the inherent jurisdiction of the Sub-Judge, Second Class, is Rs. 5000, and that of the First Class, from Rs. 5000 to Rs. 10,000. It is not within the power of the District Judge to take away, to reduce or to enhance the inherent jurisdiction of a Court fixed by the C. P. Courts Act. The District Judge is no doubt empowered to divide work conveniently between different Sub-Judges and for that purpose to determine particular cases up to a particular jurisdiction to be tried by the one Sub-Judge or the other. This does not, however, affect the inherent jurisdiction of the Sub-Judges. As stated above, I do not find any substance in the point of jurisdiction.

[15] However on the first two points, namely that the suit did not involve questions which fell within S. 47, Civil P. C, or to which S 47 applied and also on the ground of limitation the decisions of the Courts below are erroneous and not according to law. They are, therefore, set aside.

[16] In view of the finding of the first Court that the plaintiff's suit on the strength of the mortgage was not maintainable as the mortgage was renovated by the agreement before the Debt Conciliation Board the plaintiff's suit stands dismissed. The plaintiff to bear the costs of the defendants throughout.

Second Appeal No. 615 of 1943, Decided on 1-4-1947, against appellate decree of Dist. Judge, Wardha, 1-10-1943

(a) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 47—Execution dismissed as infructuous under S. 15 (3), C P. Debt Conciliation Act, 1933 — Suit for declaration that proceedings before Board were void is not barred under S. 47.

A decree-holder against whom a certificate under S. 15, C. P. Debt Conciliation Act, 1933, had been granted filed an application for execution of his money decree but the execution was struck off as infructuous on the ground that he could not execute his decree by virtue of S. 15 (3) of that Act unless the instalments of debt of another secured creditor, L, as fixed by the Debt Conciliation Board under S. 12 of that Act were paid in full. The decree-holder thereupon filed a suit for declaration that all the proceedings before the Board were null and void as the mortgage in favour of L which alone gave the defendant right to apply to the Board was bogus and that the plaintiff was entitled to execute his decree against the defendant:

Held that the suit was not barred by S. 47. The obstacle in the way of plaintiff's execution application, namely, the agreement before the Board could not be removed unless L was a party to the proceedings but he could not be a proper party as he was not a party to the plaintiff's decree nor a representative of a party to the decree. Therefore, any dispute between the plaintiff and L was outside the scope of S. 47. [Para 9]

(d) Limitation Act (1908), Art. 95—Starting point —Knowledge of fraud—Meaning of.

It is a fundamental proposition of law of limitation that as long as a person is the subject of fraud no time shall run against him. What is required for the limitation to start is actual knowledge of fraud and not merely suspicion. The difference between suspicion and knowledge is a difference in the degree of certainty which a person feels specially when the knowledge relates to something intangible and is necessarily based on inferences. Knowledge does not include means of knowledge and the fact of knowledge of fraud must be distinguished from the evidence in proof of fraud. Knowledge of fraud means the knowledge of circumstances on which any reasonable man concludes that a fraud has been committed. It may be his conclusion or knowledge further corroborated by additional circumstances known by him subsequently. He cannot however say that he had no knowledge of fraud till the last piece of evidence came to light or till the persons committing the fraud admitted the same : 37 Cal. 81, Rel. on. [Paras 15 & 21]

(e) Limitation Act (1908), Art. 95—Knowledge of fraud — Burden of proof.

If fraud is established burden is on the defendant to show that it was known to the plaintiff beyond the period of limitation: 17 Bom. 341 (P. C.) and 31 Mad. 230, Rel. on. [Para 16]

This burden can be discharged by circumstantial evidence and by the statements and the conduct of the plaintiff. [Para 16]

R. S. Dabir and M. W. Paranik—for Appellants.

M. R. Bobde (for No. 1) and H. N. Vaidya (for No. 2)—for Respondents.

Judgment. — This is a second appeal by defendants 1 and 2 against the decree of the lower appellate Court which on reversing the decree of the trial Court granted to the plaintiff-respondent the relief prayed for. The relevant facts are these. In Civil Suit No. 241 of 1933, the plaintiff obtained on 4-4-1934 a money decree against defendants 1 and 2 (appellants) Only a day before this decree was passed i. e. on 3-4-1934, the appellants mortgaged their entire attachable property in favour of their relative, Laxman (respondent 2). On 6-12-1935, the appellants applied to the Debt Conciliation Board for conciliation of their debts and in that application besides the plaintiff they showed themselves indebted to Laxman for Rs. 600-0-0 due on mortgage and to one Vithoba for a petty amount of Rs. 10-0-0. Laxman did not comply with a notice under S. 8 (1), Debt Conciliation Act, nor was present on 7-10-1936 the date of hearing before the Board and his debt stood discharged. After some hearing on 4-6-1937, the Board issued a certificate under S. 15 of the Act against the plaintiff and passed an order embodying the settlement of debts due to Laxman and Vithoba Laxman's debt, i. e. Rs. 600-0-0 due on mortgage, was settled at Rs. 200-0-0 and was made payable in twenty years by an annual instalment of Rs. 10-0-0 and Vithoba's debt was made payable in two instalments at Rs. 5-0-0 each per year An agreement as required by S. 12 was duly executed and registered.

[2] On 4-7-1941 the plaintiff sued out execution of his decree against the appellants and attached their immovable property through the civil Court. The appellants objected on the strength of the agreement before the Debt Conciliation Board. On 25-11-1941 the execution application was struck off as wholly infructuous with an observation by the executing Court that attachment will take effect after the instalments of the Debt Conciliation Board were satisfied.

[3] On 28-4-1942, the plaintiff filed a suit from which this second appeal arises and asked the following relief:

"That it be declared that the proceedings, order dated 4-6-1937, agreement effected and registered and the certificate issued to the plaintiff in respect of his aforesaid decretal debt are null and void on account of fraud stated above and the plaintiff was entitled to execute his aforesaid decree against the defendants."

[4] In the plaint it was alleged that a debt of Rs. 600-0-0 shown by defendants 1 and 2 as due to Laxman was false and fraudulently shown with a view to persuade the Board to believe that the creditor to whom more than 40 per cent. of the debt was owing was willing to conciliate so that the Board could accept the settlement and have an agreement executed and registered. It was alleged that the mortgage deed dated 3-4-1934 was entirely bogus and the bond dated 16-11-1933 on which the consideration for mortgage was alleged to be due was equally bogus. It was further alleged that the mortgagee was a man of no means and could not advance any debt and one Doma to whom Rs. 415-0-0 out of the consideration are alleged to have been paid, was himself indebted on a mortgage which he was unable to satisfy. In short, it was pleaded that defendants 1 and 2 in collusion with Laxman played a fraud on the plaintiff and also on the Board. As to the cause of action for the suit it was alleged that immediately after the dismissal of the plaintiff's execution application dated 25-11-1941, defendants 1 and 2 began to give out that they succeeded in defrauding the plaintiff and in delaying his claim by their machination and fraud. The cause of action was put down on 27-11-1941.

[5] The defendants denied all the facts pleaded in the plaint and they denied the plaintiff's claim. They asserted that the mortgage deed and the consideration mentioned therein were genuine and that no fraud was practised by the defendants either on the plaintiff or on the Board. They opposed the plaintiff's claim on grounds of law including the ground of limitation No cause of action is alleged to have accrued in plaintiff's favour on 27-11-1941 and this date was said to be falsely put down to avoid the bar of limitation.

[6] The trial Court in an admirably clear and well reasoned judgment held that the mortgage debt was not bogus and that the plaintiff failed to establish the fraud alleged to have been practised by the defendants. According to the learned Judge the plaintiff knew of the mortgage and circumstances connected therewith soon after the execution of the mortgage in 1934 and the plaintiff's claim was therefore not within limitation. The plaintiff's suit was accordingly dismissed. The plaintiff appealed and on 11-8-1943 while the appeal was still pending, the defendant Laxman applied to the lower appellate Court that he had given up his right over the debt made payable under agreement before the Debt Conciliation Board and had already applied to the Debt Conciliation Board on 23-7-1943 to record satisfaction of the debt due to him under the agreement. He claimed to be discharged from the appeal.

[7] The appellate Court in its judgment dated 1-10-1943 reversed the findings of the trial Court and held that the mortgage in favour of Laxman was bogus and was brought into existence to practise fraud on the plaintiff and to defeat and delay the realisation of the decretal debt. It further held that the defendants practised a fraud on the plaintiff and the Board in putting forward a bogus debt and in securing on that basis the orders of the Board which but for the fraud it would not have passed. According to the learned Judge the certificate issued against the plaintiff and the agreement executed and registered were a nullity. On the point of limitation the learned Judge held that the plaintiff had knowledge of the fraud within three years of the date of suit and the suit was therefore within limitation. The plaintiff's claim was therefore decreed.

[8] It was pointed out at the outset by the learned counsel for respondent 1 that in view of Laxman's application dated 11-8-1943 to the lower appellate Court and the admissions contained therein about the giving up of his debt this appeal has no more than an academic interest. It was said that the agreement before the Board has ceased to subsist as instalments mentioned therein were not satisfied and the plaintiff was free to proceed to execute his decree against the attached property. The learned counsel for the appellant did not accept this view and argued the appeal on merits.

[9] It was contended by the appellant's counsel that the plaintiff's suit was barred by S. 47, Civil P. C., and also by res judicata either actual or at any rate constructive. This bar of S. 47, Civil P. C., was not raised before but was argued as a pure question of law. In my view the suit was not hit by S. 47 of the Code. There are two hurdles in the way of the immediate execution of the decree by the plaintiff : first, that is, the certificate under S. 15 is, however, inconsequential in the absence of an agreement under S. 12, Debt Conciliation Act, between the debtor and other creditors, the second, that is, the agreement which makes the debts due to two creditors payable by instalments is however the main obstacle to immediate execution. That obstacle cannot, however, be removed unless Laxman (respondent 2) is a party to the proceedings and Laxman cannot be a proper party as he was not a party to the decree or a representative of a party to the decree. Any dispute between the plaintiff and Laxman would fall beyond the scope of S. 47, Civil P C. It was contended on behalf of the plaintiff that the objection has no force as under S. 47 (2) of the Code the present suit could itself be treated as a proceeding under S. 47, if it was necessary. In view of what is stated above it is not necessary to examine this contention any further.

[10] There is also no force in the objection raised on the ground of res judicata or constructive res judicata. The invalidity of the certificate and the agreement was not actually raised in proceedings under S. 47, and there was no res judicata unless it was actually raised, tried and decided. The only question therefore is whether the question is barred on the ground of constructive res judicata. If the plaintiff's case be true he got knowledge of fraud invalidating the certificate and the agreement in 1941, i. e., long after the order dated 4-6-1937 in proceedings under S. 47. Where the facts on which a plea might have been raised were not within the knowledge of the party at the time of the former suit, it could not be said that he might have raised that plea : A. I. R. 1927 Nag. 83[1] at p. 84.

[11] It was thus necessary to examine and decide the plaintiff's plea regarding the alleged fraud on merits. While the trial Court held that the mortgage in favour of Laxman and the transactions ancillary thereto were genuine and for consideration, the learned Judge of the lower appellate Court, for reasons set out fully in his judgment, disagreed with this finding and held that all the transactions including mortgage itself were bogus and fraudulent. According to the learned Judge the whole thing was a fraud effected for the purpose of defeating and delaying the plaintiff. It is thus a finding of fact on which two careful Judges, after fully considering the evidence on record and drawing legitimate inferences therefrom, have differed. The least therefrom that can be said is that the evidence on record is so dubious or inconclusive that two contrary findings are possible. In these circumstances I cannot in this second appeal disbelieve the evidence believed by the learned lower appellate Court. It was quite possible that the same finding which was reached by the learned Judge of the lower appellate Court may have been reached by this Court on examination of evidence on record and the circumstances including the conduct of Laxman. The finding of the lower appellate Court on this point is accepted.

[12] The only question that remains to be considered now is the question of limitation. That question resolves itself into two parts, viz., the Article of the Limitation Act by which the suit is governed and the date from which the period of limitation is to be computed On the first part it was urged by the learned counsel of the respondent that the appropriate Article was Art. 120 and not Art. 95 as urged by the appellants. Article 95 is a special Article governing suits to set aside a decree obtained by fraud or any other relief on the ground of fraud. It is well established that a general Article, such as Art. 120 would not apply except in the absence of a special Article governing the case.

[13] It is not disputed in this case that the Debt Conciliation Board which entertained the application of the appellants for conciliation of their debts had initial jurisdiction to do so. No civil Court has a right to examine the orders passed, the debts settled or an agreement registered by the Debt Conciliation Board with jurisdiction except on the ground of fraud: 20 N. L. J. 57.[2] The agreement duly executed and registered under S. 12, Debt Conciliation Act, has the force of a decree. It is thus clear that the only ground on which the agreement having the force of a decree registered under s. 12 of the Act or other orders passed by the Board with initial jurisdiction can be set aside is the ground of fraud.

[14] The learned counsel for the respondent relied on several cases in support of his contention but they are, in my opinion, clearly distinguishable. In 3 Cal. 504[3] cited by the learned counsel it was pointed out that fraud in that case was merely a part of the machinery to bring about a particular result. It was not on the ground of fraud that the relief of possession was asked for. That was a suit by a reversioner for possession of property on the death of a Hindu with a life interest. The ground on which the relief was asked was the fact that he was a reversioner and was therefore entitled to possession. Fraud was alleged to remove an obstacle in his way, i. e., the revenue sale. Even on proving fraud he would not be entitled to the relief of possession if he was not a reversioner. This case was therefore held not to be governed by Art. 95 which governs a suit by a reversioner. In the same volume there is another case reported at p. 300[4] which is applicable to the present case. In that case the relief was founded on fraud. A cosharer filed a suit for reconveyance of the property on the ground that it was brought to sale by the other cosharer fraudulently and got purchased in the name of his son. It was held that for purposes of limitation, the suit was governed by Art. 95, Limitation Act. To the same effect is the decision in 34 Cal. 241.[5] In 25 Cal.

49[6] the relief was not based on fraud. The plaintiff sought a declaration that the sale in the defendant's name was benami and the suit was held governed by Art. 120, Limitation Act It was pointed out in 6 ALL. 406[7] at pp. 414, 415 that fraud vitiates everything and prevents application of the law of limitation. A suit for relief against the consequences of the fraud is therefore governed by a specific Art. 95, Limitation Act. It is therefore to my mind clear that the proper Article to govern the present suit is Art. 95 and not Art. 120, Limitation Act.

[15] The question which remains to be considered is the starting point of limitation. According to Art. 95, limitation starts when the fraud became known to the party wronged. It is a fundamental proposition of law of limitation that as long as the person is a subject of the fraud no time shall run against him. In England the cause of action arises when reasonable diligence discovered fraud but under the Limitation Act limitation does not begin to run before the date of actual knowledge. It is pointed out in 37 Cal. 81[8] at p. 85 that what is required for the limitation to start is actual knowledge and not merely suspicion. Moreover knowledge does not include means of knowledge and the fact of knowledge of fraud must be distinguished from the evidence in proof of fraud.

[16] It is further pointed out by their Lordships of the Privy Council in 17 Bom 341[9] that if fraud is established burden is on the defendant to show that it was known to the plaintiff beyond the period of limitation. That is also the view taken in 31 Mad. 230.[10] This burden can, however, in my opinion, be discharged by circumstantial evidence and by the statements and the conduct of the plaintiff.

[17] Though a person who is the subject of fraud is given sufficient latitude for the purposes of escaping from the consequences of his fraud, the law on the subject cannot be so construed as to leave it entirely to the sweet will of the plaintiff to claim a relief on the ground of fraud whenever he chooses. It was, however, urged that the time when the fraud became known to the plaintiff is a finding of fact. The lower appellate Court has, accepting the evidence of Tatyaji (P. W. 4), held that the fraud became known to the plaintiff in November 1941, i. e., within 3 years of the date of suit.

[18] The finding given by the lower appellate Court is in a way very halting. While accepting the evidence of Tatyaji, the learned Judge of the lower appellate Court felt obliged to remark that the facts stated by the witness are rather unusual. The learned Judge has not given reasons to accept such an unusual story. However it may be assumed that what Tatyaji deposed is true. He deposed:

"In November last casually defendants 1 and 2 told me that plaintiff's execution was struck off because they showed defendant 3's debts in the Debt Conciliation Board and got 40 per cent. amount . . over instalments by the Board. I told them that was not the good thing that they did. That execution of plaintiff was dismissed two days before this talk. I told this to plaintiff on the Maroti temple the same day in the afternoon.

The plaintiff had told me that defendants 1 and 2 had shown false debts before the Debt Conciliation Board to conceal his dues. The plaintiff told me one month before I learnt the same falsehood from the mouths of defendants 1 and 2. When I told plaintiff this falsehood he kept silent and said justice will be done."

[19] Thus according to this witness the plaintiff already had the knowledge of the falsehood i. e., regarding the bogus nature of Laxman's debt before that fact was admitted by defendants 1 and 2. He did not therefore add anything new to the plaintiff's knowledge. At best he furnished the plaintiff with a piece of evidence in the shape of the admission of defendants 1 and 2. On having learnt of this admission of the defendants from Tatyaji, Bapurao, the plaintiff's nephew, is said to have made some further inquiry but in that inquiry nothing had come out which was not known before.

[20] The fraud that is alleged in the present case is that the mortgage deed in favour of Laxman was bogus and that the mortgage debt, which in fact did not exist was fraudulently utilized to secure an agreement before the Debt Conciliation Board. It may be noted that defendants 1 and 2 i. e., the debtors, are related to the plaintiff, the sister of defendant 2 being married to the plaintiff Laxman, defendant 3 is also a relation as his sister is married to Baliram, defendant 2 about 15 years ago. The plaintiff admits that he knew Laxman since 15 years and it is difficult to believe that the plaintiff was not aware of the financial positions either of defendants 1 and 2 or of defendant 3 Laxman. The plaintiff as (P. W. 8), admits that he came to know of the mortgage about six months after its execution i. e., in 1934, and he surmised that it was a plan to deprive him and was meant as a device to defeat his claim. On 7-10-1936 he saw the indifference on Laxman's part inasmuch as he did not file any statement of his claim in response to the notice from the Debt Conciliation Board, did not produce the mortgage deed before the Board and did not care to be present at the hearing. Then the plaintiff must have noticed a collusion between defendants 1 and 2 and Laxman. Though Laxman did not care to have his mortgage debt revived the debtors agreed to the conciliation of the debt which had already stood discharged Then they noticed a very extraordinary conduct on the part of Laxman to agree to have his mortgage debt of Rs. 600 and interest reduced to Rs. 200 and to make it payable by annual instalments of Rs. 10. This agreement was executed and registered on 4-6-1937.

[21] Knowledge of a particular fact or an object is derived through one or more senses which a human being is gifted with. Knowledge of the object, if it is a tangible thing, may be derived by the sense of sight, of touch or by taste but fraud is not something tangible. The knowledge of fraud means therefore the knowledge of circumstances on which any reasonable man concludes that a fraud has been committed. It may be his conclusion or knowledge further corroborated by additional circumstances known by him subsequently. He cannot, however, say that he had no knowledge of fraud till the last piece of evidence came to light or till the persons committing the fraud admitted the same. The real test therefore is if in 1934 to 1937 the plaintiff knew facts and circumstances on which he as a reasonable man would have concluded that the fraud was practised on him by bringing into existence a bogus and a fraudulent mortgage deed. If the answer is in the affirmative then the fraud was known to the plaintiff in 1936-37 though he may have further learnt of the admissions of defendants in 1941. The difference between a suspicion and a knowledge is the difference in the degree of certainty which a person feels specially when the knowledge relates to something intangible and is necessarily based on inferences. In my opinion, the fraud was known to the plaintiff by June 1937 and the period of limitation started from that date at the latest. The plaintiff's suit being not filed within 3 years of that date is barred by limitation.

[22] The appeal is allowed with costs. The judgment of the lower appellate Court is set aside and that of the first Court dismissing the plaintiff's suit is restored.

GRILLE C. J. AND PADHYE J.

Bhimasingh Kishorsingh—Defendant 1—Appellant v. Fakirchand Nandlal and others—Defendants 2 to 21 — Respondents.

First Appeal No. 85 of 1940, Decided on 30th January 1947, from decree of Addl. Dist. Judge, Khandwa, D/- 27th April 1940.

(a) Evidence Act (1872), S. 68, Proviso—Specific denial—What amounts to.

A statement by the defendant that he is not aware of the mortgage deed in suit and that the execution, attestation and consideration of the mortgage are therefore denied, does not amount to a specific denial within the meaning of Proviso to S. 68 when it is nowhere specifically denied that it was signed by the person by whom it purports to have been signed. Hence, the examination of the attesting witness in such a case is not necessary under S. 68 : 15 A. I. R. 1928 Bom. 267, Rel. on. [Para 7]

(b) Transfer of Property Act (1882), S. 3—Attestation—Validity of.

Where the executant signed in the presence of the two attesting witnesses and the witnesses signed in the presence of each other and there was nothing to show that execution and attestation was not done in the same sitting it was held that there was valid attestation as the witnesses must be deemed to have signed the document in the presence of the executant. [Para 9]

(c) Hindu law—Custom—Mitakshara joint family—Family custom of impartibility and inalienability of estate pleaded — Burden of proof — Nature of evidence.

The property of a joint Hindu family governed by Mitakshara is not impartible and the father can alienate it for the satisfaction of his antecedent debts not tainted with illegality or immorality or for legal necessity of the family or the benefit of the estate One who pleads against the ordinary law, that the property is impartible and inalienable on the strength of a family custom, has a heavy burden to discharge. Where a family custom (kulachar) as opposed to a local or a torritorial custom (Deshachar) is pleaded, the onus of establishing it is specially heavy and more difficult to discharge. Instances may not be absolutely necessary to establish custom but they furnish the best and most reliable evidence in proof of custom. To prove a family custom of a particular family instances from other families are not relevant unless the closest possible analogy between these families is established. Though there is a greater latitude in admission of evidence in proof of an ancient custom and even hearsay evidence is to a certain extent admissible, still the evidence must, before it is admitted in proof of a custom, conform to certain well established principles incorporated within the relevant provisions of the Evidence Act : Case law referred. [Paras 14 and 15]

(d) Hindu law—Impartible estates — Succession to property governed by rule of primogeniture—Power of holder to alienate property

Where property is descendible by rule of primogeniture the holder of the property is the absolute owner thereof and even if such property be joint Hindu family property governed by the Mitakshara the son or the sons of the holder have no vested interest in it. The absence of vested interest by other coparceners and consequently the absence of power to demand a partition empowers the holder for the time being to alienate the property in any manner he likes including an alienation by way of mortgage : 10 All. 272 (P. C.) and 21 A. I. R. 1934 P. C. 157, Rel. on. [Para 18]

(e) Hindu law—Impartible estates—Custom as to inalienability Proof of.

The absence of evidence of an alienation without any evidence of facts which would make it probable that an alienation would have been made cannot be accepted as proof of a custom of inalienability : 10 All. 272 (P. C.) and 14 A. I. R. 1927 P. C 159, Foll. [Para 19]

(f) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 41, R. 27—Power of appellate Court to admit document rejected by trial Court on ground of late production.

Where the trial Court in the exercise of its judicial discretion refuses to admit a document in evidence on the ground of its late production, the appellate Court will not interfere with such discretion and admit the document in evidence unless there is sufficient ground to do so. [Para 20]

Annotation : ('44-Com.) C. P. C., O. 41, R. 27, N. 3 Pt. 2.

(g) Grant—Crown grant — Incidents of property to be determined with reference to last grant.

Where a person holds property under a grant from British Government in 1865, the incidents of the property should be determined with reference to the terms of that grant. It is not open to such person to rely upon a previous grant from Moghul Emperor as the foundation for the right of inalienability of the property. The British Government as a conqueror was not bound by the grants made by the conquered though it may respect the same with such variations as may be deemed proper: 34 A. I. R. 1947 P. C. 1, Rel. on. [Para 21]

(h) Custom—Discontinuance of—Proof as to.

Though the burden of proving discontinuance of a custom is on the person who pleads it, slight evidence may be sufficient to discharge that burden, if other circumstances and the conduct of the members of the family which relies on that custom are consistent only with the discontinuance of the custom: 27 All. 203, Rel. on. Thus instances of alienations of the property and acts which are inconsistent with a custom of inalienability will lead to the inference that the custom of inalienability was discontinued. S. C. Dube and A. Razak — for Appellant.

M. R. Bobde and K. G. Chendke—for Respondents.

Judgment. — The action out of which this appeal has arisen was brought by Seth Nandlal and Seth Mojilal, now deceased and represented by Champalal son of Seth Mojilal, respondent 1, for enforcement of a mortgage dated 12th October 1928 (EX. P-14) executed in their favour by Rao Kishoresingh, mortgaging thereunder full proprietary rights in mauza Selda which he held in maufi rights. It is common ground that on Rao Kishoresingh's death in 1930, this village along with other property passed to the appellant, Ram Bhimsingh by right of primogeniture. Out of 21 defendants in the suit, Ram Bhimsingh who was defendant 1 was the only contesting defendant; the other defendants being aliendes from Ram Kishoresingh or their legal representatives supported the plaintiffs on the main point in contest.

[2] It is not disputed that the property in Rao Kishoresingh's family passed by the rule of primogeniture and in fact the point is settled by the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council reported in 15 N. L. R. 176.[1] The grounds on which defendant 1 opposed the present suit were briefly as follows: (a) That the mortgaged property, mauza Selda was a part of the Bhamgarh Estate which was the ancestral property in the hands of Rao Kishoresingh and this estate was impartible and inalienable by virtue of the original grant as well as by the ancient family custom of the mortgagor's family. (b) The alleged consideration of the mortgage in suit was a personal debt of Rao Kishoresingh and was not binding on the property in the hands of the defendant, who got it by right of primogeniture. It was also averred that the mortgage was not justified by legal necessity as the mortgagor had no necessity to borrow having in his hands sufficient funds from income from the property and from Government pension. (c) That the defendant was not aware of the fact of the mortgage and he therefore denied the execution, attestation and consideration of the mortgage in suit.

[3] The plaintiffs, in their replication, denied the defence completely, including the alleged inalienable character of the property. The alleged grant and also the family custom were denied and it was properly complained that the defence in that respect was very vague. In reply, defendant 1 in his oral statement dated 15th November 1938 averred that the Bhamgarh Estate was in the defendant's family from time immemorial and so far as tracable from Government record at least from the time of the Moghul Emperors, though the defendant has in his possession no sanad or any other document in evidence of the grant from the Moghul Emperors. The defendant asserted that the property was inalienable on account of the lost grant as well as the family custom of inalienability and he mentioned in his oral statement dated 16th December 1938 three judicial decisions in which the unsecured debt of the holder of the property was held not realizable from the estate after it passed into the hands of the successor. In the defendant's oral statement recorded on 4th January 1939 he admitted that in 1865 a sanad relating to this property was granted by the Government of India (British Government) to Rao Daulatsingh, the defendant's predecessor, granting full power of alienation by gift, sale, adoption or otherwise. It was, however, contended that this could not affect the pre-existing family custom against alienability. The plaintiffs, on the other hand, pleaded alternatively that even if there was any custom as alleged it ceased to exist after the grant of 1865 and also by the conduct of Rao Kishoresingh, the mortgagor.

[4] The learned Judge of the lower Court, after a careful survey and a correct appreciation of the oral and documentary evidence on record, held that the mortgage deed in suit was duly executed and attested and it was for a valid and binding consideration and was justified even on the ground of legal necessity. It was further held that the Bhamgarh Estate was not inalienable by virtue of the grant or family custom and no such grant and family custom were established, The claim of the plaintiffs was decreed in full.

[5] Defendant 1 (Rao Bhimsingh) has alone preferred an appeal against the decree of the lower Court and has reiterated the grounds raised by way of defence in the lower Court. The learned counsel for the appellant argued before us two points, first, that the due attestation of the mortgage deed in suit was not proved, and second, that the property mortgaged was inalienable and therefore the mortgage was void and inoperative in law.

[6] On the point of attestation we are in complete agreement with the finding of the first Court and we did not, therefore feel the necessity of calling upon the respondents to answer.

[7] The present definition of the term 'attested' as contained in S. 3, T P. Act, with the exception of words 'and shall be deemed always to have meant' was enacted by Act 27 [XXVII] of 1926 and the words noted above were added by Act 10 [X] of 1927 with a view to clarify that the definition had a retrospective effect. By Act 31 [XXXI] of 1926 a proviso was added to S. 68, Evidence Act, according to which the examination of an attesting witness in proof of the execution of a registered mortgage deed was not necessary unless the execution thereof by the person by whom it purports to have been executed was specifically denied. As held in 52 Bom. 219[2] a statement that the defendant had no knowledge of the mortgage bond does not constitute a specific denial. In para. 3 of the written statement filed by defendant 1 (appellant) in the present case, he stated that he was not aware of the fact of the mortgage in suit and the execution, attestation and consideration of the mortgage were therefore denied. It was nowhere specifically denied that it was signed by Rao Kishoresingh or that the signature appearing on the deed as the executant was not his. The plea would not therefore amount, within the meaning of the proviso to S. 68, Evidence Act, to specific denial and the examination of an attesting witness was not necessary. The document could be legally proved by examining any witness who could depose to its execution such as Maujilal (P. W. 3), one of the plaintiffs in the present case. We need not, however, pursue this matter further as we do not rest our judgment on this narrow basis.

[8] The document bears the signature of two persons, viz., Balmukund and Amritrao as witnesses and they are examined as P. W. 9 and P. W. 10 respectively. In these provinces the witnesses depose usually in Hindi or in Marathi and it is translated and recorded in brief by the Judge in English. The deposition as recorded is not therefore a verbatim report of what the witness deposed. The deposition of Balmukund (P. W. 9) as recorded is, 'This (i. e., the mortgage deed dated 12th October 1928) was attested by me and executed by Rao Kishoresingh in my presence. Amritlal also attested in my presence.' Similarly, the deposition of Amritrao (P. W. 10) is 'I attested it (i. e., the mortgage deed dated 12th October 1929) and it was executed by Kishoresingh in my presence.' An experienced Judge who recorded these depositions would not have used the word 'attested' unless he was satisfied that what was deposed to by the witnesses satisfied the requirements of attestation as defined by S. 3, T. P. Act. The depositions of these witnesses, which are not challenged by way of cross-examination on this point, leave no manner of doubt that the deed was executed and attested at the same sitting; the witnesses saw the executant sign and they in their turn signed in presence of the executant. We examined for ourselves the original document and we are satisfied that the document appeared to have been scribed, executed and attested with the same ink and there was nothing on the face of the document negativing the presumption of due attestation permissible in law according to the well-known maxim 'omnia præsumuntur rite et solenniter esse acta donec probetur in contrarium': vide 2 N. L. R. 10[3] and 26 N. L. R. 277[4] at p. 281.

[9] The learned counsel for the appellant contended that the evidence on record did not establish that the two attesting witnesses put their signatures in the presence of the executant and he relied on A. I. R. 1939 P. C. 117=I.L.R (1939) Kar. 222.[5] We do not agree. It is true that no direct question on this point was put to the witnesses. But when it is positively deposed that the executant signed in the presence of the two attesting witnesses and the witnesses signed in the presence of each other and there is no suggestion that the execution and attestation was not done at the same sitting it is almost certain that the witnesses signed the document in the presence of the executant. The Privy Council decision relied on by the learned counsel is distinguishable as there the fact of due attestation was sought to be proved on the strength of the proceedings relating to registration including the signatures of the two identifying witnesses Their Lordships duly pointed out that the particulars endorsed on documents under S 58, Registration Act, did not include facts necessary for proving due attestation of the deed and the fact that the witnesses are present before the registrar for the purpose of identification only.

[10] We therefore hold, agreeing with the lower Court, that the mortgage deed in suit was duly attested.

[11] The question which next calls for consideration is the alleged inalienability of the property and the invalidity of the mortgage in suit on that account. The appellants are at a disadvantage in this matter as in the first litigation regarding Bhamgarh Estate when ended with the decision of the Judicial Committee reported in 15 N. L. R 176[1] it was remarked by their Lordships that no restraint on alienation was imposed in other respects by this custom, i. e., by the special family custom pleaded in that case. The second litigation which ended with the decision of the Judicial Committee reported in 25 N. L. R. 121[6] was for specific performance of the agreement dated 11th November 1912 whereunder Rao Kishoresingh agreed to sell mauza Khedi, one of the villages forming part of Bhamgarh Estate. In this litigation, the custom of inalienability, though highly relevant, was not pleaded and their Lordships of the Privy Council passed a decree for specific performance, though in view of the finding that compensation in money was an adequate relief as contemplated under Ss. 12 (c) and 21 (a), Specific Relief Act, the relief actually granted was for payment of Rs. 20,000 as compensation. This decision was not possible if the property was inalienable and the agreement was void on that account. The Divisional Bench of this Court in I. L. R. (1941) Nag. 632[7] held that the Bhamgarh Estate was not inalienable and the family custom pleaded in that respect was not established; it is said that an appeal against this decision is pending before the Judicial Committee. In Miscellaneous Judicial Case No. 17 of 1934 (Ex. P-16) and Miscellaneous Judicial Case No. 24 of 1934 (Ex. P-29) the custom of inalienability pleaded by the present appellant was not established.

[12] The defendant's plea that the property was inalienable by virtue of a grant by the Moghul Emperor as well as by ancient family custom lacks in clarity and in precision. As to precision, the appellant has not given the time and the occasion of the alleged grant or the particular Emperor who gave it though in one of his previous statements (Ex P-15) the appellant stated that he was informed by his father that the estate was given to their family by Muhammad Ghori. No sanad or a writing is produced in evidence of this alleged grant and the appellant admitted that he had none in his possession or to his knowledge. As to clarity, the defendant has not pleaded that a family custom existed at the time of the alleged grant and was merely recognized thereby. If inalienability was based on the particular tenure that was granted then there is no scope for a family custom. The conduct of the family in confirmation of the tenure granted should not be confounded with a custom of inalienability which pre-supposes an absence of a grant or contract.

[13] Let us, however, assume that what was meant to be pleaded was an ancient family custom subsequently confirmed by the alleged Moghul grant which is the most favourable interpretation for the appellant, though it is argued by the learned counsel for the respondent that the plea as actually taken destroys itself. It is, however, to be noted at this stage that, according to the appellant's plea, impartibility and inalienability are based on one and the same custom. This may be possible but inalienability is not a necessary concomitant or a necessary result of impartibility. It is so held in several cases but it may be sufficient to refer to the decision in 13 Beng. L. R. 445[8] which was noted with approval by their Lordships of the Privy Council in 10 ALL. 272[9] at p. 288 where their Lordships observed thus:

"It had been previously held by the same Court in a case in 13 Beng. L. R. 445,[8] where the plaintiff alleged that the descent of the estate was governed by Mitakshara law, and that by the usage and custom of the family the estate was impartible and descendible according to the law of primogeniture on the male heirs of the original grantee, the estate was not on the case stated shown to be inalienable. Their Lordships think this is the correct view."

Their Lordships further observed

"the inalienability of the estate depends upon custom, which must be proved, or it may be in some cases, upon the nature of the tenure."

[14] It is admitted by the appellant that he and his father were members of a joint Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara and the family was governed by that law except to the extent to which it was abrogated by the family custom. It has also been held in A.I.R 1923 Mad. 402[10] on a review of the entire case law on the subject that the succession to an impartible estate is governed by the rule of survivorship if it is joint family property and by the rule of inheritance if it is a separate property. It was so held in the well-known decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council known as the 'Shivaganga case' reported in 9 M. I. A 66[11] and which was followed in numerous cases. The property of a joint Hindu family governed by Mitakshara is not impartible and the father can alienate it for the satisfaction of his antecedent debts not tainted with illegality or immorality or for legal necessity of the family or the benefit of the estate. One who pleads against the ordinary law, such as the appellant does in the present case on the strength of the alleged family custom, has a heavy burden to discharge. It was observed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in 3 I. A. 259[12] that a custom must be ancient, certain and reasonable and has to be construed strictly A custom cannot be enlarged beyond what is established by parity of reasoning. It is easier to prove a custom supplementing the law but the onus is necessarily heavy where a family custom is pleaded in derogation of the prevailing law as was observed by the Judicial Committee in 24 ALL. 273[13] where a family custom was sought to be established by relying on four instances of a comparatively modern date. Their Lordships of the Privy Council observed :

"It is obvious that a family custom in derogation of the ordinary law cannot be supported on so slender a foundation."

[15] The custom that is pleaded by the appellant is a family custom (Kulachar) as opposed to a local or a territorial custom (Deshachar). The onus of establishing a family custom is specially heavy and more difficult to discharge. Instances may not be absolutely necessary to establish custom but they furnish the best and most reliable evidence in proof of custom. To prove a family custom of a particular family instances from other families are not relevant unless the closest possible analogy between these families is established. Though there is a greater latitude in admission of evidence in proof of an ancient custom and even hearsay evidence is to a certain extent admissible, still the evidence must, before it is admitted in proof of a custom, conform to certain well established principles incorporated within the relevant provisions of the Evidence Act.

[16] Before we enter into the actual proof of the alleged custom, it is necessary to note the previous history of the family as can be gathered from the Settlement Report of Captain Forsyth published in 1870. Rajputs, the ancestors of the appellant, are said to have come from the north and they occupied the central Nimar some 20 generations ago. About 3 or 4 centuries prior to the Muhammadan conquest of Nimar, the Bilala families to which the appellant belongs, subdued Bhils and established themselves as chiefs. As they had amongst them an institution of a 'Gaddi' the succession to the property was by primogeniture. After the Mahomedan conquest these chiefs were deprived of whatever royal powers they had and they or at least some of them were constituted 'Zemedars' or fiscal officers and they were allowed to retain villages in their possession. It also appears that the Rajput families were given grants in lieu of military services which they were expected to render to the Muhammadan conquerors: vide para. 115 at page 58 of the Report. The exact character and nature of the estate and the tenure under which the property was held by these families under the Mahomedan rule is left in obscurity. There is no evidence in this case, either oral or documentary, which throws light on this point except the preamble to the sanad granted by the British Government on 18-12-1865. The preamble runs thus:

"Whereas you formerly held the office of Zamidar as a Pargana-officer in the District of Nimar enjoyed certain allowances by way of Zirat, Jagheer, and cash percentages and whereas the services you rendered in that office will not in future be required by the Government .... etc."

[17] It is thus clear that the ancestors of the appellant were, under the Mahomedan rule, pargana officers and they were remunerated for their services in the shape of certain allowances and concessions.

[18] It is apparent that the institution of a 'gaddi' necessarily requires a holder of a 'gaddi' and he is called 'Gaddi-Nashin'. As only one person can be 'Gaddi-Nashin' at a time, the succession to the 'gaddi' is according to the rule of primogeniture. It does not, however, follow that the estate held by the 'Gaddi-Nashin' or the holder of the 'gaddi' must be inalienable. In fact, the Emperors and Kings in ancient times, both Hindus and Mahomedans, were freely making grants of property in favour of religious institutions and even in favour of persons either in lieu of services rendered or otherwise. The property in their hands was thus not inalienable. It is well established that where property is descendible by rule of primogeniture the holder of the property is the absolute owner thereof and even if such property be joint Hindu family property governed by the Mitakshara the son or the sons of the holder have no vested interest in

it. In 10 ALL. 272[9] the validity of a gift deed executed by the father in a Mitakshara joint Hindu family who had succeeded to the property under a rule of primogeniture was challenged. It was prima facie invalid under the school of Hindu law by which the family was governed. It was however held valid by their Lordships of the Privy Council because as a result of the custom of primogeniture even the eldest son of the holder of the property had no vested interest in the property and was not a co-sharer in it along with his father and consequently the father had an absolute right to dispose of the property by transfer inter vivos or by a will. This decision was no doubt criticized by Golapchandra Sirkar in his book on Hindu Law and by others as well. It is however binding on us and as was observed by their Lordships of the Privy Council very recently in 56 ALL 468[15] the view taken in that case has been in force so long that it cannot now be disturbed. The inalienability (save for a proper cause) of a joint family property is founded on the interest which other coparceners have in the property and which they can enforce by a partition at any time they choose. The absence of vested interest by other coparceners and consequently the absence of power to demand a partition empowers the holder for the time being to alienate the property in any manner he likes. The learned counsel for the appellant tried to distinguish the case of a mortgage from other testamentary and non-testamentary alienations but we do not see any force in that distinction.

[19] Let us consider one more argument of the learned counsel for the appellant at this stage. According to him the custom of inalienability should be presumed from the very fact that the property in the family was not alienated by the holders prior to Rao Kishoresingh and that it was retained in the family for some centuries past. There is no evidence on record of transactions or alienations, if any, prior to 1865 and it is hazardous to speak definitely one way or the other on this point. The law on the subject is however clear. Their Lordships of the Privy Council observed in 10 ALL. 272[9] at p. 289 that the absence of evidence of an alienation without any evidence of facts which would make it probable that an alienation would have been made cannot be accepted as proof of a custom of inalienability. This is what was again observed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in 54 Cal. 955.[15]

[20] The plaintiffs attempted to place on record a certified copy of the mortgage deed dated 11th February 1886 by Rao Ramsingji, the holder of the Bhamgarh Gaddi but it was not admitted by the lower Court on the ground that it was filed late. The document has been again produced in this Court and it is prayed that it should be admitted into evidence under O. 41, R. 27, Civil P. C. In our opinion, it was the duty of the plaintiffs when they had to meet a case of inalienability to search at the very initial stage of litigation the public records and particularly the Registration department to find out alienations of property by the defendant's ancestors. We are not satisfied that the late production of the document was justified and in any case we see no sufficient ground to interfere with the discretion exercised by the lower Court judicially. We have, however, on record documents showing alienations by Rao Kishoresingh from 1923. These documents are EXS. P-25, P-24, P-23, P-22, P-21, P-20 and P-19. These are sales of malik makbuza and maufi lands in villages appertaining to the Bhamgarh Estate. Further Rao Kishoresingh mortgaged one of the malguzari villages on 12th April 1927 and thereafter the entire property consisting of maufi and malguzari villages in the Bhamgarh Estate was mortgaged by Rao Kishoresingh and the appellant on 17th April 1929. It was primarily to satisfy the debt due on the mortgage dated 12th April 1927 that Rao Kishoresingh executed the mortgage deed in suit on 12th October 1928. The appellant explained his association in the execution of the mortgage deed dated 17th April 1929 on the ground that it was due to undue pressure of his father. We do not find much substance in the explanation. The appellant applied on 8th February 1930 to an executing Court (vide EX. P-17) for extension of time to satisfy the decree on the ground that he was raising funds by alienating his property. It is thus clear that not only Rao Kishoresingh but even the appellant regarded the property as alienable. The learned counsel for the appellant attempted for the first time before us to restrict the custom of inalienability only to villages held in maufi rights, thereby suggesting that the transfers of malguzari villages and malik makbuza lands did not offend against the custom of inalienability. The plea of the defendant was that the Bhamgarh Estate was inalienable. This estate as has been deposed to by Sujatkhan (D. W. 4) and Ramchandrarao (D. W. 9) consisted of three maufi villages, four malguzari villages and lands. The learned counsel cannot be permitted to narrow down or extend the scope of the custom as pleaded. Besides the above alienation, Rao Kishoresingh alienated village Malegaon as deposed to by Haji Abdulji (D. W. 1) and Sahib Mahtabsingh (D. W. 2). This village, according to the evidence on record, formed part of the Bhamgarh Estate but was given for maintenance to the junior branch of the family i. e. to Thakur Shersingh, Rao Kishoresingh's paternal grand-father (vide genealogical table of the family in the Privy Council case 15 N. L. R. 176[1] at p. 178). If the custom of inalienability existed in the family this village as well was inalienable. The three judicial orders mentioned by the appellant in his pleadings, at p 4 of the record are not relevant. In those orders it was held in execution proceedings that a debt of the holder of the 'Gaddi' cannot be realized from estate attached to the 'Gaddi' after it passed into the hands of the successor by right of primogeniture. These were cases of unsecured debts and have to be distinguished from cases of alienations. The debts are not binding as the holder of the property for the time being does not at his death leave the property attached to the 'Gaddi' as his assets and his successor takes that property in his own right and not as a legal representative of the holder (the deceased). Thus, there is no judicial decision in which the family custom of inalienability has been found in the appellant's favour. It appears from Ex. P-23 that the applicant applied to the Debt Conciliation Board in 1935-36 and agreed to alienate malik makbuza lands in mauza Mundi in satisfaction of his debts due to a creditor, Gulabchanda Manikchanda.

[21] The sanad granted by the Government of India (Ex 1-P-(A)) on 18th December 1865 appears from its recitals to be a fresh grant with fresh conditions and not a mere recognition or a renewal of the grant, whatever and wherever it may be, by a Moghul Emperor. This fresh grant was accepted by the appellant's ancestor in substitution of whatever allowances and concessions were enjoyed by him from the Moghul period. The power of alienation mentioned in this sanad may be due either to the fact that the property was alienable from 1865 or to the decision of the Government of India to grant the property with power of alienation. In either case it is quite clear from the sanad that after 1865 the Bhamgarh Estate was not inalienable and the subsequent conduct of Rao Kishoresingh and of the appellant is consistent with this position. It is remarked in Captain Forsyth's report, p 143, that quit-rent was imposed in view of the free-hold tenure being made transferable. The British Government, as a conqueror was not bound by the grants made or allowances given by the conquered (vide A I R 1947 P. C. 1[16]) though the conqueror may respect the same with such variations as may be deemed proper The special tenure with an incident of inalienability if created by a Moghul grant must come to an end with the termination of that grant and the incidents attached to the property now are those which are granted by the last grant, which in this case was the grant by the Government of India on 18th December 1865. The appellant cannot, therefore, rely on the alleged grant by a Moghul Emperor as the foundation for the right of inalienability claimed by him. It is however clear, as held by their Lordships of the Privy Council in 15 N. L. R. 176[1] that neither the alleged Moghul grant nor the sanad of the Government of India would destroy the family custom of the appellant's family if it existed before these grants We have, therefore, to find out from the evidence on record if family custom in favour of inalienability before the Moghul grant is established.

[22] There is no documentary evidence on record in favour of the custom pleaded and even the report of Captain Forsyth does not speak of the existence of a custom in pre-Moghul times. Sir Reginal Craddock in his note on the status of zamindars in the Central Provinces expressed an opinion in 1889:

"It must at once be conceded that these zamindars never had any transferable rights in their estate until they were given proprietary rights."

He was speaking of Bhandara, Balaghat and Raipur zamindars. Even assuming that the same applied to Nimar zamindars – there is no basis for this assumption it does not take us very far. In the first place, we have not been told the evidence on which this opinion is based, and secondly much evidentiary value cannot be attached to the opinion expressed in these reports, however eminent the author of the report may be: vide 24 N L. R 25.[7] It may be, as observed in I. L. R. (1941) Nag 632[7] at page 641, that impartibility and inalienability are often so closely associated that a young officer, as Sir Reginal Craddock was in 1889, considered that what was impartible was also inalienable. This opinion does not more over support the appellant as even according to it, the Bhamgarh Estate of the appellant would be alienable at least after 1865 We concur in what was observed by the Divisional Bench of this Court at p. 644 in I. L. R (1941) Nag. 632[7]:

"Further in this case we have the grant This grant (Ex D-9 shows that Rao Doulat Singh in 1865 was given a quit-rent tenure with full power of alienation. We are not disposed in this case to restrict the rights of this family to those conferred by this Sannad. We are prepared to assume that if we looked behind it to the ancient rights we should find something different from a quit-rent holding. We should find a joint Hindu family with an impartible estate devolving by a custom of primogeniture. But we can find nothing to show that this estate was inalienable. On the contrary for many years past the person in enjoyment has alienated."

[23] The oral evidence on record, even if accepted, does not establish the custom of inalienability either before or after the alleged grant by a Moghul Emperor. (After discussing the oral evidence with regard to the custom of inalienability their Lordships proceeded as follows.)

[24] The family custom, unlike local custom, can also be put an end to This was pointed out by their Lordships of the Privy Council in

1 Cal. 186.[18] It was held in 27 ALL. 203[19] that though the burden of proving discontinuance of a custom is on the person who pleads it, slight evidence may be sufficient to discharge that burden, if other circumstances and the conduct of the members of the family which relies on that custom are consistent only with the discontinuance of the custom. In the present case, proprietary right with power of alienation was granted in 1865 and accepted by the appellant's ancestor. Thereafter the appellant's father and the appellant himself alienated several items of property and did acts which are inconsistent with inalienability of the family property. Thus it is proper to infer that the custom of inalienability was discontinued at least from 1865.

[25] The mortgage deed in suit was for a consideration of Rs. 6500 of which Rs. 4354-15-3 were due on a prior mortgage bond dated 13th April 1927 for Rs. 3500 and Rs. 2145-0-9 were required for the expenses of litigation in connection with the estate. The mortgage deed of 13th April 1927 for Rs. 3500 was executed for the discharge of an antecedent liability of Rao Kishoresingh due to Abbas Ali Bohara who had assigned the same in favour of the mortgagees. Thus, out of Rs. 6500 Rs. 4354 15-3 were due on account of the antecedent debt of Rao Kishoresingh and, according to the Mitakshara School of Hindu law, would be binding on his son, even apart from the question of legal necessity. Maujilal (P. W. 3), one of the mortgagees, has deposed to the bona fide enquiry made by him as to the needs of Rao Kishoresingh and of his being reasonably satisfied that Rao Kishoresingh was in need of Rs. 2145 for the purpose of litigation It is clear from this record that Rao Kishoresingh had to fight out very costly litigations to acquire and preserve the Bhamgarh estate and he succeeded in doing so. He had naturally to incur heavy costs and had to borrow money for the litigations. The mortgagee was satisfied on bona fide enquiry that Rao Kishoresingh's representations regarding his needs were true. He was not bound to see to the application of the money borrowed. In these circumstances the mortgage debt would be binding on the appellant, assuming that he had succeeded to the estate under ordinary Hindu law by right of survivorship. As the property was governed by the custom of primogeniture the right of Rao Kishoresingh to mortgage the property was absolute and his son, the appellant, has no right to challenge the same.

[26] Our conclusions therefore are: (i) That the mortgage deed sued upon was duly executed and attested (ii) That the defendant failed to establish that the Bhamgarh estate was inalienable as a result of a grant from a Moghul Emperor. No such grant is established; at any rate, it is not established that the property was inalienable according to the tenure granted. (iii) It is not established that the property was inalienable as a result of an ancient family custom. No such custom is established either before the alleged grant by a Moghul Emperor or thereafter. (iv) That the plea of inalienability as a result of tenure granted, if any, by the Moghul Emperor is not available to the appellant as the result of a fresh grant by the British Government in 1865 with power of alienation. (v) That the custom of inalienability, assuming that it ever existed in the appellant's family, was discontinued or put an end to in 1865 and it did not exist thereafter. (vi) That the mortgage was binding against the appellant on the ground that the debt was partly for the antecedent debt of the father and partly for legal necessity; the mortgagee having satisfied himself about the same on reasonable and bona fide enquiry. (vii) As a result of the custom of primogeniture Rao Kishoresingh had an absolute right to mortgage the property and that right was not liable to be challenged by the appellant in the same manner as a joint Hindu son could do, if the property mortgaged was ancestral or joint family property

[27] None of the other grounds raised in the memorandum of appeal were urged before us. They were either expressly or impliedly abandoned. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Misc. Appeal No. 168 of 1941, Decided on 3-12-1946, from order of Addl. Dist. Judge, Hoshangabad, D/- 29-1-1941.

(a) Evidence Act (1872), S. 65 — Award, filing of — Whether original should be filed — Original on record of office of Gwalior High Court — Rules not permitting removal - Secondary evidence is admissible — Copy of original signed by sarpanch who had signed original and authenticated by production of certified copy from Gwalior State can be filed —Civil P. C. (1908), Sch. 2, Para 21.

In the ordinary way an application for filing an award cannot be entertained if it is based on a copy. There are, however, exceptions to this, one of them being when the original cannot be obtained, or has been lost or destroyed Where the original was signed by a Judge of the Gwalior High Court who was the sarpanch and according to the State laws, the original had to be maintained on the files of the High Court Office and all that the parties were entitled to get was a copy of the original :

Held that S. 65, Evidence Act, was called into play and it was permissible for the Court to proceed upon secondary evidence consisting of a copy of the original signed by the sarpanch who had signed the original and authenticated by a certified copy of the original. [Paras 8 and 9]

Annotation ('46-Man.), Evidence Act S. 65 N. 5.

(b) Civil P. C. (1908), Sch. II Paras 21 and 10—Parties agreeing to accept unanimous award of panchas or in case of difference that of sarpanch—Award by sarpanch and signed by him alone on difference between panchas—Validity.

Where by the terms of reference to arbitration (without intervention of Court) the parties have agreed to abide by the unanimous award of the panchas or in case of difference of opinion between them, by the award given by the sarpanch, the award by sarpanch and signed by him alone, in case of a difference of opinion between the panchas is not invalid. [Para 13]

Even if the clause referred to above had not been there in the agreement the sarpanch would have authority to decide because of the difference of opinion between the arbitrators. In any event the majority view would prevail, and the sarpanch having agreed with the views of two of the four panchas on the disputed issue there would be a majority opinion in favour of the matter enunciated in the award. [Para 14]

But in the case of the latter position the award signed by the sarpanch for himself and on behalf of the other two would be invalid, if the arbitration is with the intervention of the Court. But in arbitration without the intervention of the Court this can be done : 19 A.I.R. 1932 Pat. 60, Rel. on. [Para 15]

(c) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 100 — Question of fact—Withdrawal of arbitrators, whether before or after conclusion of arbitration — Question of effect of withdrawal.

The question whether the withdrawal of some of the arbitrators from arbitration was before or after the conclusion of thearbitration is a question of fact. What the effect of withdrawal would be if it is before the conclusion of the arbitration, is a matter of law. [Para 21]

Annotation : ('44-Com.) Civil P. C. Ss. 100 and 101 Notes 30 and 51.

(d) Civil P. C. (1908), Sch. II Paras. 21 and 10—Withdrawal of arbitrators after conclusion of arbitration—Validity of award.

Where by the agreement of reference parties agree to abide by the unanimous decision of the panchas or in case of the difference of opinion between them by the award of the sarpanch, withdrawal of some of the panchas after recording their difference of opinion, and disagreement on the question of award does not invalidate the award by the sarpanch given after their withdrawal, the withdrawal being after the conclusion of the arbitration in accordance with the terms of the reference but before the award was made. [Para 23]

(e) Civil P. C. (1908), Sch. II, Paras. 21, 14 (a)—Award held not exceeded scope of reference.

The relevant clause in the agreement of reference relating to the question of maintenance was as follows :

"We hereby authorize them to take the action of partitioning the properties after examining accounts and hearing pleadings of the parties and after taking into consideration the orders passed by late Huzur Anver Saheb dated 22-4-1924 and the Supreme Council of the Gwalior State dated 4-8-1926 and 1934."

The law of the Gwalior State and orders referred to precluded the plaintiff from obtaining any maintenance out of the Jahagir property in the event of a partition between the two parties :

Held, that the only point of making such a reference was to enable the arbitrators to take the inequality which would result from that into consideration and make a fair partition by giving the plaintiff compensation from the rest of the property. In other words, it only means that the arbitrators were asked to make a fair partition taking that into consideration and, therefore, compensating the plaintiff for the fact that the defendant would receive not only the lion's share of the Jahagir estate but all of it. Accordingly the question of maintenance did fall within the terms of the reference and that, therefore, the arbitrator had authority to deal with the matter. [Paras 25 and 26]

(f) Civil P. C. (1908), Sch. II, Para 21—Court cannot sit in appeal on decision of arbitrator.

Arbitrators are judges of fact as well as law and have jurisdiction and authority to decide wrong as well as right. Accordingly, if they reach a decision and reach it fairly after hearing both sides their award cannot be attacked. The Court filing the award has no power to sit in appeal on the decision of the arbitrator : 23 A I R. 1936 Nag. 197; 29 Cal. 167 (P. C.), Rel. on. [Para 27]

(g) Civil P. C. (1908), Sch. II, Paras 20, 21 and 19—Parties agreeing to modification of original award—Award in terms of agreement—Validity.

If the parties agree to a modification of the original reference before the arbitrators then they are bound by their agreement; and when the arbitrators decide in accordance with the agreement of the parties it does not render their award invalid or make it any the less an award. The parties are bound by this agreement and the award is not incompetent : 21 Cal. 590 (P.C.); 25 A I.R. 1938 Nag. 132 and 15 A I.R. 1928 Pat. 7, Applied. [Para 30]

(h) Civil P. C. (1908), Sch. II, Paras 21 and 14—Arbitrators held did not exceed scope of reference.

Where it is evident from the terms of reference that the parties were at issue regarding the liability of the plaintiff to account and they referred that dispute in wide and general terms and the reference did not contain any admission by the plaintiff, as to the basis on which he is liable to account :

Held, that the arbitrator had authority to take into consideration the law by which the parties were governed and to determine whether the plaintiff was liable to account on the footing of an agent or trustee of the family or as manager under the Hindu law. [Para 34]

(i) Civil P. C. (1908). Sch. II, Para 21 — Court cannot go beyond award.

While making a decree on award under para. 21, the Court has no jurisdiction to travel beyond the award and has no jurisdiction to attach lists to its decree which were not attached to the award and which did not form part of it. The lists given by the Court in its decree were ordered to be deleted and the lists attached to the award substituted in their place. [Para 37]

Judgment.—This is an appeal against a decree following against an award with certain modifications under Para. 21, Sch. 2, Civil P. C.,

(Act 5 [V] of 1908) The Arbitration Act does not apply to this case and the matter falls within Sch. 2, Civil P. C.

[2] The parties to this suit had certain disputes regarding the division of their property. They were members of a joint Hindu family and the defendant was the jahagirdar of a jahagir estate in the Gwalior State. The defendant desired partition, and as the parties were unable to agree regarding several matters incidental to the partition, they decided, with the assistance of the Home Member of the Gwalior State, to refer their disputes to arbitration. The reference is Ex. P2 and is dated 30th April 1935. This was a reference made before the matter reached the Court and accordingly falls within the purview of Sch. 2, Civil P. C., dealing with references without the intervention of the Court.

[3] The property consisted of the jahagir property in the Gwalior State and certain other properties—some in British India and some in Gwalior. The mater having been referred to the arbitration of five arbitrators—two chosen by each side and a sarpanch chosen with common consent—an award was delivered on 28th May 1935. This is the award which is now said to be filed Under this award all the non-jahagir property was directed to be partitioned and the jahagir property being impartible was left as it is. The defendant being the jahagirdar naturally got the jahagir property and the plaintiff was given Rs 20 000 in lieu of maintenance which he would have obtained from the jahagir estate had the parties not partitioned The parties were given the choice of resorting to another arrangement for maintenance equivalent to that which the plaintiff was getting from the jahagir estate, but we need not concern ourselves with that. The award also contained certain other matters which we need not enumerate at this stage.

[4] On 24th August 1935, the plaintiff filed the application out of which this appeal arises to have the award filed. On 10th June 1935 the defendant had instituted a suit for partition. The partition suit was stayed pending the decision on the question of the award. According to the lower Court, the two suits were consolidated. That, however, appears to be inaccurate It seems that the partition suit was stayed and the documents filed in the one case were admitted to evidence in the other.

[5] The award was ordered by the lower Court to be filed and a decree followed in terms of the award, with however one variation. The lower Court held that the question of maintenance was beyond the competence of the arbitrators. It further held that this question was separable from the rest, and accordingly struck out this part of the award.

[6] The plaintiff appeals against this part of the decision which strikes out the portion of the award relating to the award of maintenance to him. The defendant filed a cross-objection in which he contends that the application for filing the award should be dismissed.

[7] Objection was taken at the outset to the maintainability of the application on the ground that the original award has not been produced. All that the plaintiff produced in Court is what has been called a counter-part of the original award. The description is inaccurate because as a matter of fact the document produced is not a counter-part but a copy of the original. This copy is signed by the sarpanch who alone signed the original award.

[8] It may be accepted at once that in the ordinary way an application for filing an award cannot be entertained if it is based on a copy. There are, however, exceptions to this, one of them being when the original cannot be obtained, or has been lost or destroyed. In this case the original was signed by a Judge of the Gwalior High Court. He was the sarpanch, and it seems that, according to the State laws, the original has to be maintained on the files of the High Court Office and all that the parties are entitled to get is a copy of the original. Endeavour was made by the defendant to obtain the original and letters were sent to the Registrar of the Gwalior High Court. An answer was received from him dated 12th January 1940. in which he stated that the original could not be sent. That being the state of affairs, S. 65, Evidence Act, is called into play and it is permissible for the Court to proceed upon secondary evidence.

[9] The secondary evidence in this case consists of a copy of the original signed by the sarpanch who, as we have said, signed the original. There is also on record a certified copy of the original which is among the files of the Gwalior High Court Office. There can, therefore, be no doubt about the authenticity of the copy which is produced, and secondary evidence being permissible, the objection taken on this score falls to the ground.

[10] As we have said, four panchas and a sarpanch were appointed as arbitrators. The award, Ex P1 is signed by the sarpanch alone. Objection is taken to this and it is stated that the award not having been signed by all the arbitrators is invalid.

[11] The reason why the award has been signed by one alone appears to be this. Exhibit P-2, which is the deed of agreement containing the reference, has the following provisions regarding panchas and their duties It says:

"We lay down and agree that we hereby appoint the following panchas and sarpanch....."

Then follows the names of the sarpanch and the panchas. Originally each side appointed 3 panchas and, as we have said, the sarpanch was appointed by common consent.

[12] The agreement of reference then continues :

"Any such award if unanimously given by the panchas or an award that may be given by the sarpanch in the event of the difference of opinion among the panchas shall be accepted and approved by us. Again, the panchas and the sarpanch will under this deed of agreement, give an award in the month of May 1935."

It will be seen from this quotation that the parties appointed six arbitrators, three from each side, and a sarpanch, and the authority given to the panchas was that they should decide the disputes between the parties unanimously if that were possible. If they were not able to reach unanimity, then the sarpanch was to give the decision. Whether this means that the sarpanch would be invested with authority to make the sole decision even if one of the remaining six disagreed need not be considered here because the situation does not arise But there was a difference of opinion between the panchas appointed by the defendant and those appointed by the plaintiff. The difference of opinion was equal, and accordingly the authority of the sarpanch at once arose under the clause quoted above.

[13] We ought to have stated that though each side appointed three arbitrators, apart from the sarpanch, one from each side later dropped out and the matter proceeded with four arbitrators and a sarpanch. This was with consent and the parties took part in the arbitration once it started. This being the position, the award by the sarpanch is not, in our judgment, invalid.

[14] That apart. Even if the provisions to which we have referred had not been in the terms of reference the law is that as soon as there is a difference of opinion between the arbitrators then the umpire assuming that the sarpanch occupied that position enters upon the reference. If not, of course, the majority opinion would prevail. That law is to be found in Russell on Arbitration Edn. 13, p. 320 where the following is quoted from the English Statute on arbitration of 1889 :

"If the arbitrators (have allowed their time or extended time to expire without making an award, or) have delivered to any party to the submission, or to the umpire a notice in writing, stating that they cannot agree, the umpire may forthwith enter on the reference in lieu of the arbitrators."

Again at page 321 Russell states :

"Where the provisions of para. (d) '(the provisions which we have just quoted)' of the Schedule are included in the submission, and the umpire enters 'on the reference in lieu of the arbitrators,' all the matters referred fall to be decided by him, and not merely the matters in respect of which the arbitrators have disagreed."

The same enunciation of the law is to be found in Banerji's Law on Arbitration and Award Edn. 4, p. 734 It is clear then that even if the clause to which we have referred had not been there then the sarpanch would have had authority to decide because of the difference of opinion between the arbitrators. Also, in any event, as we have said, if this was not the law then the majority view would prevail, and the sarpanch having agreed with the views of two of the others on the disputed issue there was a majority opinion in favour of the matter enunciated in the award.

[15] The latter position, however, raises the question whether one arbitrator can sign on behalf of the others. Had the arbitration been with the intervention of the Court that would not have been proper. But in arbitrations without the intervention of the Court this can be done : see 11 Pat 131.[1]

[16] That brings us to the next question, viz., whether there was a difference of opinion among the panchas and to what extent the difference goes. The history of the arbitration will be found set out in the award, Ex. P-1, which, as we have said, is signed by the sarpanch. It shows that the first sitting of the arbitrators was at Ujjain on 21st May 1935. Exhibit P-4 is a copy of the order-sheet of that date. On this date the plaintiff's panchas were absent but the two panchas of the defendant were present, as also both the plaintiff and the defendant in person. The plaintiff raised no objection regarding the absence of his panchas and the matter proceeded. The parties were asked to clarify the points on which they were at issue and three issues were drawn up.

[17] The second sitting was on the following day, 22nd May 1935. On that date the panchas of both sides were present, as also the parties in person. The order-sheet is signed by everybody. The parties agreed on that day regarding the partition of the property. It was agreed that the defendant should divide the property in his possession into two equal shares excluding the jahagir estate and that the plaintiff should be permitted to choose one of the two lists. Similarly, the plaintiff was directed to draw two lists of the property in his possession and the defendant was given the choice. The matter was then adjourned to the following day for arguments on the other two issues on which the parties were not able to reach an agreement.

[18] The order-sheet of the 23rd is Ex. P-8. The question of the plaintiff's liability to account and other incidental matters relating to the accounts was argued and the sitting was then adjourned to the 24th. Exhibit P-9 is the order-sheet of the 24th. The defendant was not present on that date and he sent a letter asking for an adjournment. The sitting was, therefore, adjourned till the morning of 27th May 1935.

[19] The panchas assembled at 8-30 in the morning. All were present. The plaintiff was also present in person but the defendant was absent. He, however, sent a telegram asking for a further adjournment. The order-sheet records that the meeting of that day had been purposely set for the 26th (27th?) but the arbitrators agreed to wait till the evening, and accordingly the meeting adjourned till 5 in the evening.

[20] It is relevant at this stage to point out that there was a certain urgency about this matter. The agreement of reference (EX. P-2) made this condition. It stated:

"Again, the panchas and the sarpanchas will, under this deed of agreement, give an award in the month of May 193". In case no such award is given this agreement shall be deemed to be invalid and the parties shall not be liable for what has been stated herein nor for the statements made during the arbitration proceedings and shall be entitled to seek their respective legal redresses in Court."

It will be evident from this that it was essential that the award should be delivered before the end of May. That explains the urgency of the matter and explains why the arbitrators were not prepared to wait beyond 5 O'clock on that date. It is to be observed that no one raised any objection to this.

[21] The arbitrators met again in the evening at 5 O'clock. The order-sheet of that date is EX. P-11. Exactly what occurred at that meeting is a matter of dispute. It is contended on the one side that the arbitrators finished their work and after that the two arbitrators of the defendant sent a letter to the sarpanch withdrawing from the arbitration. On the other side, it is contended that the withdrawal was before the work was concluded, and accordingly the arbitration was invalid. Whether the withdrawal was before or after is a question of fact. What the effect of withdrawal would be—assuming it to have been before the conclusion of the arbitration—is a matter of law. We will first deal with the question of fact.

[22] The inherent evidence of EX. P-11 indicates that the withdrawal was after the conclusion of the arbitration proceedings but before the signing of the award. (Their Lordships considered the evidence on this point and continued.)

[23] In our opinion, this evidence leads to the conclusion that the arbitration proceeded up to a stage when the arbitrators had to decide what their award was to be. At that juncture they discovered that they were not able to agree or, in the terms of the reference (EX. P-2), were unable to give a unanimous award. At that stage the panchas of the defendant withdrew. The legal effect of this is that they withdrew after the arbitration had concluded in accordance with the terms of the reference but before any award was made. As we have pointed out, the agreement was that the award was to be in accordance with the unanimous decision of the arbitrators. But they were not able to agree. Therefore the sarpanch had to decide. As they were not able to agree the sarpanch became vested with authority to give the sole award. He became so vested under the terms of reference, as also under the law.

[24] The next question we will deal with is the question of maintenance. The first question here is, was this matter referred to the panchas? In our opinion, it was. The relevant clauses in the agreement of reference (EX. P-2) relating to this are as follows:

"We hereby authorize them to take the action of partitioning the properties after examining the accounts and hearing pleadings of the parties and after taking into consideration the orders passed by late Huzur Anver Saheb dated 22nd April 1924 and the Supreme Council of the Gwalior State dated 4th August 1926 and 1934."

[25] The defendant's contention is that the orders referred to unequivocally stated that the plaintiff was not to get any maintenance in the event of a partition between the two. That is not entirely accurate. What the order states is that in the event of a partition the plaintiff will not get maintenance out of the jahagir estate. That also appears to be in consonance with R. 14-A, Gwalior Jahagir Rules. We need not here determine what exactly these orders import nor need we construe the Jahagir Rules of the Gwalior State. All that is foreign law, and so far as we are concerned the questions which arise out of them are ones of fact. We have no expert opinion before us regarding the State law on this subject and accordingly are not in a position to reach a conclusion on that point. We, can, however, accept, for the basis of argument, that the contention of the defendant that the qualification which we have mentioned above is right, namely, that the law of the Gwalior State and orders referred to in the terms of agreement preclude the plaintiff from obtaining any maintenance out of the Jahagir property in the event of a partition between the two parties. The next question is what was the point of referring to this in the manner which we have set out above in the terms of reference. In our opinion, the only point of making such a reference was to enable the arbitrators to take the inequality which would result from that into consideration and make a fair partition by giving the plaintiff compensation from the rest of the property.

[26] We say this for the following reasons. If parties wish arbitrators to partition properties A, B and C, and not to partition X, they either leave X out of their reference altogether and say definitely "please partition A, B and C," or, if they wish to make the matter clearer still, they say please partition A, B and C but not X". That, however, is not the form in which this document is couched. It does not tell the arbitrators to leave X out of consideration, but to make the partition after taking into consideration the fact that the plaintiff cannot obtain any share or maintenance from the Jahagir estate. In our opinion, that can only mean that the arbitrators were asked to make a fair partition taking that into consideration and, therefore, compensating the plaintiff for the fact that the defendant would receive not only the lion's share of the Jahagir estate but all of it. We are accordingly of opinion that this question of maintenance did fall within the terms of reference and that, therefore, the sarpanch had authority to deal with the matter.

[27] The next question is whether he was wrong in making the award he did regarding maintenance. As we have said, he awarded Rs. 20 000/- to be deducted out of the defendant's share. He also made an alternative direction with which we need not concern ourselves at the moment. Now, it does not matter whether the arbitrator was right or wrong in what he did because as has been pointed out by the Privy Council, and also by this High Court, arbitrators are Judges of fact as well as law and have jurisdiction and authority to decide wrong as well as right. Accordingly, if they reach a decision and reach it fairly after hearing both sides, their award cannot be attacked. The Court filing the award has no power to sit in appeal on the decision of the arbitrator. This law will be found in I. L. R. (1926) Nag. 44,[2] at p 45 and is based on the authority of the Privy Council in 29 Cal. 167,[3] at p. 186. But that apart, the decision was, in our opinion, a fair and a just one. The defendant was the jahagirdar. He forced the partition. The plaintiff did not want it. He knew that once there was separation in the family the plaintiff would receive neither share nor maintenance out of the jahagir estate. Accordingly, he knew that he would get the whole of that estate. That being the position, it was the fair and just thing to make compensation to the other side. That is what the arbitrator did. Further, as we say, whether he was right or wrong in what he did is not a matter into which we can enter. The matter was within the scope of the reference, and accordingly he had authority and jurisdiction to reach a decision on this point.

[28] The next objection is regarding the partition. It is said that on this point at any rate either the parties were agreed, in which case the sarpanch had no authority to make an award, or, if the parties were not agreed then the sarpanch in fact made no award. What he has done has been in effect to tell the parties to do the work which he was supposed to do.

[29] Now, as to this it is clear from the order-sheets as well as from the evidence of the sarpanch (P. W. 5), and also from the award Ex. P-1, that the parties and their panchas were agreed that there should be partition. Further, that the parties were agreed that each should divide the property in his possession into two parts and allow the other side to choose whichever he pleased. In order to enable the lists to be prepared, the arbitration was adjourned, and it was only at this stage that the defendant did not turn up and did not submit his list. However, the agreement already reached was embodied in the award.

[30] Now, it is evident that all the arbitrators and the sarpanch were unanimous about this. It is also evident that quite apart from what the panchas and the sarpanch thought or decided, the parties themselves were agreed. Now it is open to the parties at any stage to modify the reference which they had originally made and to agree to modifications in the settlement of their disputes. This will be evident from the Privy Council in 21 Cal. 590[4] as well as from I.L.R. (1937) Nag 419[5] and from 6 Pat. 556.[6] These decisions are not exactly in point but the principle is there that if the parties agree to a modification of the original reference before the arbitrators then they are bound by their agreement; also the fact that when the arbitrators decide in accordance with the agreement of the parties it does not render their award invalid or make it any the less an award. We hold that the parties are bound by this agreement and that the award is not incompetent. As we have said, even if the other panchas did not sign the award the sarpanch had authority on their behalf to deliver and sign their agreed conclusion.

[31] As regards the other two matters, the maintenance and the accounts, as the panchas for the respective parties were not agreed, the clause investing the sarpanch with authority to decide the matter came into play and accordingly he had jurisdiction to decide that point on his own.

[32] Objection was next taken to the accounts. It was said that the award does not make any decision regarding this. It was contended that under the agreement the plaintiff admitted that he was an accounting party and liable to render accounts. Accordingly, as the sarpanch did not investigate the accounts and determine his liability. the award is, to this extent, vitiated.

[33] The position in the terms of reference regarding this is as follows The relevant clause runs :

"We hereby authorize them to take the action of partitioning the properties after examining the accounts and hearing the pleadings. . . . . and to cause to be paid with interest that has become due for payment such amount as may be found due by one party to the other on rendition of accounts."

[34] In our opinion, there is no admission here by the plaintiff that he is liable to render accounts on the footing of an agent or on any footing other than as manager of a joint Hindu family Accounting can be on many bases The accounts which an agent is expected to render are very different from the accounts which can be called for from a manager of a joint Hindu family. It is evident that the parties were at issue regarding the liability of the plaintiff to account. They referred that dispute in wide and general terms. Accordingly, the arbitrator had authority to take into consideration the law by which he parties were governed and to determine whether the plaintiff was liable to account on the footing of an agent or trustee of the family or as manager under the Hindu law.

[35] It is relevant to note that when the parties were called upon to explain the scope of their disputes before the arbitrators on 21st May 1935, (Ex. P-4) the issues upon which they agreed were simple and in general terms viz., "Account in respect of the property situate at Harda from Samvat 1986 to Samvat 1990" In our opinion, this left the matter at large, and the arbitrators had authority to determine on what footing the plaintiff should be called upon to account.

[36] The decision which the sarpanch reached on this is embodied in his award. He points out there that the plaintiff could only be called upon to account on the basis of his being manager of the joint Hindu family, and he there correctly quotes the Hindu law on the point, viz.. that except as regards fraud or mismanagement or gross negligence prejudicial to the family the manager cannot be called upon to account. He pointed out that there was no evidence of fraud or mismanagement or gross negligence, nor was any evidence produced to show prejudice Accordingly, the plaintiff was not liable to account beyond the extent to which he consented to account. The plaintiff produced all his books and said he was quite prepared to account on the basis of those books provided the accounts were examined by an auditor, and he was prepared to pay what the auditor would decide was due from him That is embodied in the award. In our opinion, the arbitrator had jurisdiction to decide as he did.

[37] The decree of the lower Court embodies certain lists which the learned Judge of the lower Court appears to have thought were part of the award. A good deal of argument was addressed to us regarding these lists, and there was a certain amount of confusion because a large number of lists were prepared. The award refers to two lists They are, however, not the lists which have been attached to the decree. The lower Court, of course, had no jurisdiction to travel beyond the award and had no jurisdiction to attach lists to its decree which were not attached to the award and which did not form part of it The only lists which form part of the award are those to be found in EX. P-13. These will be translated, and the lower Court's decree will be corrected after these lists have been translated The lists given by the lower Court in its decree will be deleted and the lists attached to the award will be substituted in their place. Except for that, and except as regards the direction in the award regarding maintenance, the decree of the lower Court will stand.

[38] The direction regarding the maintenance is as follows and this will now be incorporated in the decree. The defendant will pay to the plaintiff a sum of Rs 20,000 which shall be deducted from the defendant's half share of the profits of the property in the plaintiff's possession.

[39] This is not in the award in quite these terms, but counsel on both sides agree that that is what this passage in the award means and we make this variation with the consent of counsel on both sides in order to clarify the position.

[40] There will also be added to the decree this clause. In the alternative, the defendant shall give the plaintiff in lieu of maintenance eight anna zamindari share in mouza Lahadpur and eight-anna share in mouza Palasner. The defendant may at his option carry into effect either of these two alternatives. The result is that the appeal succeeds and is allowed with costs, and the cross-objection fails and is dismissed with costs.

Sheonarayan Harlal Maheshwari—Plaintiff—Applicant v. Kanhaiyalal Devidin and another—Defendants—Non-Applicants.

Civil Revn No 530 of 1945, Decided on 31st January 1947, from order of Second Addl. Civil Judge, 2nd Class, Khandwa, D/ 1st November 1945.

(a) Civil P C (1908), S. 52—Suit against person as heir of deceased—Proof required — Existence of assets if should be proved at stage of suit or execution—Position, when suit is undefended — Civil P. C. (1908), O. 9, R. 6.

When a person is not an heir but is sued as a legal representative on the sole assertion that he is an intermeddler in the estate, it will be necessary for the plaintiff to establish in the suit itself that there is an estate, that is to say, the plaintiff must prove that the estate which the defendant is said to be intermeddling with belonged to the deceased. Otherwise of course the defendant is not a 'legal representative' and unless it can be established that he is a legal representative no decree can be passed. But when the defendant is proved to be an heir, there is a difference of opinion in C. P. and Berar, on the question whether the existence of the assets must be proved in the suit or may be left to the stage of execution. [Para 3]

The practice accordingly varies and litigants are at a loss to know what to do. That being the case the plaintiff ought to be told that he would be required to establish this in the suit and that it would not be enough to leave the matter to the execution stage. This is all the more necessary in a case where the defendant does not appear. [Para 3]

(b) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 9, R. 6 — Defendant not appearing—Plaintiff to adduce prima facie evidence —Duty of Court in telling plaintiff what is prima facie case.

Where the defendant does not appear and the Court requires the plaintiff to adduce prima facie evidence, the Court ought to warn the plaintiff that such evidence as he has adduced is not in the opinion of the Court sufficient to establish a prima facie case. Unless this is done it is evident that a plaintiff would be bound to adduce all his evidence and examine his witnesses as fully as he would in a defended case. The whole idea is that the Judge should take just enough evidence to satisfy himself that a prima facie case has been established. But in any event the Judge should at least tell the plaintiff how much evidence he requires : 15 A.I.R. 1928 Nag. 165, Ref. [Para 5]

Case referred :—

1. ('28) 15 A. I. R. 1928 Nag. 165 : 108 I. C. 879, Bhujangrao v. Baliram.

R. S. Dabir — for Applicant.

Order.—The defendant has not appeared to oppose this application for revision. His brother, Babulal, owed the plaintiff money on a pledge of ornaments Babulal died, and after notice to the defendant, the pledged ornaments were sold The proceeds were not sufficient to cover the amount of the debt and so the plaintiff sues the defendant as Babulal's heir for the balance. The plaint sets out that the defendant is Babulal's heir and that he is in possession of the assets of the deceased.

[2] The defendant did not appear and the case proceeded ex parte. In his evidence the plaintiff admitted that Babulal and the defendant were joint in estate and that the defendant was in possession of all the joint family property. The learned Judge of the lower appellate Court holds, and holds rightly, that the plaintiff cannot proceed against the joint family property in the defendant's hands after Babulal's death because it survives to the defendant and such interests as Babulal had in his lifetime are extinguished. But the question remains about Babulal's separate estate. The learned Judge states that there is no evidence to show that Babulal had any separate property and that the defendant is in possession of it. I gather he accepts as correct law that had that been established then the plaintiff would have been entitled to proceed against those assets. The question, however, is whether a plaintiff is bound to prove that the defendant is possessed of the deceased's assets at this stage or in execution; also whether it is necessary to adduce evidence when the defendant does not appear.

[3] On the first point there is a difference of opinion. I concede that when a person is not an heir but is sued as a legal representative on the sole assertion that he is an intermeddler in the estate it will be necessary for the plaintiff to establish in the suit itself that there is an estate, that is to say, the plaintiff must prove that the estate which the defendant is said to be intermeddling with belonged to the deceased. Otherwise of course the defendant is not a 'legal representative' and unless it can be established that he is a legal representative no decree can be passed. But when the defendant is proved to be an heir the position is not the same and there a difference of opinion emerges. Some Judges hold that in such a case the plaintiff is entitled to a decree the moment he proves that the defendant is an heir and that the correct stage at which to ascertain whether there are assets is in execution. Others hold that the existence of assets must be disclosed in the trial itself I need not decide this matter in revision. All that it is necessary to state in this case is that there is a difference of opinion on this point which has not been settled in this Province. The practice accordingly varies and litigants are at a loss to know what to do. That being the case I think the plaintiff ought to have been told that he would be required to establish this in the suit and that it would not be enough to leave the matter to the execution stage. I think this was all the more necessary in a case where the defendant did not appear.

[4] In A.I.R. 1928 Nag. 165[1] Hallifax A. J. C. held that where a defendant does not appear a Court is bound to pass a decree at once and that it is not necessary for the plaintiff to adduce any evidence at all. This is one extreme view which has not found general acceptance though there have been obiter dicta from other Judges of this Court as well to that effect. But without going to these extremes all Courts are agreed that a plaintiff need do no more than establish a prima facie case, and as Courts are not agreed whether it is prima facie sufficient to prove that a defendant is an heir and leave the question of assets to the execution stage or not I think it would have been fairer to warn the plaintiff that he would be required to prove this matter in the suit itself.

[5] I am careful to state that I am not interfering in this case because of any mistake of law. The Full Bench precludes interference in revision on that ground. I am interfering on a question of practice which goes to the root of the trial. Where the defendant does not appear and the Court requires the plaintiff to adduce prima facie evidence I think the Court ought to warn the plaintiff that such evidence as he has adduced is not in the opinion of the Court sufficient to establish a prima facie case. Unless this is done it is evident that a plaintiff would be bound to adduce all his evidence and examine his witnesses as fully as he would in a defended case. It is quite evident even on the view which requires prima facie evidence in such cases, that the plaintiff need not prove his case in full. The whole idea is that the Judge should take just enough evidence to satisfy himself that a prima facie case has been established. But I think in any event the Judge should at least tell the plaintiff how much evidence he requires. Otherwise, as I say, the plaintiff will be bound to adduce all his evidence in every undefended case and proceed as fully as he would have done in a defended action. Also, on doubtful questions like the present a plaintiff is likely to be misled.

[6] In view of the learned Judge's opinion that the existence of assets must be proved in the suit and cannot be left to the stage of execution I remand the case to him with directions to enable the plaintiff to prove the existence of assets, and if he succeeds then to decree the claim to the extent of these assets; if not, again to dismiss the claim. The application is allowed. The order of the lower Court is set aside. There will be no order as to costs because the defendant has not contested the action at any stage and it is the Court and not the defendant which has required the plaintiff to proceed.

A filed a suit against B, her son C and D, the mother of A for possession of a house, alleged to have been sold by D to the husband of B. The plaintiff alleged that the sale by his mother was without legal necessity and was effected by the fraud practised upon his mother by the husband of B. No particulars of fraud were given. The plea of fraud was not one which a Court of law could accept. In her written statement, D had pleaded fraud of the husband of B and gave its particulars. Court framed an issue on this plea raised by D against whom A had claimed no relief:

Held, that the issue should not have been raised on the case set up by D. [Para 5]

R. S. Dabir—for Appellants.

B. L. Gupta—for Respondent No. 1.

Judgment.—This is a defendant's appeal in a suit for possession of a house and for certain injunction. It is admitted that the whole case hinges on the plaintiff's right to possession. If he has no right to possession then he has no right to the injunctions claimed. On the other hand, if he has a right to possession then he is entitled to the injunction. The facts are as follows:

[2] One Balkishan had three sons and a daughter as shown in the following genealogical tree :

BALKISHAN

Fadali w. Mathura (Deft. 3).	Nande w. Mst. Durga (Deft. 2).	Parmanand (P.W. 1)	Mst. Poonabai (3 D. W. 2).
Dalchand (Plff).	Mate (Deft. 1.)

The plaintiff's father Fadali died on 25-5-1923. Two days later on 27-5-1923, the house in suit was sold by the plaintiff's mother, who is defendant 3 in this case, to the plaintiff's paternal uncle Nande. Nande is the father of defendant 1 and husband of defendant 2. The suit was filed 19 years later on 31-3-1942. The plaintiff was a minor and so gets an extended period of limitation.

[3] Execution of the sale-deed by the plaintiff's mother Mathura is admitted, but the case the plaintiff set out in the plaint was (1) that there was no legal necessity for the sale and (2) that "there was great friendship between defendant 3 and Nande, and Nande son of Balkishan led away defendant 3 and by practising fraud he obtained a deed of sale of the house and got the same registered. He was placed in possession of the western portion of the house which is shown in red ink in the map."

[4] This is the only allegation regarding fraud in the plaint. No detail is given, nor is it suggested how or why the fraud was necessary, nor is it shown how it was carried out. It has been repeated over and over again by the Privy Council, and by this Court, that no case of fraud can be looked at unless it is pleaded with the utmost particularity and unless it is proved as laid.

[5] Despite this lack of pleading, however, an issue was struck on the point to the following effect:

"Whether the sale-deed dated 27-5-1923 was void on the ground of want of consideration, fraud or misrepresentation as alleged by defendant 3?"

It is to be observed that the issue relates to a case set up by defendant 3. Defendant 1 is not fighting her. He is in possession. The plaintiff seeks for possession as against him. Accordingly, the case he had to meet was the case set up by the plaintiff, and cases set up by other parties against whom the plaintiff claimed no relief ought not to have been mixed up with the plaintiff's case. However, even if it be accepted that the plaintiff intended to rely on the fraud pleaded by defendant 3 (his mother) the position comes to this.

[6] Defendant 3 stated that at the time of her husband's death Nande told her that suits were about to be filed against her in respect of unfinished contracts which her husband had undertaken to complete and had not completed. Nande told her that decrees would be passed in those suits and that the house would be put up for sale in execution. He, therefore, advised the defendant

"to execute a fraudulent deed of sale of the house in favour of the father of defendant 1 and the husband of defendant 2."

The statement then goes on:

"Therefore the deceased Nande being a close relative and on his assuring her that the owner of the house would remain this defendant's son, the plaintiff only and that on the plaintiff's attaining majority the deceased Nande would execute in favour of the plaintiff a deed of return of the deed of sale of the house, this defendant executed a deed of sale in favour of the deceased Nande; and after the registration of the aforesaid deed of sale the deceased Nande took back the amount of consideration of the deed of sale on coming out."

[7] There is no allegation here that Mathura's husband had not left uncompleted works on contracts undertaken by him and that the fears about which Nande is said to have spoken were in fact unfounded. But that apart, the somewhat vague statement made by Mathura amounts to this, that Nande induced her to execute a nominal sale-deed in his favour in order that the property might be protected from Fadali's creditors.

[8] The first Court found against the plaintiff and held that the fraud set up by defendant 3 was not proved.

[9] The lower appellate Court in going behind this well considered finding of the first Court has not given any details of the evidence on which it relies and has instead made a number of vague and general statements which I find it difficult to accept as conclusions of fact.

[10] The learned Judge commences by stating that:

"The main question that arises for determination in this appeal is whether the sale-deed was executed by Mathura Bai in favour of Nande for no conside ation and whether the deed is the outcome of the misrepresentation and fraud alleged to have been practised upon her by Nande."

[11] In para. 8 the learned Judge proceeds to discuss the probabilities, and in para. 9 states that:

"The evidence which has been led in the case goes to show that Fadali was a petty contractor. His income was sufficient to maintain his small family decently."

[12] The learned Judge then proceeds to state:

"On the death of Fadali a list of the moveables in his possession was prepared by the panchas It was found that the lady was in possession of ornaments and cash Even the witnesses examined by respondents 1 and 2 say that the lady was in possession of ornaments and cash when the panchas prepared the list."

[13] The learned Judge, as I have said, does not tell us what evidence he relies on. So far as the witnesses examined by respondents 1 and 2 are concerned, they do not say that the lady was in possession of any cash when the panchas prepared the list or at any other time. That is the only evidence specifically referred to, and on examination it is found that the learned Judge has misread what they stated. Apart from that, the only other evidence is the evidence of Paramanand (P. W. 1), who clearly admits that he was not shown any cash and that, though a list was prepared, no cash was mentioned or shown in the list. He speaks of what Mathura told him. We are not told when she told him this, and for all we know it was after the sale to Nande. That being the case, Nande is not bound by what she said, and Parmanand's evidence being hearsay is inadmissible.

[14] Then, there is Mt. Mathura (3 D. W. 1). She says that Fadali left Rs. 150 0-0 when he died, and that that was enough for the funeral expenses and for the maintenance of her son, the plaintiff But she is unable to give any explanation as to why she did not disclose this fact about the cash when the list was prepared. She has also made several inconsistent statements and has been disbelieved by the first Court.

[15] The last witness on this point is Mst. Poona, Mathura's sister-in-law, who also says that Fadali left Rs. 150-0-0 in cash when he died. But according to her the panchas asked about the cash and were told about this Rs. 150-0-0. This contradicts the other witnesses who are clear that this matter was not disclosed to the panchas, and that is why it was not included in the list and, as I have said, Mathura herself is unable to give any explanation as to why the matter about the cash was not included in the list. If what Poona says is true then clearly Mathura could also have disclosed that fact.

[16] Then again, the passage I have quoted from the learned Judge's judgment appears to indicate that the cash is, as a matter of fact, included in the list. I admit this is not clear, but the following passages which follow each other indicate that, to my mind:

"On the death of Fadali a list of the moveables in his possession was prepared by the panchas. It was found that the lady was in possession of ornaments and cash."

As I have said, according to Parmanand, no mention of the cash was made at the time of the list and the list does not disclose it, but the learned Judge appears to think that this matter was discovered at the time the list was prepared. That fact, coupled with the obvious mistake where he has misread the evidence of the witnesses examined by respondents 1 and 2—these are the only witnesses specifically referred to—make it impossible for me to accept what would otherwise have been a conclusion of fact.

[17] The learned Judge then concludes that the sale-deed was taken from Mathurabai on misrepresentation and fraud and without any consideration. What the misrepresentation was we are not told, nor is he clear regarding the fraud. He has mixed up the questions of legal necessity and fraud, and on the sort of vague impressions to which he gave utterance in the passages I have quoted he reached the conclusion that there was fraud. As I have said, the plaintiff pleaded no fraud, that is to say, the plea which he made was not one which a Court of law can accept in such a matter. Defendant 3 pleaded one kind of fraud but in the witness-box spoke partly of another. In the witness-box she said that Nande told her that her husband's creditors would take the house and so advised her to transfer it to him, and then went on to say:

"Plaintiff was one year old then and Nande told me that the property of the plaintiff would be lost if I were to run away and so the document of sale in his name be executed."

According to her, each of these reasons induced her to act and each of them constitutes the fraud But she did not set out the latter reason in her written statement, and the learned Judge of the lower appellate Court disbelieves that part of her story.

[18] Then the learned Judge has fallen into error regarding the transfer of possession. According to him, the fact that the plaintiff and his mother were allowed to reside in a part of the house without payment of any rent indicates that the sale was nominal. He does not, however, tell us where he gets the fact that they resided there without payment of rent. On the other hand, Mathura, the plaintiff's mother, tells us as 3 D. W. 1 that she used to pay Rs. 2-0-0 a month to the defendant's mother Durga. I gather this was for the rent. In any event there is no evidence to show that no rent was paid. Then again, the learned Judge has omitted to notice that the portion in which the plaintiff and his mother were permitted to reside is only a small part of the house The bulk of the house was transferred to Nande's possession. That is a fact which the learned Judge has omitted to notice. If transfer of possession is what weighed with the learned Judge then the fact that possession of the bulk of the house was transferred to the vendee tells against his reasoning.

[19] In view of all this, and in view of the fact that the learned Judge has not examined the reasons given by the first Court, nor has he said anything about the witnesses whom the first Court disbelieved, and in view of the fact that fraud was not properly pleaded by the plaintiff, I am unable to uphold the finding regarding fraud.

[20] Next, regarding the question of necessity. That also is normally a question of fact, but here the learned Judge has so mixed the two points that I find it impossible to accept his conclusion As I have said, the learned Judge states that the main question in this case is one of fraud, and then regarding the question of necessity the learned Judge states:

"The evidence in the case and the probabilities leave no manner of doubt that there was absolutely no necessity for the alienation and that the deed was brought into existence for securing a house for the appellant when he came of age."

The probabilities referred to are the ones I have dealt with above, namely, whether there was fraud practised on the plaintiff's mother or not. If the case of fraud goes then the probabilities on which the learned Judge has relied also fall to the ground, and the evidence in the case is so mixed up with the other matter that the finding regarding this cannot be accepted either.

[21] The evidence turns on whether the widow had cash with her at the time or not. I have already dealt with this and here I uphold the finding of the first Court who, relying on the recitals in the deed and the fact that the cash was not disclosed to the panchas when the list was drawn up, concludes that there was no money in the house at the time. It is admitted by the defendant that her husband's ashes were taken to a place outside Saugor and it is also admitted that about 100 of the caste people were fed. Accordingly, these circumstances are sufficient after a lapse of 19 years to support the first Court's finding that there was necessity for the sale. I accordingly uphold that finding [22] All the circumstances point to the genuineness of the transaction. The sale was executed two days after Fadali's death. Possession was transferred except for the fact that the plaintiff and his mother were allowed to live in a small part of the house Panchas were called in and a list of the property was prepared. The existence of the cash was not disclosed to the panchas, and it is very unlikely that it would have been suppressed at a time like that. It is equally unlikely that the sale-deed would have been executed unless there was some pressing necessity for it.

[23] As regards the ornaments which Mathura is said to have had, those were on her person and presumably formed part of her "stridhan". Therefore, she was not bound to sell them for purposes mentioned above.

[24] It is to be noted that this case has been financed by Mathura, as she herself admits in the witness-box. Also it is to be noted that her story about the transfer of the consideration before the Registrar differs from the story given by her sister-in-law Poonabai In her written statement Mathurabai said that the money was handed over at the time of the registration but was taken back. (Defendants 1 and 2 said that the money was paid to Mathura). In the witness-box she says that the money was not given to her at all. Later, when she was further examined by the plaintiff she said that some part of the money was given into the hands of her sister-in-law Poonabai but not into her hands, and that when this was done the plaintiff Nande explained that the money belonged to her minor son, the plaintiff, and not to her and so should not be kept by her. Poonabai, on the other hand, says that no explanation at all was given regarding the money. Nande merely gave her a bundle of money and then took it back after the registration. The endorsement on the deed shows that the money was handed over to one Nathu. Therefore, all these various stories differ The appeal succeeds. The decree of the lower appellate Court is reversed, and that of the first Court is restored. Costs here and in the lower appellate Court will be paid by the plaintiff-respondent.

A. V. Khare and T. B. Pendharkar—for Appellant.

R. S. Dabir—for Respondents.

Judgment.—This is a second appeal by the defendant against whom the plaintiff's respondents' claim was fully decreed by the trial Court and that decree was maintained by the lower appellate Court only with a slight modification. The plaintiffs' claim was for recovery of Rs 1911 3-6 including interest at 0-7-0 p.c.p.m. till the date of suit. It was based on facts which are very simple, and many of them are undisputed. But as the lower appellate Court correctly pointed out, all rules of pleadings are violated by the parties resulting in huge waste of time and energy of all concerned and in unduly prolonging the duration of the trial.

[2] The relevant facts are that the defendant-firm from Akola dealt at Harda in forward delivery transactions of sales and purchases in cotton seed through the plaintiff firm at Harda. It appears that the defendant firm had such dealings effected through the plaintiff firm even before 1931 32, but the present suit relates only to Vayda, i. e. forward delivery transactions, of purchase of 225 manis of cotton seed at different rates between 22nd November 1931, and 10th January 1932, and of sales of 275 manis of cotton seed on 23rd November 1932 and 24th November 1932. The 'Vayda' or the delivery date of these transactions was 23rd January 1932. The details of the transactions are given below :

	Date	Purchases from	Rate	Date	Sales to	Rates.
1.	22-11-31.	50 manis Raghunathdas Bholaram.	Rs. 19-4.	23-11-31.	100 manis Bajranglal Rameshwardas.	Rs. 20-
2.	7-12-31.	50 manis Gangabisan Laxminarayan.	Rs. 26.	23-11-31.	25 manis Dulichand Hajarilal.	Rs. 20-
3.	7-12-31.	25 manis Baldeo Choteram.	Rs. 26.	24-11-31.	100 manis Radhakisan Jakisan.	Rs. 20-
4.	10-1-32.	100 manis Radhakisan Jaikisan.	Rs. 30-4.	24-11-31.	50 manis Gangabisan Laxminarayan.	Rs. 20-
	Total 225 manis			Total sale 275 manis.

Deficit 50 manis settled on 23rd January 1932, at the rate of Rs. 30 per mani.

[3] The plaintiffs alleged that the dealings in suit were carried out by them as commission agents for the defendant in accordance with the defendant's instructions received from time to time, and on the 'vayda' date i. e. 23rd January 1932, the plaintiff firm which was the purchaser from or seller to third parties had to settle all the dealings at the rate of Rs 30 per mani, which was the market rate on that day, and in so doing, it suffered an obligation of Rs. 1603 9 0 including adat at the rate of Re. 1-0-0 per 100 manis and this liability was discharged by the plaintiff firm. It therefore claimed this amount from the defendant with an additional amount of Rs 302-10 6 as interest till the date of suit.

[4] The defendant kept on changing his defence from time to time. To begin with he admitted Paras 1 to 4 of the plaint which meant that he admitted all sales and purchases mentioned by the plaintiffs. In the subsequent oral statement he withdrew his admissions and admitted only a part of the dealings and yet in another subsequent oral statement he admitted some other dealings and finally he admitted all purchases. At one stage he denied his liability for interest and other miscellaneous charges, but at a subsequent stage he admitted liability for interest for cash actually spent by the plaintiffs and also for some of the miscellaneous charges including charity. He contended that the commission agreed was at 8 per 100 manis and not at 1 per cent as claimed by the plaintiffs.

[5] The points which arose for determination in the suit were as follows :

(a) Whether the plaintiff-firm entered into transactions of sales and purchases noted above as commission agent for the defendant and whether the defendant accepted and ratified all these transactions. (b) Whether on the 'Vayda' date i. e. on 23rd January 1932 the plaintiff-firm incurred an obligation of Rs. 1603-9-0 in carrying out the transactions in suit and for 'adat' and other expenses and whether it is entitled to claim that amount from the defendant-firm together with Rs. 302-10-6 as interest till the date of suit. (c) Whether the plaintiff firm acted as pakka adiya for the defendant firm and whether it is entitled to claim the amount of loss suffered irrespective of the payment of the same to third parties either in cash or by adjustment as alleged by the plaintiff-firm. (d) Whether the plaintiff-firm was liable to the defendant for not carrying out the order of purchase of 250 manis of cotton seed at Rs. 20-0-0 per mani. (e) Whether the plaintiff-firm wrongly sold 275 manis when it was instructed by the defendant-firm to sell only 250 manis. (f) Whether the sale of 275 manis at Rs. 20.0 0 per mani was against defendant's instructions and whether the plaintiff-firm is liable on that account. (g) Whether the plaintiff was entitled to interest and other expenses as charged. (h) What is the effect of the assignment obtained by the defendant from Bajrangilal to whom the plaintiff-firm has to pay Rs. 802 0-0 towards the loss incurred in suit-dealings with him.

[6] The only points which were open for being argued and which were actually argued before us in second appeal were (c), (d), and (h), the others being concluded by the concurrent findings of fact. The points to be decided in this appeal mainly hinge on the character of the 'adat' or agency of the plaintiff firm. The plaintiff-firm asserted, though at a later stage, that it acted as a pakka adtya according to the custom prevalent in the Harda market and was entitled to recover the amount in suit from the defendant irrespective of its payment or satisfaction. The defendant-firm denied that the plaintiff-firm acted as a pakka adtya and added that it does not understand the exact import of pakki adat.

[7] In a very able and exhaustive judgment, the lower appellate Court found that the plaintiff-firm acted as a pakka adtya and could recover the amount in suit whether it satisfied the claims of opposite parties or not. It also found that as a matter of fact the claims of all, except that of Bajrangilal to the extent of Rs. 802 were satisfied either by payment or adjustment with their consent. The lower appellate Court discussed other points and overruled them. It further held that the assignment taken by the defendant-firm from Bajrangilal did not affect the plaintiff's claim. It maintained the decree of the trial Court save that the 'adat' was reduced from Re. 1 per 100 manis to 8 per 100 manis.

[8] The learned counsel for the appellant challenged seriously the conclusions of the Courts below that the plaintiff-firm acted as a 'pakka adtya'. He urged that the plaintiff-firm was an agent as defined in the Contract Act with a personal liability to third parties as an agent of an undisclosed principal, contemplated by S. 230, Contract Act. On our view there is no merit in this contention. We, however, wish to make it clear at this stage that if the contention of the appellant as regards the nature of agency were to prevail, it would affect the plaintiffs' claim only to the extent of Rs. 418 and not more.

[9] Out of the dealings in suit the plaintiff-firm had on 22nd November 1931 entered into a transaction of purchase of 50 manis of cotton seed at Rs. 19-4-0 per mani from Raghunathdas Bholaram. On account of this transaction the plaintiff-firm had to receive from him Rs. 550 by way of profit. The said Raghunathdas Bholaram did not pay the amount and the plaintiff had to institute a civil suit (Civil Suit No. 10 I: of 1935) for the recovery of the same. This claim had, however, to be settled for Rs. 200 of which Rs. 50 were actually received in cash. The plaintiff-firm has, however, given credit to the defendant-firm, which as an ordinary commission agent it is not bound to give. The lower appellate Court has, after elaborate discussion, found that the amounts due to all the holders except Bajrangilal were satisfied either by payment in cash or by a valid and binding adjustment which would entitle even an ordinary agent to recover that amount from his principal under S. 222, Contract Act It is not necessary in every case that an agent, before he is entitled to be indemnified by the principal, must discharge the liability in cash. In A. I. R. 1936 Nag. 37[1] an agent who had executed a sarkat undertaking to pay personally loans incurred on behalf of his principal was held entitled to be indemnified by the principal. The result is that if the plaintiff-firm is not a pakka adtya, it would not be able to recover Rs 802 payable to Bajrangilal, but it would at the same time have to get back Rs. 350 from the defendant-firm, to which it gave credit only because as a pakka adtya it was liable to give full credit for the amount recoverable as profits from Raghunathdas Bholaram, though as a fact the claim was settled for Rs. 200 only.

[10] Now to come to the main question, it should be noted at the outset that the term 'pakka adtya' is nowhere defined in law. In fact, as remarked by Mr. Ramnik Lal, the learned author of the book 'the Law of Pakki and Kachhi Adat,' pakka adtya, though a noted personality both in commercial and legal worlds bears such a complex character as to defy exact definition or easy description. The system of pakka adtya was brought into existence by the ingenuity of the Bombay merchants and by the exigencies of commerce and commercial convenience, and though it has by now travelled into other markets, and in its minor characteristics is affected by the local customs of an individual market it has throughout maintained its main characteristic, i. e., that a pakka adtya unlike a kachha adtya acts as a principal in relation both to his constituent and to the opposite party with whom he deals on the instructions of his constituent. As Beaman J put it in 15 Bom. L. R. 85[2] at page 96, he is very like an ordinary '"del credere" agent, but he is that and more'.

[11] Chaudavarkar J., after a critical survey of the evidence of respectable traders at Bombay laid down in a case reported in 7 Bom L R. 57[3] the principal incidents of pakka adat. According to the learned Judge, a pakka adtya on receiving an order from an up-country constituent can allocate that order to himself or he enters into a contract of sale or purchase in his own name and on his credit with a Bombay merchant He has a right in exercise of his own discretion to keep the contract outstanding till due date or to cover it with a cross-contract When a pakka adtya receives a second order from the constituent to enter into a cross-contract to cover his first order, the pakka adtya is not bound to carry out the second order, and what he is bound to do is to inform the constituent so that he may put through his order through some other pakka adtya. These incidences of a pakki adat were substantially agreed to by Sir Lawrence Jenkins in appeal; the appellate judgment is reported in 30 Bom. 205.[4]

[12] The main characteristic of pakka adtya that he acts as a principal in relation to his constituent and the opposite party is noted in A. I. R. 1923 Nag. 324,[5] A. I. R. 1940 Lah. 195,[6] I. L. R. (1937) Lah 683,[7] 30 Bom. 1,[8] I. L. R. (1941) Bom. 441[9] and 5 Rang. 1[10] and other decisions. In fact that is the characteristic by which a pakka adtya can be unmistakably identified.

[13] The actual evidence on record and specially the acts and conduct of the parties in this case leave no doubt that in the dealings in suit the plaintiff-firm acted as a pakka adtya and it consequently dealt with opposite parties at Harda as a principal and not as an agent either of disclosed or of undisclosed principal. It is not the case of the defendant-firm that the Harda merchants that could hold it or actually did hold it liable for losses either exclusively or along with the plaintiff-firm. This itself is sufficient to distinguish the character of the plaintiff-firm from kachha adtya, who is described by their Lordships of the Privy Council in 51 Bom. 1[11] at page 13 thus :

"When a Katcha Adatia enters into transactions under instructions from and on behalf of his up-country constituent with a third party in Bombay, he makes privity of contract between the third party and the constituent, so that each becomes liable to the other, but also he renders himself re-ponsible on the contract to the third party."

[14] It is apparent in this case that neither the defendant-firm was liable to the Harda merchants nor were the latter liable to the defendant-firm as there was no privity established between the two either directly or through an agent. The defendant-firm was entitled to recover profits from and similarly was liable to pay losses to the plaintiff-firm, and this clearly establishes that they were dealing with each other as two principals and not as principal and an agent. Moreover, the evidence of P. Ws. 14, 15, 18 and 20, which evidence has been accepted by the Courts below, clearly establishes that all dealings in the Harda market on the instructions of an outsider, i. e., a constituent from outside Harda are done in pakki adat We, therefore, agree with the conclusions of the Courts below and hold that the plaintiff-firm acted as a pakka adtya and as such, is entitled to recover from the defendant-firm the amount in suit irrespective of whether it paid the amount of loss to the opposite party or not.

[15] As already pointed out above, a pakka adtya is not bound to carry out the second order of the constituent to cover the first order. The plaintiff-firm was thus not bound in law to carry out the order of purchase of 250 manis of cotton-seed at Rs. 20 per mani. He was liable only to inform the defendant firm of his inability to do so, and this it did by letters and telegrams. The plaintiff-firm has moreover explained that it could not put through the transaction as there were no traders ready to enter into the transactions of sale in view of the prices of cotton-seed going up. The explanation has been accepted by the lower appellate Court, and we fully agree with it. On account of the important position held by a pakka adtya and as his personal credit is involved in dealings, he has a certain amount of discretion left to him in carrying through the transactions and in acting in a manner so as to minimize the liability for loss. He cannot therefore be held liable for every variation with the orders of his constituent. In this case he cannot be held liable simply because he sold 275 manis instead of 250 or that he sold it at Rs. 20 and not at Rs. 20-2-0, per mani.

[16] The only other point which is to be considered is the defendant's defence based on the assignment secured by it from Bajrangilal for the amount of Rs. 802 it had to receive from the plaintiff-firm on account of loss. In para. 4 (c) of the written statement dated 19th July 1935 the defendant-firm claimed an equitable set-off and on 13th July 1937 it valued that claim at Rs. 100 and paid court-fees thereon. On 2nd March 1938, more than three years after the institution of the suit, the defendant-firm put in an additional statement stating that on 17th February 1938 Bajrangilal Rameshwar had assigned his claim for Rs. 802 against the plaintiff-firm in favour of the defendant and the plaintiff's claim to the extent of Rs 802 and interest thereon should be reduced. It may be noted that no set-off was claimed on the strength of the alleged assignment.

[17] At the outset, it is difficult to see how an assignment got by the defendant from one of the plaintiff's creditors can be a defence in a suit. If the assignment is valid, it may give to the defendant a right of suit or possibly a right of equitable set-off which has not been claimed. The assignment dated 17th February 1938 cannot in our view be of any consequence in this suit, and it cannot affect the plaintiffs' claim. The lower appellate Court has moreover shown that on the date of the assignment dated 17th February 1938 the claim of Rameshwar Bajrangilal against the plaintiff-firm was already barred by time, the cause of action for the same having accrued on 23rd January 1932. Nothing has been shown to convince us that the debt was alive. The lower appellate Court has correctly overruled the defence based on the assignment. The appeal has thus no substance, and it is therefore dismissed with costs.

Civil Revn. No. 21 of 1946, Decided on 21-3-1947, from order of 3rd Addl. District Judge, Amraoti, D/- 12-9-1945.

(a) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 47 and O. 21, R. 66—Application to set aside sale on ground of want of notice under O. 21, R. 66 lies under S. 47.

Sale can be challenged on grounds other than the ones set out in Rr. 89, 90 and 91 of O. 21. Where an application to set aside a sale is brought not on the grounds covered by Rr. 89, 90 and 91 but on the ground of want of notice under O. 21, R. 66 the application lies under S. 47. [Para 11]

(b) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 115 — Material irregularity—Sale without notice under O. 21, R. 66.

The issue of a notice under O. 21, R. 66 touches the jurisdiction of the Court which effects the sale. Hence where a sale has been effected without a notice under O. 21, R 66 the matter is revisable to that extent. Whether notice was issued in fact or not, or whether it was served cannot however be determined in revision. [Para 14]

The notice under O. 21, R. 66 (2) is mandatory and the omission to give notice cannot be treated as a curable irregularity, unless of course the judgment-debtor appears without notice because he can waive the notice if he so desires. The omission to give notice under R. 66 (2) cannot be termed an irregularity in the publication : 6 A. I. R. 1919 Nag. 19 and view of Carnduff J. in 18 I. C. 715 (Cal.) and Staples A. J. C. in 16 A. (d) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 21, R. 66—Notice under O. 21, R. 22 — Fresh notice under O. 21, R. 66 not necessary.

Notice through the processes of the Court is not essential. All that the rule requires is that the judgment-debtor should have notice in one way or another. Moreover if the judgment-debtor is noticed under O. 21, R. 22, or appears at a previous stage, then it is not necessary to notice him again under O. 21, R. 66. It is enough that a date of which he has either constructive or actual notice be fixed for the drawing up and issue of the proclamation. [Para 22]

Order.—We are concerned here with a Small Cause Court decree passed in the year 1935. As a Small Cause Court cannot attach immovable property this decree was transferred to the regular side for execution and there certain revenue paying land was attached.

[2] Under the rules then in force the civil Court had to transfer such matters to the Collector for sale because the land was revenue paying property. Accordingly the C form was prepared and was despatched to the Collector.

[3] For one reason and another which does not concern us now, the matter remained pending before the Collector for merely two years and then, in 1943, before the sale could be effected, the Provincial Government revoked the Collector's powers and directed that all sales, including those of revenue paying estates, should be held by the civil Courts. Accordingly, in accordance with the instructions issued as a consequence of this change the Collector returned the C form to the civil Court.

[4] When the case came back from the Collector, the civil Court, on 8-1-1944, directed notices to issue to the parties and fixed the case for 11-3-1944. These notices did not say what would be done on that hearing. All they said was that the case had been received back from the Collector and that it would be taken up by the civil Court on 11-3-1944. On that date the following order was recorded :

"Issue sale notices and sale proclamation. Sale on 21-6-1944 at 1 P. M. Process fee in 3 days. Sale at Amraoti within Court premises. Report on 29-6-1944."

This order was signed by the Judge.

[5] After this was done (or so the appellate Court finds) the reader added the following :

"Mr. Bancore pleader present for judgment-debtor. Sale notice not necessary."

Because of this addition no notices were issued.

[6] There was some dispute before me as to whether the portion now said to have been added by the reader was actually so added or is part of what the Judge himself wrote, but as this is a revision I must accept the facts which the appellate Court finds. However, this will not make any difference to the result because, even if the Court added this subsequently, Mr. Banoore only represented one of the judgment-debtors, so the effect of a sale without an issue of the sale notices still falls for consideration.

[7] The property was brought to sale on the date fixed namely, 21-6-1944, and was purchased by the decree-holder. The sale was confirmed on 3-8-1944.

[8] On 13-10-1944 the application out of which the present proceedings arise was filed for setting aside the sale. The application is not under O. 21, Rr. 89, 90 or 91 but is for setting aside the sale on the ground that it is a nullity. It is argued that the application lies under S. 47.

[9] The crux of the matter is whether a notice is necessary under O. 21, R. 66 (2), Civil P. C. The rule contemplates a notice and the question is whether an omission to serve one is a curable irregularity or not. But before dealing with this I will get Rr. 89, 90 and 91 out of the way.

[10] It is accepted here that no application was made under these rules and also that no application could have been made under these rules on the grounds on which the sale is now attacked. But reliance is placed by the decree-holder on R. 92 which states that :

"Where no application is made under R. 89, R. 90 or R. 91 . . . the Court shall make an order confirming the sale and thereupon the sale shall become absolute."

It is argued that this leaves no room for any other sort of application, therefore in every case where no application is made, whatever the reason, the sale must be confirmed. With that I do not agree.

[11] I think it is beyond doubt that sales can be challenged on grounds other than the ones set out in Rr. 89, 90 and 91. The cases dealing with this have been collected in Mulla's Civil Procedure Code (Edn. 11) p. 190. No case to the contrary was brought to my notice. If then such challenge is made the matter must fall under S. 47 unless it can be brought under Rr. 89, 90 or 91. As it is agreed that the present application could not have been made under any one of those rules it follows that the matter falls under S. 47, and in any case I so hold.

[12] The only question left is whether an omission to issue the notice which O. 21, R. 66 requires is fatal or is a curable irregularity. The appellate Court holds it is material and has set the sale aside.

[13] That at once raises the question whether I can interfere with this in revision. It is argued that I can because this is a matter which touches the jurisdiction of the Court which effected the sale. It is argued that it is fundamental that certain matters cannot be heard or tried at all until the other side has either been noticed or appears suo motu and that it is a material irregularity within the meaning of S. 115 (c) to proceed without giving the other side an opportunity of being heard.

[14] I think the contention is sound. The issue of notices is a fundamental part of the procedure of the Courts in most cases and this touches jurisdiction because, as a general rule, the power and authority to try a case at all does not arise until the other side has been afforded an opportunity of appearing and being heard. There are statutory exceptions. But that is the general rule. Therefore, it is a matter touching jurisdiction in that sense to determine whether this is one of that class of case which requires the issue of notice as a pre-requisite to the authority to try the matter at all. I am of opinion that the matter is revisable to that extent. I am careful however to say to that extent only. I do not mean to lay down that whether notices were issued in fact or not, or whether they were served can be determined in revision.

[15] Now it seems to me that notice under O. 21, R. 66 is mandatory and that the omission to give notice cannot be treated as a curable irregularity, unless of course the judgment-debtor appears without notice because he can waive the notice if he so desires. I reach this conclusion for the following reasons.

[16] Order 21, R. 22, which deals with what one might term the initial issue of notice on an execution application, after stating as a general rule that notice shall be issued (the language is mandatory) goes on to make certain exceptions. One of them is contained in the proviso to sub-r. (1) and the other in sub-r. (2). I can hardly think the rule would have been couched in this form if notice had not been considered a vital matter, and this is particularly so since, in the opinion of the Privy Council, it is opposed to "natural justice" to try an issue without affording the other side an opportunity of being heard: see 40 Mad. 793[1] at p. 799. Therefore, it seems that in general where the Code prescribes for the issue of notice, and particularly where it uses mandatory language, it does not envisage the possibility of its directions being disregarded except when it makes express provisions in that behalf.

[17] Now when we turn to O. 21, R. 66, we find no exceptions to the provisions in sub-r. (2) which requires the issue of notice. The sub-rule runs thus :

"Such proclamation shall be drawn up after notice to the ..... judgment-debtor."

Therefore, contrasting this with R. 22, I am of opinion that the issue of notice is mandatory unless of course the judgment-debtor appears without notice and waives it.

[18] Another reason which leads me to this conclusion is this. Sub-rule (2) of R. 66 requires that the time and place of the sale shall be set out in the proclamation. No one will pretend that an omission to do this could be considered a curable irregularity. The fact that the issue of notice is required in the same sentence as this indicates to my mind that the intention was to place it on a par with the other matter so far as its importance is concerned. This is all the more so when one contrasts the greater flexibility which is permitted in what follows, namely, "and specify as fairly and accurately as possible." On the whole, therefore, I agree with the appellate Court that the issue of notice under O. 21, R. 66 (2) is mandatory and that the defect cannot be cured unless the judgment-debtor appears without notice and waives it.

[19] The next question is whether this is an illegality or a material irregularity within the meaning of O. 21, R. 90. Carnduff J. held in 18 I. C. 715[2] that it was an "irregularity in publishing the sale." His view was that as O. 21, R. 66 (2) requires notice, a proclamation prepared and published without the requisite notice is irregularly published within the meaning of O. 21, R. 90. But Beachcroft J., the other Judge in the case, did not agree though he did not press his point of view as he felt the weight of authority was against him. I prefer his view. In his opinion the word "published" in R. 90 refers back to the word "published" in R. 67, and that a sale cannot be said to have been "published" within the meaning of these rules until a notice has been issued stating the date fixed for the sale and particulars as to the property sold Therefore, at the date of the attachment (and the same would hold good of the notice under O. 21, R. 22 and of any other notice prior to the one contemplated by O. 21, R. 66 (2)), the sale cannot be said to have been "published" if there has been no notice. Accordingly, if notice under O. 21, R. 66 (2), is a pre-requisite of "publication" then an omission to give the necessary notice cannot be termed an irregularity in the publication. One does not get as far as the publication stage until what I might term the notice hurdle has been crossed.

[20] Mitra A. J. C. was of opinion in 16 N.L.R. 72[3] at p. 75, that the provision for notice in O. 21, R. 66, is only directory and not mandatory and that in any event it is a curable irregularity. But Kinkhede A. J. C. held in A. I. R. 1929 Nag. 305[4] that the provisions of O. 21, R. 66 (3), are mandatory and his reasoning regarding this will apply equally to sub-r. (2).

[21] Staples A. J. C. took the same view as Carnduff J. in 25 N. L. R. 58[5] though he did not refer to Carnduff J.'s decision. But the opinion of the learned Additional Judicial Commissioner is obiter because it was found as a fact in that case that notice had been served under O. 21, R. 66 (2). Another complication also arose there. An application had actually been made under O. 21, R. 90 and it was dismissed. The judgment-debtor did not appeal and instead filed a separate suit. This would naturally raise an issue of res judicata though that was not discussed by Staples A. J. C.

[22] I have no doubt that notice through the processes of the Court is not essential. All that the rule requires is that the judgment-debtor should have notice in one way or another. I held in A. I. R. 1939 Nag. 17[6] at p. 18 that notice of attachment under O. 21, R. 53, is essential but indicated that the notice need not necessarily be through the processes of the Court. I also considered a case of this kind in Miscellaneous Appeal No. 178 of 1937 and held there that a second notice need not be served under O. 21, R. 66 (2). If the judgment-debtor is noticed under O. 21, R. 22, or appears at a previous stage, then it is not necessary to notice him again under O. 21, R. 66. It is enough that a date of which he has either constructive or actual notice be fixed for the drawing up and issue of the proclamation. Had that been done here, or had the notice issued on 8th January 1944 said that the sale proclamation would be drawn up and issued on 11th March 1944, then I would have had no doubt about the validity of the sale. But unfortunately the notice issued by the learned Judge did not state what was to be done on 11th March 1944, therefore the judgment-debtor had no notice that the sale proclamation would be drawn up and issued on that date. Had the learned Judge fixed another date on 11th March 1944 for the drawing up of the sale proclamation then the position would have been similar to the one in Miscellaneous Appeal No. 178 of 1937. The judgment-debtor would in that event be deemed to have had constructive notice.

[23] The application fails and is dismissed with costs. Counsel's fee Rs 30.

[21] After the draft of this judgment was laid on the table counsel for the applicant contended that the cases cited at page 190 of Mulla's Civil Procedure Code do not apply to this Province because of the local amendment which makes the issue of notice under O. 21, R. 22, curable as an irregularity unless substantial prejudice is established. But that makes no difference to my reasoning. We are concerned here with the notice required by O. 21, R. 66 (2). There is no local amendment to make omission to give the notice a curable irregularity. Seeing therefore that O. 21, R. 22, was altered but not this there is all the more reason to suppose that no alteration of the law was contemplated under O. 21, R. 66 (2). Had there been no local amendment to O 21, R 22, an omission to issue notice would have been fatal. The fact except where dispensed with by the rule that the initial issue of notice has been waived under the local amendment except where substantial injury is established is no reason for concluding that notice at a later stage is also waived. The amendment does not, in my opinion, affect my decision.

(a) C. P. Relief of Indebtedness Act (14 [XIV] of 1939), S. 6 (3) — Sale taking place before receipt of notice by Court—Validity of sale and its confirmation.

Under S. 6 (3), the stay does not operate until the Court receives the notice. The notice cannot be said to be given until it is actually handed over. It is not enough to sign an order in the Debt Relief Court. That is not giving notice to the Courts. Hence, even if the notice is issued before the sale but the sale is completed before the notice is received by the Court, the sale is valid and cannot be set aside. As the sale is good and cannot be set aside under O. 21, Rr. 89, 90 or 91, Civil P. C., its confirmation made subsequently is also good : 31 A.I.R. 1944 Nag. 195 and 27 A.I.R. 1940 Nag. 372, Disting. [Paras 6 and 7]

A. Razak — for Appellant.

V. V. Kelkar — for Respondent.

Order. — We are concerned here with two applications made by the judgment-debtor (appellant) in the first Court, (1) for setting aside an auction-sale under O. 21, R. 90, Civil P. C., and (2) for instalments under S. 11, C. P. Money-lenders Act. The facts are as follows.

[2] The decree-holder (respondent) obtained a final decree for sale on 15-8-1938 for Rs. 15,880-10-0. The sale was held on 16-1-1940 and realised Rs. 12,500-0-0. It was confirmed on 16-2-1942.

[3] On 14-12-1939, that is to say, after the final decree and before the sale, the judgment-debtor applied to the Debt Relief Court and on 15-1-1940, the Debt Relief Court issued a notice under S. 6 (3), Debt Relief Act for stay. This notice was not received by the civil Court before the sale was held. The exact date on which it reached the civil Court is not clear from the record. The earliest endorsement by the civil Court on the notice is dated 25-1-1940. But whatever the exact date is it is evident that it was not received by the civil Court on or before 16-1-1940, the date on which the sale was held. The question then arises what was the effect of that notice on the sale. The learned counsel for the judgment-debtor (appellant) contends that it has the effect of nullifying the sale, and he relies on I.L.R. (1944) Nag. 468[1] and A.I.R. 1940 Nag. 372.[2]

[4] In my opinion, neither of these rulings has application here, and, in my judgment, the sale was good. So far as the two rulings are concerned, they relate to cases in which the civil Court received notice of stay from the Debt Relief Court before the holding of the sale; for example, in I.L.R. (1944) Nag. 468[1] the notice was received by the civil Court on 8-3-1940, while the sale did not take place till 28-3-1940. The same was the case in the other decision. The notice was received by the civil Court before the sale. Those cases, therefore, have no application to the present where the sale took place before the notice was received by the civil Court.

[5] Section 6 (3), Debt Relief Act, which is the one which concerns us here, is in these terms :

"When an application made under sub-s. (1) is admitted, and when notice of such admission is given to the Courts concerned, proceedings, if any, against the debtor ..... pending before a civil Court ..... shall be stayed."

[6] The important part of the section is the portion which I have underlined (here italicized). The word there is that the stay is to operate from the date on which notice is given to the Courts. Notice cannot be said to be given until it is actually handed over. The meaning of the Act in my judgment is that the stay is not to operate until the Courts receive the notice. It is not enough to sign an order in the Debt Relief Court. That is not giving. That is only making an order. The act of giving imports delivery of the object given. Accordingly, as the notice did not reach the civil Court before the sale, it cannot be said that the civil Court was given notice of the stay. As the stay only operates from the date on which notice is given to the civil Courts, it is clear that the sale proceedings were valid on 16-1-1940 when the sale was held. Accordingly, the sale must stand, and its confirmation on 16-2-1942 was good.

[7] I say that the confirmation on 16-2-1942 was good because their Lordships of the Privy Council have held that once a sale has taken place then it must be confirmed unless it can be set aside under O. 21, Rr. 89, 90 or 91, Civil P. C. If the matter cannot be brought under any of those rules then the sale cannot be set aside. The same principle applies in this case. The sale was good. The matter cannot be brought under O. 21, Rr. 89, 90 or 91. Therefore, the confirmation also was good : see 1939 N. L. J. 283[3] at pp. 285-289.

[8] The next question relates to the application for instalments under S. 11, C. P. Money-lenders Act. The question there is whether S. 11 applies after the stage of final decree. Reliance was placed for the appellant on a Full Bench decision in I. L. R. (1944) Nag 568[4] which overruled I.L.R. (1942) Nag. 357.[5] The lower Court had relied on a Division Bench case in 1942 N. L. J. 150.[6] The Division Bench in that case to a certain extent followed I. L. R. (1942) Nag. 357,[5] and the argument for the learned counsel for the appellant was that inasmuch as I. L. R. (1942) Nag. 357[5] had been overruled it follows that 1942 N. L. J. 150[6] was also impliedly overruled. With that I do not agree.

[9] I. L. R. (1942) Nag. 357[5] as also I. L. R. (1944) Nag. 568[4] which overruled it, were concerned with preliminary decrees. What the Full Bench held was that a preliminary decree, whether for sale or for foreclosure, is a debt within the meaning of s. 2 (d), Relief of Indebtedness Act. Not only did the decision relate to preliminary decrees but it was concerned with the Relief of Indebtedness Act and not with the Money-lenders Act. The Divisional Bench in 1942 N. L. J. 150[6] on which the lower Court relied was concerned with the final decree and related to the Money-lenders Act. The Division Bench drew a distinction between the position before final decree and that after it and held :

"Once this is done (that is once a final decree is passed) the decree ceases to be a decree for payment of a sum of money, or for payment of an amount found due. It does not matter in the least how much was due or was not due once the final decree is passed because that decree directs the sale of property and is no more a money decree than a decree for specific performance which orders the vendor to sell the suit property to the vendee. It is clearly impossible to make a decree which directs sale of a field or house payable in instalments because there is nothing to be paid."

For that reason the Division Bench held that S. 11, C. P. Money-lenders Act has no application once a final decree for sale on a mortgage has been passed. That decision has not been overruled, nor is there anything in the Full Bench decision to indicate that this reasoning is unsound. In any event, I am bound by it, and having been a party to it, I agree with its correctness. Following that decision I hold that the Money-lenders Act has no application to this case because the application under S. 11 was made not only after the preliminary decree but also after it had been partially executed by sale of the property. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

(a) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 2, R. 3 — Suit for specific performance of agreement for sale of land — Strangers claiming independent title, are not proper parties—Specific Relief Act (1877), S. 27.

Scope of a suit for specific performance of an agreement for sale of land coupled with a prayer for possession cannot be enlarged and the suit turned also into a title suit. Hence strangers setting up an independent title to the land, the subject-matter of the contract of sale are not proper parties to the suit for specific performance. The plaintiffs after perfecting their title by obtaining specific performance against the executants of the agreement would be in a position to bring a fresh suit against anybody who stood in the way of obtaining possession. Order. — This is an application for revision of the order and the findings given on 25-9-1945 by Mr. S. G. Oke, Second Civil Judge (Class II), Nagpur, in Civil Suit No. 183A of 1943. The facts of the case are that defendants 1 and 2 (non-applicants 5 and 6) executed an agreement of sale of their house in favour of plaintiffs (non-applicants 1 to 4) on 17-7-1941. In that agreement it was provided that the sale-deed would be executed within the time mentioned in it and that if it was not possible to do so, the time would be extended. It was also provided that if any objection was raised on behalf of Balaji Dumnaji Koshti defendants 1 and 2 would be responsible. There were other provisions for damages in case of breach.

[2] Defendants 1 and 2 having failed to implement this agreement, the present suit was launched for specific performance against them. In addition to the relief of the specific performance the plaintiffs claimed possession of the house and in the array of the defendants were included the two widows of Balaji Koshti and possession was also sought against them. It is necessary to examine the pleadings a little closely at this stage. In para. 1 (b) of the plaint added by an amendment it was said :

"The entire house, of which the house in suit forms Eastern portion belongs to Banaji (sic.) son of Dumnya Koshti. Half of the Western half portion thereof was in possession of Balaji, the husband of defendants 3 and 4 and the Eastern half was in possession of Banaji. After the death of Banaji 14 years ago, Balaji's (sic.) portion of the house, which is now in dispute, was inherited by his daughter defendant 1 and she has been in possession thereof till the date of cause of action."

It was also stated in the plaint "Neither Balaji nor defendants 3 and 4 were in possession of the house in suit and never acquired any title to it by adverse possession."

[3] Defendants 3 and 4 (applicants before me) claimed to be discharged from the suit on the ground that they were not necessary parties and further that they could not properly be joined in this suit for specific performance. The learned trial Judge held that possession was only a consequential relief and as the plaintiffs had alleged collusion between defendants 1 and 2 on the one hand and defendants 3 and 4 on the other it was permissible to join defendants 3 and 4 as defendants in the suit under O. 2, R. 3, Civil P. C.

[4] Against this order the present revision application is filed. Learned counsel for the non-applicants raised a preliminary objection that revision does not lie because no question of jurisdiction is involved. Clearly enough if in a suit for specific performance it is not open to join other causes of action, then the action of the learned trial Judge was clearly without jurisdiction. As I shall show presently the learned Judge's view of the law was erroneous.

[5] It has been laid down by the Chancery Court in (1834) 40 E. R. 848[1] that in a suit for a specific performance it is not permissible to join people who are strangers and whose claim has to be investigated apart from the agreement of which specific performance is sought to be claimed. I refer to the following passage from the judgment of the Lord Chancellor Cottenham:

"It is not disputed that, generally, to a bill for a specific performance of a contract of sale, the parties to the contract only are the proper parties; and, when the ground of the jurisdiction of Courts of Equity in suits of that kind is considered it could not properly be otherwise. The Court assumes jurisdiction in such cases, because a Court of law, giving damages only for the non-performance of the contract in many cases does not afford an adequate remedy. But, in equity, as well as at law, the contract constitutes the right, and regulates the liabilities of the parties; and the object of both proceedings is to place the party complaining as nearly as possible in the same situation as the defendant had agreed that he should be placed in. It is obvious that persons, strangers to the contract, and, therefore, neither entitled to the right, nor subject to the liabilities which arise out of it, are as much strangers to a proceeding to enforce the execution of it as they are to a proceeding to recover damages for the breach of it." (p. 851).

It was also said in a later portion of the same judgment :

"In (1820) Jac. 490[2] at p. 494, Lord Eldon says that when a bill is filed for a specific performance it should not be mixed up with a prayer for relief against other persons claiming an interest in the estate ..... It is to be regretted that this opinion will prevent the parties from having the question between them so effectively decided as it might otherwise have been; but I cannot, to avoid an inconvenience in a particular case, sanction a proceeding which I consider to be inconsistent with the rules of pleading, and which, if recognised, might lead to much difficulty and confusion in the proceedings of the Court." (p. 851).

The case in (1834) 40 E. R. 848[1] was followed in subsequent cases and in (1866) 2 Ch. 164[3] at p. 170 Turner, L. J. observed :

"Here again his case is met by (1834) 40 E. R. 848[1] in which case it was distinctly laid down that a purchaser cannot, before his contract is carried into effect, enforce against strangers to the contract equities attaching to the property, a rule which, as it seems to me, is well founded in principle, for if it were otherwise, this Court might be called upon to adjudicate upon questions which might never arise, as it might appear that the contract either ought not to be, or could not be performed."

These cases have been approved and applied in India in connection with S. 27, Specific Relief Act in a large number of cases. A few of them are cited here for reference: 5 Bom. 177,[4] 40 Mad. 365[5] and A. I. R. 1945 Cal. 355.[6] In the Calcutta case it was said :

"The necessary parties in a suit for specific performance of a contract for sale are the parties to the contract, or if they are dead their legal representatives, as also a person who had purchased the property from the vendor after the contract. He is a necessary party as he would be affected, if he is volunteer, or if a purchaser for value, had purchased with notice of the contract. A person who claimed adversely to the vendor is, however, not a necessary party. Where the property stands in the name of a person other than the vendor, and the suit for specific performance is brought by the purchaser, that person may be joined as a defendant as a proper party on an allegation that he is the benamidar of the vendor but if he appears and contends that he is not the benamidar of the vendor the proper procedure would be to discharge him from the suit, leaving it to the plaintiff in the suit for specific performance to institute a suit against him after he had got the conveyance in execution of the decree for specific performance against his vendor. This is on the principle that the scope of a suit for specific performance of a contract for sale ought not to be enlarged and the suit turned also into a title suit between one of either of the parties to the contract and a stranger to the contract." (p. 359).

I respectfully follow these cases and hold in the present case that since defendants 3 and 4 (applicants here) have set up an independent title the proper course for the learned trial Judge was to order that they be discharged. The plaintiffs after perfecting their title by obtaining specific performance against the executants of the agreement would be in a position to bring a fresh suit against anybody who stood in the way of obtaining possession. At the present time it is not possible in this suit to investigate the title which defendants 3 and 4 are setting up. Such a cause of action cannot be joined in a suit for specific performance of contract.

[6] The result is that this application for revision succeeds. The lower Court is directed to discharge Mt. Nagi and Mt. Maina (defendants 3 and 4). Non-applicants 1 to 4 will bear the costs of this revision as incurred by the applicants. Non-applicants 5 and 6 will bear their own costs. Pleader's fee Rs. 25.

Order. — Against the order passed by the District Judge, Nagpur, under S. 5 (5) Charitable and Religious Trusts Act (14 [XIV] of 1920), Mt. Kulsumbi has filed this revision petition.

[2] The proceedings before the District Judge were started on an application under S. 3 of the aforesaid Act by one Kazi Md. Abdul Sattar (hereinafter called the non-applicant) against three persons viz., Mt. Kulsambi, the daughter and Mt Hasmatbi, the widow of Sk. Ismail, and one another who was the transferee from them, and who was subsequently discharged. Of the remaining two, Mt. Kulsambi (the applicant in this revision) was the only contesting party, the other Hasmatbi had practically joined hands with Kazi Md. Abdul Sattar and is not aggrieved by the order of the lower Court.

[3] Kazi Md. Abdul Sattar's case is that there is an ancient 'Idgah' in mouza Bhankheda which is now a part of Nagpur city built by the Muslim community and is used by the said community for offering two 'Id' prayers annually. It is thus a public religious institution for the use of the Muslim public of Nagpur. The property described in Sch. A to the application consisting of maufi sarkari land Nos. 65 and 67 total area 1.36 acres with Idgah building and two houses thereon is according to him a trust property for the upkeep and maintenance of the said 'Idgah' and is held by Mt. Kulsambi and Mt. Hasmatbi as trustees. Kazi Md. Abdul Sattar claims to be interested in this Idgah as Pesh Imam (which position is not disputed before me) and he therefore moved the District Judge for passing an order calling upon the said trustees to furnish particulars and accounts of the trust property

[4] The learned District Judge, appeared on the materials placed before him to be satisfied prima facie that the property to which the application related was a trust property and Kazi Md. Abdul Sattar was interested in it. Notices were accordingly issued to the opposite party, and Mt. Kulsambi who was the only contesting party, filed a written statement denying the trust and claiming the Idgah and the property as the private property belonging to her predecessors. According to her the Idgah was constructed by one Bholashah Fakir, her predecessor-in-title who was its proprietor and that the other property described in the schedule was not the trust property for the benefit of the Idgah but the private property of Bholashah, and the two houses now standing were constructed by her father, Sk. Ismail, out of his own private funds She however admitted that annual 'Id' prayers are offered in this Idgah and that the rental collections from the fields which are maufi are utilized for the upkeep and white washing of the Idgah. She claims to have inherited this entire property on the death of her father Sk. Ismail on 24th October 1934.

(i) Bhola Shah Fakir (d. about 1833-34)
|
Sk. Makbul (d. about 1878)
=Bayabi (Makbul's widow who died in 1914)

(ii) X

Bayabi.	Y (sister)=Inayatali (d. 16-11-05)	Z (sister)=Sk. Turab
	Mir Md. Ali.	Sk. Ismail (d. 24-10-34 = Hasmatbi
		Mt. Kulsambi.

(B) The following are the private transfers of the property now claimed to be a trust property. (i) Gift by Mt. Bayabi in favour of Inayatali, her sister's son of the entire property by a registered gift deed dated 18th April 1892 (Ex. N A-4); (ii) Gift of 1/4th part of that property by Mir Md. Ali son of Inayatali in favour of Bayabi by a registered gift deed dated 21st July 1907. (Ex. N. A-3); (iii) A will executed by Mt. Bayabi on 2nd October 1914 in respect of the property gifted in her favour; (iv) Gift deed executed by Sk. Ismail in favour of her daughter Mt. Kulsambi on 1st February 1934 relating to houses (which are most probably the two houses mentioned in Sch. A to the application).

(C) The maufi field was originally one field and its number was 21 and area 9.14 acres (vide Ex. N. A-5). It appears that a part of this area was acquired under the Land Acquisition Act prior to 1892. In the settlement of 1892 the un-acquired area out of field No. 21 was given four numbers, viz. 29/1, 56, 57 and 66 with a total area of 7.86 acres. In 1908-09 proceedings were started for acquisition of 6.50 acres out of the aforesaid area for public purposes and the land was acquired and compensation paid in 1912 (vide Ex N. A-16). Thus, what is now left out of the original field No. 21 is only 1.36 acres and in the settlement of 1914 the numbers and area are given as under : No. 65 0.11 acres, No. 67 1.25 acres. This is now the land which is said to be the trust property. The Idgah stands on No. 65 and the two houses described in the schedule stand on No. 67.

[6] After due inquiry the learned District Judge recorded relevant finding in para. 7 of his order in these words :

"From the evidence referred to above I am of opinion that the land attached to the Idgah is not the private property of respondent 1 (Mt. Kulsambi). It is likely that out of the compensation received by Mt. Bayabi some buildings on khasra Nos 65 and 67 were constructed for the benefit of the Idgah. I do not believe the evidence that Sk. Ismail spent any money of his own on the construction of these buildings The evidence however discloses that Mt. Bayabi and Sk. Ismail claimed some sort of interest in the land and thought that they could lawfully appropriate a part of the income for their maintenance. My finding on issue 6 is therefore that the property specified in Sch. A to the petition belongs to the Idgah and respondent 1 is a trustee of that property, but it appears that she has some interest in the property."

[7] The last portion of the paragraph which contains the finding is vague and it is this vagueness which has given rise to several arguments and obliged me to go into the merits of the case.

[8] This revision has been very ably and exhaustively argued on both sides. Dr. Kathaley for Mt. Kulsambi has attacked the jurisdiction of the learned District Judge to decide the matter on several grounds. His first ground is that in view of the Muslim Wakf Act (Act 42 [XLII] of 1923), which was a special Act only for the Muslim community, the general Act, 14 [XIV] of 1920 ceased to apply to trusts by Muslims and the District Judge had therefore no jurisdiction to entertain and decide the application under Act 14 [XIV] of 1920. In my opinion the objection is not sound. The preamble to Act 14 [XIV] of 1920 which is unamended to date makes it quite clear that the Act applies to all trusts created for public purposes of a charitable and religious nature without any distinction of the caste or creed of the author of the trust. The Mussalman Wakf Act (Act 42 [XLII] of 1923) on the other hand by its S. 12 expressly saves all enactments for the time being in force in British India providing for the control and supervision of religious and charitable endowments, and Act 14 [XIV] of 1920 is surely one of the enactments thus saved. In 4 Luck. 429[1] the Full Bench consisting of three eminent Judges of whom two were themselves Musalmans have pointed out the distinction between the aforesaid two Acts and the different spheres of their application. It is clear from the close study of the two Acts that one is not a substitute for the other and further that Act 42 [XLII] of 1923 could not in any event apply to the present case. This Act, as the preamble shows, makes a provision for the better management of the wakf property only. Wakf for the purposes of this Act is defined in S. 2 (e) as a permanent dedication by a person professing the Mussalman faith. It would appear from the history of the grant of the property in question that that was granted in 1818 by the Resident, a British Officer, and this is obviously not a grant by one professing the Mussalman faith. Act 42 [XLII] of 1923 does not provide for any inquiry into the existence or otherwise of the wakf or grant and the Act would obviously cease to apply the moment the wakf is itself denied as was denied in the present case by Mt. Kulsambi : vide I. L. R. (1945) Bom. 257.[2]

[9] In 7 Luck. 601[3] out of the three learned Judges two no doubt took the view that the Mussalman Wakf Act of 1923 does not deprive the District Judge from taking proceedings when the alleged wakf is not admitted or is denied but the learned Judge, Shrivastava J. took a contrary view and he was supported in his view by the decisions in A. I. R. 1927 Pat. 189[4] and 52 ALL. 167.[5]

[10] Besides the aforesaid two Acts special Acts have been enacted in the Province of Bengal (Bengal Act 13 [XIII] of 1934), in the Province of the United Provinces (The United Provinces Muslim Wakf Act, 1936, further amended by Act 11 [XI] of 1937) and in the Province of Bombay (Act 18 [XVIII] of 1935). Of these local Acts only the Bengal Act overrides the Charitable and Religious Trusts Act (Act 14 [XIV] of 1920). In I. L. R. (1944) Nag. 775.[6] which arose out of proceedings between the Muslim parties and in relation to a grant attached to a mosque in Nagpur, the learned Judge, Sen J., observed :

"The provisions under the Charitable and Religious Trusts Act are wider than those under the Mussalman Wakf Act of 1923. The jurisdiction of the District Judge to entertain an application under S. 3, Charitable and Religious Trusts Act is not ousted by the mere denial of trust by the non-applicant or by his setting up an adverse title under S. 10, Mussalman Wakf Act 1923."

I respectfully agree with Sen J. and hold that the District Judge acted within his jurisdiction in entertaining and deciding the application under Act 14 [XIV] of 1920.

[11] Dr. Kathalay further urged that even on the finding reached by the learned District Judge, the jurisdiction under Act 14 [XIV] of 1920 was not attracted. According to him, this Act has no application when the grant is not wholly for a public purpose of a charitable and religious nature and according to the District Judge it was not so as he found that Mt. Kulsambi had some interest in the property. Reliance is placed for this proposition on 4 Luck. 429[1] and also on A.I.R. 1930 Oudh 32.[7] Before examining these cases let us see what the learned District Judge really meant by those particular words vaguely used. According to the learned District Judge the property in suit was granted to the Idgah which was not a private institution and it was granted for the repairs and upkeep of the said Idgah. It is a common knowledge that Sadhus and Fakirs are always attached to a Hindu and Muslim public institution of a charitable or religious nature respectively. They manage the preperty attached to that institution and out of the income thereof maintain the institution and also maintain themselves. As care-takers of the institution, they are not paid any fixed salary but are allowed to maintain themselves out of the income of the institution for the services they render. That is the only interest which a care-taker has and that is what in my opinion was indicated by the learned District Judge in para. 7 of his order. The maintenance of the care-taker of a charitable or religious institution is, in my opinion, a legitimate expenditure in the interest of the institution itself. On p. 155 of 'Principles of Mahomedan Law' by the late Sir Dinshaw Mulla (Edn. 12) the author has mentioned some of the objects which are recognized by the Mahomedan Law as religious, pious or charitable objects. The list includes mosques and provision for Imams to conduct worship therein, provision for Professors in Colleges and even provision for camels and duldul for religious processions during Muharram : vide 7 Pat. 426.[8] It cannot therefore be said that because the care-taker maintains himself or herself out of the income of the grant, that the grant ceases to be a public grant for charitable and religious purposes as contemplated by Act 14 [XIV] of 1920.

[12] In 4 Luck. 429,[1] the particular wakf was by a Mussalman providing for the maintenance of his kindred, dependants and servants, who were in fact the primary and immediate objects of the bounty under the wakf and the question was whether that wakf was for public purposes so as to come within the scope of Act 14 [XIV] of 1920. Their Lordships held that the words public purpose in S. 3 of the Act should not be interpreted in such a sense as to allow a trust which is created or exists for a public purpose in its substance and essence though supplemented by an illusory or wholly trifling provision, the purpose of which may not be public or may be even private, to be taken out of the provisions of the Act of 1920. The real substance of the trust and the primary intention of the creator of trust must be looked at in every case. It would appear from what follows that when this grant was made by the Resident in 1818 it was wholly for public purposes and the maintenance of the Fakir family attached to the Idgah was one of the items of necessary expenses for carrying out the object of the grant. The finding in A. I. R. 1930 Oudh 32[7] that the property was not a wakf property was reached on the evidence in that case. It was held that there was no dedication of the property which on the other hand was always held and enjoyed in private ownership. The following observations of their Lordships are very material :

"However, there is no sufficient evidence in this case to justify the finding that the property in dispute is anyhow dedicated as wakf. The property in dispute was never treated by the parties or their ancestors as wakf property. On the contrary the evidence on the record shows that it was always treated by them as private property. The mere fact that the property was set apart for meeting the expenses of the Dargah would not make it wakf property when the right to assume possession and divide it according to the ancestral shares was reserved in the agreements in question."

[13] The Full Bench case in 4 Luck. 429[1] was considered by the learned Judges of the Allahabad High Court in the case reported in I.L.R. (1938) ALL. 1[9] and at pp. 5 and 6 their Lordships observed :

"The Full Bench must therefore be taken to mean that the Act applies only to cases where the bulk of the income is allotted for public purposes, leaving out of a substantial (I think it should be unsubstantial) amount which may either be illusory or trifling."

In the same case Ganga Nath J. observed at page 10 :

"In the present case there is no doubt that the primary intention of the testator was to create an endowment, with the help of the income of which a chhetra and a dispensary would be established and food and medicines supplied free to the needy and the deserving. Only a small part of the income was set apart for religious purposes, namely the maintenance of the temple. The insignificant sum of Rs. 10 was allotted to the widow for her life only as her maintenance allowance, which was to lapse to charity after her death. The other sum of Rs. 12 was also for religious purposes, namely to meet the expenses of a temple of 'Dariya-nath,' which is not suggested before us to be a private temple. We see no reason to hold that the Act of 1920 is not applicable to this trust merely because a small sum was reserved for those purposes which may not be strictly public purposes."

[14] It is necessary at this stage to look to the history of the present grant. This grant, as appears from the earliest available record i. e. Ex. N. A. 5, order of the Settlement Officer, Nagpur, dated 22-12-1858 A. D., was made in or about the year 1818. There was at that time an Idgah somewhere near the Sitabuldi Fort and Bholashah Fakir was in charge of it. For military purposes, the land with the Idgah was taken over by the then Resident and in lieu of that Bapumiya's Badi (field No. 21) in mouza Hansapuri which had then possibly lapsed to Government and Rs. 2500 were given for construction and maintenance of the 'Idgah'. The Idgah was accordingly constructed over a part of that plot and the Muslim community thereafter began to hold 'Id' prayers in that Idgah. The land was given 'maufi' and still continues to be 'maufi'. It is also clear from that document that the land near the Sitabuldi Fort was also Maufi and that the land granted in lieu of it was specially assigned for the 'urus' (festivity) of the Muslim community. I am told that 'urus' (festivities) are held on the occasion of 'Id' prayers. It is absolutely clear from this document that the grant made in 1818 was a public grant for charitable and religious purposes in the interest of the Muslim community and not a private grant to Bholashah Fakir. It is not disputed before me that this Idgah is used by the Muslim community of Nagpur for offering 'Id' prayers annually. It is further clear from Ex. N. A. 6 (the order of the Settlement Officer dated 19-10-1866) that the maufi was for the repairs and cleaning (upkeep) of the Idgah and it was only on that ground that maufi was recommended to be continued. It further appears from Ex. N. A. 8 that this maufi was sanctioned by the Government of India in 1896. In Ex. N. A. 10 (jamabandi of 1890-91) that Idgah is shown as standing on a portion of this plot which was given No. 57 in that settlement. In the settlement of 1914-15 (vide Ex. A-3 and Ex. N. A. 16) this property is recorded in the name of Idgah through wahiwatdar Sk. Ismail and in Ex. A-4 and Ex. 5 the name of Mt. Bayabi is shown as wahiwatdar of the Idgah. It is thus quite clear that the land was granted for Idgah. Even in the private documents dealing with this property there is a clear mention of the Idgah and of the liability to maintain it out of the income of that property (vide Ex. N. A. 4).

[15] There is no doubt that in the settlement papers of 1890-91 and in other documents 'Idgah' is not specifically mentioned and the maufi field is recorded in the name of Sk. Makbul son of Bholashah Fakir. This is however not in any way inconsistent with the existence of grant for 'Idgah'. It is yet a moot point if a 'mosque' (which would include an Idgah) is a juristic person (vide Mulla's Mahommedan Law p. 189). It is not like a Hindu deity which is well recognised to be a juristic person. There is thus nothing unnatural in the property being recorded in the name of the care-taker of the mosque or 'Idgah'. As observed in 29 N. L. R. 100,[10] the description of a private person as owner in the record-of-rights does not imply that that person is not a mutawalli. Anyway that was set right in the settlement of 1914-15.

[16] It was correctly pointed out by their Lordships of the Privy Council in a case reported in 15 Luck 1,[11] that it is quite possible for a Hindu to have a private temple and though it is certainly possible that in the course of years the temple should have been so dealt with as to become dedicated for the benefit of the Hindu public as a public temple, such a dedication requires to be proved. The dedication in such cases cannot necessarily be inferred from the mere fact that Hindus willing to worship have never been turned away or even that the deity has acquired considerable popularity among Hindus of the locality or among persons resorting to the annual mela. Worshippers are naturally welcome at a private Hindu temple because of the offerings they bring and the repute they give to the idol; they do not have to be turned away on the pain of forfeiture of the temple property as having become property belonging to the temple. There is however a wide difference between the conception of a Hindu temple and a mosque or 'Idgah'. Muslim religion favours congregational prayers and this is specially true of two important 'Id' prayers offered annually. At p. 393, Mahommedan Law by Syed Ammerali, Vol. 1 (Edn. 4) it is pointed out that Idgah (which is also called 'Masallah') is a place where funeral prayers or the prayers of the two 'Id' are usually offered. In such cases only the place where the congregation gather and the worship is performed is governed by the rules governing a mosque. But a piece of ground may be specifically dedicated for the performance of public prayers and though there is no building thereon, if prayers have been habitually performed thereon, it is wakf and subject to the rules governing a mosque. It is further pointed out that even if a man were to build a mosque inside his house it shall be deemed to be dedicated to public by the very fact that prayers are once offered by the public and it is not necessary to prove express dedication. In the Fatwai-Kazi Khan, it is stated that 'the delivery of possession as regards a masjid is complete when only one person has prayed in it with 'Azan' and 'ikamet'. The 'Id' prayers, as is well-known, are congregational prayers and there is abundant evidence in this case apart from the very admission of Mt. Kulsambi that this particular 'Idgah' was built for the benefit of the Musalman public and was as a fact used by the Mussalman public during all these years. There is thus no doubt that the grant made in 1818 was a public grant of charitable and religious nature and the learned District Judge acted with jurisdiction in entertaining and disposing the application under ACT 14 [XIV] of 1920.

[17] Relying on the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council reported in 21 N L R. 1[12] Dr Kathalay contended that the grant in question should at least be construed as a conditional grant, in so far as it imposes a liability to utilize income from the property granted for the upkeep of 'Idgah' and even such grants do not fall within the scope of ACT 14 [XIV] of 1920. Their Lordships were dealing with a grant by a Hindu Raja of Nagpur in favour of a royal physician only so far as the land revenue of a village for the benefit of what appeared to be a private Imam Bara of the physician. Imambara, unlike a mosque or Idgah is an apartment in a private house or building set apart like a private chapel for religious purposes. It is intended for the use of the owner and the incumbents of his family though the public may be admitted with the permission of the owner (vide pp 192 and 193 of the Principles of Mahomedan Law by Mulla). The only question before their Lordships was if the plaintiff Muhammad Raza should be recorded as the full 16 anna mokasdar and mutawalli and their Lordships negatived this prayer in view of the finding reached on the terms and conditions of the particular grant that it was not a wakf.

[18] It has already been pointed out above that the grant in this suit was not a grant 'subconditional.' It was out and out a public grant and the mere fact that the mutawalli was maintaining himself or herself out of the income of the property granted does not make it a private grant or a conditional grant. In fact a care taker or a mutawalli is entitled to a reasonable remuneration for the services rendered and the remuneration can be fixed by the founder or by a Court.

[19] Dr. Kathalay then attacked the finding of the District Judge on the ground that there is no evidence of dedication and on the contrary the fact that the property passed from Bholashah Fakir to his heirs and that it was dealt with as a private property and was a subject of several private transfers without any protest from the Muslim community for over 100 years clearly establishes that that was a private grant. It is clear from what is already stated that a grant made in the interest of a community and for the maintenance of an 'Idgah' essentially a public institution cannot possibly be a private grant and if initially it was not a private grant by the founder, it cannot possibly be turned into a private grant merely by the wrongful acts of the care-takers or mutawallis. Indifference of public towards charitable and religious public grants is quite proverbial and in this particular case the community does not appear to have taken much notice of the private transfers because the Idgah was properly maintained, by whosoever it may be It is quite apparent to me, that Bholashah, Sk. Makbul and Mt. Bayabi were mutawallis of this Idgah and in that capacity they managed the property. They never denied the trust except on one occasion to which reference would be made later and executed private transfers under a mistaken notion of their legal powers The transferees and ultimately even Mt Kulsambi have however admitted the liability to maintain the Idgah. It is no doubt true that in the land acquisition proceedings Mt Bayabi and three other persons represented themselves to be the owners of the 6-50 acres of the wakf property and received compensation paid for the acquired property. This selfish act on the part of Mt Bayabi and others does not in my view change the nature of the grant at least in respect of the property i. e. 1.36 acres which is now the only property left unacquired. It is not necessary to establish the fact of dedication or the appointment of a particular person as a mutwalli, by direct evidence. There is voluminous evidence in this case from which the necessary inference supporting the findings of the learned District Judge can be drawn. In EX. D-9 Mt. Kulsambi has described herself as a mutwalli of the 'Idgah' and this admission is in itself sufficient to support the impugned finding.

[20] In the Privy Council case reported in 43 Cal. 1035[13] the original grant of 1862 was by the Government for the purpose of constructing a mosque for the Sunni Mahomedan community. In 1871 five members of that community acquired additional site and dedicated it for the same purpose in 1872. On this entire area the mosque was constructed. The grant of 1862 vested the control and management of the mosque solely in Randherias (Sunni Mahomedans of Randher near Surat). The dispute arose about the management of the mosque and the Court was moved to frame a scheme of management ignoring the right of management vested in favour of Randherias by the original grant of 1862. Their Lordships observed that the transactions which took place in 1871 and 1872 in no way affected the original grant; the mosque remained as before a public mosque and any scheme of management to be framed should be subject to a provision that so long as circumstances do not vary a majority of the managing community should be of Randherias. It is thus clear that a Court has to look to the original grant in order to determine its nature and purpose; subsequent events and actions or inactions of individuals or of the community cannot change the nature and purpose of the original grant.

[21] It is correctly pointed by the learned District Judge that an inquiry under Act 14 [XIV] of 1920 is after all of a summary nature. Their Lordships of the Privy Council pointed out in 15 Luck. 1[11] that the decision under the Act of 1920 is a decision from which there is no appeal; it is a decision in a summary proceeding which is not a suit and it is not made final by any provision in the Act. It is open for the party aggrieved by the order to file a suit impeaching the order or to raise the question by way of defence in a suit filed by the opposite side. It is a well established rule, though not a rule of law that the High Court is reluctant to interfere with the finding of the lower Court when another remedy is open to the aggrieved party I would have been very slow in this case to interfere with the finding of the learned lower Court assuming I had disagreed with it which I do not. I do by no means lay down that in no case in revision against the order passed under Act 14 [XIV] of 1920 interference is permissible but in my view the present case is not one which satisfies the requirements of S. 115, Civil P. C. and justifies interference in revision.

[22] I do not propose to deal with several other grounds raised in the revision petition but not argued before me. It is not necessary for the applicant in order to invoke the jurisdiction of the District Judge under Act 14 [XIV] of 1920 to allege and prove mal-administration of the trust property. In view of the fact that I agree with the District Judge that the grant in question is a public grant of a charitable and religious nature and that the proceedings in the lower Court were with jurisdiction I dismiss this revision with costs. Counsel's fee Rs. 75 for applicants and non-applicant 1.

Misc. Appeal No. 135 of 1944, Decided on 29 10-1946, from order of Dist. Judge, Wardha, D/- 4-4-1944.

(a) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 21, Rr. 10 and 11 (j)— Application for transfer of decree is not one for execution.

An application which merely asks for transfer of the decree to another Court, or for the sending of a certificate, cannot be said to comply with the requirement of O. 21, R. 11 (j) even if it says that the object is to get property attached hereafter by the other Court. Such application cannot be regarded as an application for execution but is only a step in aid of execution. In order that the other Court may execute the decree either a fresh application for execution or at the least an application for amendment is necessary: Opinion of Grille, J. in 31 A. I. R. 1944 Nag. 80, Not foll.; Case law referred. [Paras 21, 23]

Annotation: ('44-Com.) C. P. C., O. 21, R. 10 N. 8, Pts. 3 and 4; O. 21, R. 11, N. 12.

(b) Limitation Act (1908, Art. 182 (5) — Execution application defective materially — Application for amendment beyond time—Maintainability.

Obiter. — As it is a rule of practice that fundamental amendments should not be allowed when the matter is beyond time, no application for amendment of an application for execution which is defective in material particulars can succeed if made more than three years from the date on which the original application was disposed of, or more than twelve years from the date of the decree. [Para 23]

Annotation: ('42-Com.) Lim. Act, Art. 182, N. 86a.

(c) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 48 — Fresh application— Later application setting out mode in which assistance of Court is desired—Previous application not setting out such mode.

An application cannot be regarded as an application in revival of a previous application unless it is of the same nature. If any relief different from that claimed in the previous one is asked for, or any new property is sought to be attached or sold, it cannot be treated as a mere revival but is a fresh application within the meaning of S. 48 Therefore if the later application, unlike the previous one, sets out the mode in which the assistance of the Court is desired, it is a fresh application and as such will be beyond time if made more than twelve years after the previous application unless it can be cured by S. 48 (2): 21 A. I. R. 1934 All. 481 (F. B.), Rel. on. [Para 26]

(d) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 21, R. 6 — Act of giving certificate, if ministerial.

The act of giving a certificate incorporating the extent of the decree or of the satisfaction is a judicial one and not merely ministerial. [Para 28]

Annotation: ('44-Com.) C. P. C., O. 21, R. 6, N. 1.

(e) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 48 (2)—Fraud or force — Judgment-debtor contesting execution application to delay execution — Contest upheld by trial Court and High Court Judge.

Fraud, within the meaning of S. 48 (2), must be of a nature which the decree holder is not able to discover at the time and helps the judgment-debtor in deceiving him and gaining time. There can be no fraud unless there is a mistake of fact and the other side is misled by it. On a contest in a Court of law there is no mistake as to fact when the other side knows the facts and contests them, setting out a different set of facts, and is not misled. Therefore, the fact that the judgment-debtor contests the decree-holder's application only with a view to delay the execution of the decree cannot amount either to force or fraud. Nor can a contest which is upheld by the trial Court and also by a Judge of the High Court be termed frivolous so as to amount to fraud: 9 A. I. R. 1922 All. 145, Dissent.; 18 A. I. (f) Limitation Act (1908), S. 14 (1)—Fundamental position contemplated by sub-section pointed out.

The fundamental position contemplated by S. 14 (1) is that the person seeking to avail himself of its provisions was prosecuting a proceeding founded upon the same cause of action in a Court which from defect of jurisdiction or other cause of a like nature was unable to entertain it. [Para 36]

(g) Limitation Act (1908), S. 14 — Good faith — Execution application — Omission to set out mode of execution and property to be attached and sold —Limitation Act (1908), S. 2 (7).

An execution application, if it is intended for purposes of execution, cannot be said to have been made with due care and attention and, therefore, in good faith, if it omits to set out the mode in which the assistance of the Court is required and omits to set out the property which the decree-holder wants to be attached and brought to sale. [Para 37]

Annotation : ('42-Com.) Lim. Act, S. 2 (7), N. 1, S. 14, N. 20.

(h) Limitation Act (1908), S. 15—Applicability — Execution application not executable but pending.

Where the application for execution filed on 18-1-1934 could not be executed between 15-9-1938 and 9-4-1942 because of judgment of a single Judge of the High Court upholding the decision of the lower Court that the application was barred by time but the matter was still pending because a Letters Patent appeal was allowed, and when the Division Bench reversed the decision of the single Judge on 9-4-1942 it was open to the decree-holder to continue with his original application, but that application was useless for purposes of execution because of the defects therein and, therefore, he was compelled to file a second application :

Held, that the second application could not be given the benefit of S. 15, and as regards the former application there was no question of S. 15 because it was still pending on 9-4-1942 when the Division Bench gave its judgment. [Para 38]

V. V. Kolkar — for Appellants.

M. Adhikari — for Respondent,

Judgment. — The question here is whether the respondent's application for execution dated 9-1-1943 is in time. This depends upon the validity of the previous application dated 18-1-1934. The respondent's contention is that the application of 9-1-1943 is not a fresh application but is one seeking revival of the application of 18-1-1934, which, according to the respondent, is still alive.

[2] It will be necessary to trace the history of these executions from the outset. The decree was passed on 23-12-1926 in favour of the respondent's father against Balkrishna and Sadasheo with whom we are no longer concerned.

[3] The first application made in the execution Court (the second Sub-Judge, Second Class, Wardha) was dated 1-2-1927. All it asked was that :

"Defendants are at Warud . . . District Yeotmal .... therefore certificate may be sent to the Court at Yeotmal for (illegible) immovable property."

It set out no details of property. It asked for no attachment, nor did it suggest any mode of execution. The certificate was sent to Yeotmal on 23-2-1927 and the Wardha Court wrote in its order sheet : "Struck off by transfer."

[4] After this the judgment-debtor Balkrishna died sometime in November 1928 and the decree-holders applied on 16-3-1929 to have his widow Indirabai substituted. This was done on 5-7-1929. All this occurred in the Wardha Court. The certificate was recalled from Yeotmal. It was corrected, and was sent back to Yeotmal on 5-7-1929. No further steps were taken in Yeotmal and so the Yeotmal Court returned the certificate to the Court at Wardha on 21-3-1930.

[5] In the meanwhile the judgment-debtor Indirabai, who had been substituted in place of the original judgment-debtor Balkrishna, died. An application was made in the Wardha Court on 17-4-1930 to bring on record her legal representative, another Indirabai (wife of one Vinayakrao). This is the Indirabai we are concerned with here. She is respondent 1 to this appeal. This application was allowed and the substitution was made on 29-8-1930.

[6] On the same day, 17-4-1930, and in the same application, the decree-holders asked, as before, that the certificate be sent to Yeotmal. This part of the application was dismissed for default on 26-9-1930.

[7] Thereafter, another application was made on 14-10-1930 with the same prayer that it be sent to Yeotmal. This time the application added:

"Immovable property in the Yeotmal district belonging to the defendant is to be attached and hence certificate may be prepared and sent to . . . Yeotmal."

But no list of property was set out. The certificate was sent on 25-10-1930.

[8] After this, on 21-2-1931, the decree-holders again applied to have the present Indirabai (wife of Vinayakrao) substituted in place of the deceased Indirabai and asked that the certificate be recalled from the Yeotmal Court. This was done but only to discover on 8-4-1931 that the substitution had already been effected. Accordingly the certificate was returned to Yeotmal on the same date, 8-4-1931.

[9] After this, Shankerlal, one of the decree-holders died and an application for substitution was made in the Wardha Court on 17-8-1931. The substitution was effected on 24-9-1931. The Civil Court registers were corrected and intimation was sent to the Yeotmal Court on the same date.

[10] On 3-11-1933 the Yeotmal Court returned the certificate to Wardha as barred by time.

[11] Then comes the application with which we are concerned. It was made in the Wardha Court on 18-1-1934. It set out the various deaths and the steps taken for substitution and concluded :

"Therefore an order to call the certificate and send it after amending it may be passed."

The Wardha Court granted the prayer so far as it asked for the certificate to be sent to Yeotmal, and on 20-4-1930 directed that it be sent there. (It will be recalled that the previous certificate had been returned on 3-11-1933 and so on the date of this application there was no certificate in Yeotmal).

[12] On 23-7-1935 one of the decree-holders, Prayagdas, attained majority, and asked in the Wardha Court that he be shown as major, and further asked that intimation of this fact be sent to the Yeotmal Court for transmission to the Court at Chandur in the Yeotmal District.

[13] Before any steps could be taken on this the other decree-helder Govindlal died and so an application was made in Wardha on 18-10-1935 for substitution.

[15] I upheld this order in second appeal on the ground that the application of 17-8-1931 for substitution was not a step-in-aid and consequently the application of 18-1-1934 was beyond time. My decision was reversed on Letters Patent appeal and the Division Bench held that the application of 18-1-1934 was in time The Letters Patent decision is reported in I. L. R. (1943) Nag. 734.[1]

[16] The questions which now arise are, (1) whether the application of 18-1 1934 is an application for ex cution and (2) whether it is still alive. The application of 9-1-1943 is more than twelve years from the date of the decree and so unless there is fraud within the meaning of S. 48 (2), Civil P. C. it is barred by time. The decree-holders contend there was fraud but that is an alternative case. Their main contention is that the application of 18-1-1934 had not been disposed of and so is still alive and the application of 9-1-1943 must be regarded as one seeking revival of the former application.

[17] It is to be observed that the present point was not raised in either of the lower Courts. The application of 9-1-1943 alone was pressed as a fresh and independent application for execution. However, as the question is one of law, I allowed it to be argued here.

[18] It will have to be accepted, after the Letters Patent appeal, that the application of 18-1-1934 was within time, but the question now arises whether it is a valid application for execution. Grille J. (as he then was) evidently considered that it was because at p. 737 dealing with a prior application of 14-10-1930 which was substantially the same as the one of 18-1-1934, he said:

"In my opinion there was an execution application pending, namely that of 14-10-1930. The application was in proper form . . . and the application was transferred to the Yeotmal Court."

Now the application of 14-10-1930 merely said :

"Immoveable property in the Yeotmal District belonging to the defendant in the above suit is to be attached and hence certificate may be prepared and sent to . . . Yeotmal."

The application of 18-1-1934 asked no more. It merely asked that the certificate be sent to Yeotmal after amending it.

[19] Grille J. held as to this that :

"No authority has been advanced for the proposition that when a decree has been transferred for execution from one Court to another that application loses its force and does not become an application for execution until a further application for execution is made in the Court to which the application has been transferred."

Pollock J. expressed no opinion on this point and said :

"It does not seem to me to be material whether there was an application for execution pending or not."

Therefore, I am not bound by Grille J.'s opinion on this point it not being the decision of the Bench. All that binds me is that the application of 18-1-1934 was in time.

[20] With the utmost respect to Grille J. his opinion seems to overlook O. 21, R. 10, Civil P. C., which says :

"Where the holder of a decree desires to execute it, he shall apply . . . if the decree has been sent under the provisions hereinbefore contained to another Court then to such Court . . . "

Sir Dinsha Mulla says as to this in his Civil Procedure Code, Edn. 11, p. 203 :

"An application to transfer a decree to another Court for execution is not an application for execution," it is only a step-in-aid, and the learned author relies on 20 ALL. 78,[2] 16 Cal. 744,[3] 22 Cal. 921,[4] 35 Bom. 103,[5] 34 ALL. 896[6] and 17 Lah. 13[7] to which 56 ALL. 791[8] can be added.

[21] The ingredients which an application for execution should contain are set out in O. 21, R. 11, namely—

"(j) the mode in which the assistance of the Court is required," and five different modes are set out in detail. It is difficult to see how an application which merely asks for transfer of the decree to another Court, or for the sending of a certificate, can be said to comply with this requirement even if it says that the object is to get property (which incidentally is not specified) attached hereafter by the other Court.

[22] In 19 Bom. 34[9] an application which did not specify the mode in which the assistance of the Court was required was rejected and in 32 Bom. L. R. 1368[10] an application of that kind was held not to be one in accordance with law within the meaning of Art. 182, Limitation Act. The Calcutta High Court took the same view in A. I. R. 1925 Cal. 1135.[11] B. B. Mitra has collected a number of cases round the same point in his Limitation Act, Edn. 11, p. 949 and says that it is not in accordance with law

"if the defects in the application are of a material character and the Court cannot proceed to execution unless they are amended (e. g., if the application does not comply with the requirements of O. 21, Rr. 11-14)."

[23] With the utmost respect, I fail to see how any Court could execute the decree on either the application of 14-10-1930 or of 18-1-1934. It is evident to me that a further application would have to be made, either a fresh application for execution or at the least an application for amendment. No application for amendment has been made up to the present moment and as it is a rule of practice that fundamental amendments should not be allowed when the matter is beyond time, it is clear that no application for amendment could succeed if made now. Any such application would be beyond time for two reasons. First, because it would be more than three years from 3-11-1933, the date on which the application of 3-11-1933 was disposed of, and second because it would be more than 12 years from the date of the decree. Therefore, even if the application of 18-1-1934 be treated as within time (and that of course it must now be) and even if it be treated as an application for execution, it is one only for the limited purpose of taking the first step, namely to get the decree transferred to another Court. My own view is that it cannot be regarded as an application for execution. It is only a step-in-aid of execution. It only asks that the decree be transferred to another Court to enable it to be executed. It does not in itself ask for execution.

[24] But even if it be regarded as an execution application, it cannot be carried further than its substance warrants; therefore, as the decree cannot be executed on the application as it stands, a further application would be necessary, and as that application would be infructuous because of limitation, I hold that the application has expended itself and therefore the lower Courts were right in directing the papers to be filed.

[25] It was held in 2 Pat. 909[12] that if an application merely asks for transfer of a decree it cannot be regarded as an application for execution and that a fresh application would be necessary in the transferee Court, but if it sets out in addition the mode in which the assistance of the Court is required, then no fresh application need be made in the transferee Court. That is a matter on which I express no opinion and of course if Grille J. was limiting his remarks to that it would not be necessary for me to dissent, at any rate in this case, but as I see it he considered that the application of 14-10-1930 was in proper form as an execution application and that therefore no further application was necessary in the transferee Court. That is where, with the utmost respect, I am compelled to differ.

[26] Now as regards the application of 9-1-1943 it cannot, in my opinion, be regarded as an application in revival of the application of 18-1-1934 unless it is of the same nature. And as to that I agree with Sulaiman C. J. in Allahabad Full Bench, 56 ALL. 791[8] that "if any relief different from that claimed in the previous one is asked for, or any new property is sought to be attached or sold, it cannot be treated as a mere revival but is a fresh application within the meaning of S. 48, Civil P. C."

Therefore, if the application of 9-1-1943 sets out the mode in which the assistance of the Court is desired, it is a fresh application and as such is beyond time unless it can be cured by S. 48 (2). If, on the other hand, it does no more than ask for a transfer of the decree to another Court, then it is not competent as an execution application for the same reasons as apply to the applications of 18-1-1934 and 14-10-1930. As a matter of fact that is all it does except for one matter which does not touch the decree of 23-12-1926. It is true it says that "Property in Chandur has been attached," but we know that that is inaccurate. We are now in possession of all the facts and it it clear that there has not been any attachment and that in point of fact nothing is pending in either the Chandur or the Yeotmal Court so far as this decree is concerned.

[27] It was argued on the strength of 2 Pat. 909[12] that these matters should not be considered at this stage. It was said that when a Court transfers a decree for execution from one Court to another, it is only performing a ministerial act which can even be done ex parte. Therefore, all that can be done in the present case is to transfer the decree for execution to Yeotmal and leave the Yeotmal Court or the Chandur Court to work out these problems if and when they arise.

[28] I do not agree. Order 21, R. 6, requires the Court which passed the decree to certify certain matters to the Court to which the decree is to be transferred for execution, among them the fact that satisfaction has not been obtained or that it has been obtained in part. Now this is not a mere ministerial act. It may be necessary in certain cases to determine either the extent of the decree or the extent of the satisfaction. Such matters are constantly being debated in the executing Courts and they have to be decided judicially and not ministerially. Therefore, the act of giving a certificate incorporating these facts is a judicial one and not merely ministerial. Now it is well settled that a Court will not order things which are unnecessary or which are bound to be infructuous in the end. They will not unnecessarily prolong litigation. Therefore, it is the duty of the Court which passed the decree to satisfy itself that the decree it is transferring is a live decree which is still capable of execution. One aspect of this is reflected in O. 21, R. 6. If the decree has been fully satisfied, obviously the Court which passed the decree cannot transfer it. It cannot give a certificate of full satisfaction and leave the second Court to determine its accuracy. The transferee Court is bound by the certificate and cannot go behind it. In the same way, if the decree is dead for other reasons, the Court which passed it should, in normal circumstances, determine the matter. It certainly has jurisdiction to do so. It may be proper in certain cases to leave the matter open but in a case like the present the matter ought, in my opinion, to be decided at the outset.

[29] I will now deal with the alternative case of force or fraud under S. 48 (2), Civil P. C, which was argued before me. The matter was pleaded in the petition of the decree-holder dated 19th April 1943. The only details of the force or fraud given are these.

[30] In para. 4 of the petition the decree-holder stated that after 23rd June 1942, which is the date on which the decree-holder's application was struck off,

"the applicant Misrilal approached the judgment-debtor for payment and she agreed to make payment by 15th December 1942 to the decree-holder. For this the decree-holders agreed. But as no payment was made by her the decree-holder has filed this petition. The talk took place with Mr. V. S. Harkare at Varud in Yeotmal District."

[31] This plea was found by the trial Court to be false, and in view of Misrilal's evidence, there can be no doubt about the correctness of that finding. Misrilal was examined as A. W. 1 and he stated that the talk referred to in the above paragraph took place after 9th January 1943. That knocks the bottom out of the case set out in the petition, namely, that it took place before the decree holder filed the petition and that consequently he was misled, thinking in good faith that she would fulfil her promise and pay the decree. This aspect of the fraud was given up in this Court.

[32] The other details regarding the fraud are simply that the judgment-debtor has been contesting the decree-holder's applications only with the view to delay the execution of the decree. It is urged that that is either force or fraud, and reliance is placed on 44 ALL. 319.[13]

[33] With the utmost respect to the learned Judges who decided that case, I am unable to see how a contest which the law permits and which is carried out in open Court can amount either to force or to fraud. This decision was not approved in a later Allahabad decision, namely, 53 ALL. 419[14] at p. 421. I respectfully agree with the learned Judges in the later case that :

"Fraud must be of a nature which the decree-holder is not able to discover at the time and which helps the judgment-debtor in deceiving him and gaining time."

The previous Allahabad decision was also not followed in 14 Pat. 816[15] at p. 822. Wort J. holds there that it is neither force nor fraud when the judgment-debtor takes advantage of the procedure allowed by the law and contests an execution application.

[34] It was said that that may be the case when there is substance in the contest, but when the objections made are frivolous then they must be regarded as fraud. Again, I am unable to agree. There can be no fraud unless there is a mistake as to fact and the other side is misled by it. In a contest in a Court of law there is no mistake as to fact when the other side knows the facts and contests them, setting out a different set of facts. He is not misled, and as regards the law, every one is taken to know the law and consequently, whatever legal propositions are set up, there is no fraud ; again, the other side is not misled because he contests and contends that the law is otherwise. There can be no fraud when a person is not deceived and knows the facts.

[35] But that apart, the objections taken here can hardly be described as frivolous. The trial Court upheld them and so did I in second appeal. The District Judge took the other view and so did the Division Bench in the Letters Patent appeal, and of course the decision of the Division Bench must prevail. but a contest which is upheld by the trial Court and also by a Judge of this Court can hardly be termed frivolous. I hold that there was neither force nor fraud within the meaning of S. 48 (2) and that therefore the decree-holder cannot get the benefit of that sub section.

[36] The decree-holder then fell back on S. 14, Limitation Act, but that, in my opinion, has no application because the fundamental position there is that the person seeking to avail himself of its provisions was prosecuting a proceeding founded upon the same cause of action in a Court which from defect of jurisdiction or other cause of a like nature was unable to entertain it. The only applications germane to this question which were presented in the lower Courts at all relevant times were petitions for transfer of the decree from the Wardha Court to the Yeotmal Court. These applications were in every case allowed. The Courts had jurisdiction to entertain them and therefore the fundamental position contemplated by S. 14 (1) does not arise. No application for execution was ever made to the Yeotmal Court and, as I have already held, it was impossible for any Court to execute the decree on these applications for transfer. The mode in which the assistauce of the Court was sought was not set out, the property to be attached and sold was not mentioned, nor were any of the other matters which form the essentials of an execution application set out therein. Consequently they were incapable of execution and therefore are not founded on the same cause of action as the present application which we are considering.

[37] That apart, the application must have been prosecuted in good faith. Good faith is defined in S. 2, Limitation Act to require due care and attention. An execution application, if it is intended for purposes of execution, cannot be said to have been made with due care and attention if it omits to set out the mode in which the assistance of the Court is required and omits to set out the property which the decree-holder wants attached and brought to sale. Therefore on all grounds S. 14 has no application.

[38] As regards S. 15, Limitation Act, which was also relied on, there was no stay either by injunction or order of any Court. It is true that the application of 18th January 1934 could not have been executed between 15th September 1938 and 9th April 1942 because of my judgment, but the matter was still pending because a Letters Patent appeal was allowed, and when the Division Bench reversed my decision on 9th April 1942 it was open to the decree-holder to continue with his original application. But, as I have already held, that application is useless for purposes of execution because of the defects I have set out above. Therefore he was compelled to file a second application. The second application cannot be given the benefit of S. 15, and as regards the former application, there is no question of S. 15 because it was still pending on 9th April 1942 when the Division Bench gave its judgment. I am of opinion that the execution application we are considering is barred by time.

[39] This, however, concerns the matter only in so far as the application applies to the decree of 23rd December 1926. But it also refers to the decree for costs of the High Court in Letters Patent appeal dated 9th April 1942. In so far as it seeks execution of that decree it is competent. It is within three years of the decree and so is in time. The lower Courts were therefore wrong in refusing to proceed with the application in so far as it relates to the High Court's decree for costs.

[40] The result is that the orders of the lower Courts are upheld so far as they relate to the decree of 23rd December 1926. They are, however, reversed in so far as they relate by implication to the decree of the High Court.

[41] As regards costs, the decree-holder has been extremely dilatory and did not raise most of the present contentions in the lower Courts, nor did he separate the application of 9th January 1943 into two parts as he has done here. Also the success is small as compared to the failure so I think it right that the appellants should pay the respondent's costs hitherto incurred in all three Courts. Costs subsequent to this will be as directed by the Court or Courts concerned. Counsel's fee Rs. 25.

Misc. Second Appeals Nos. 150 and 151 of 1941, Decided on 8th July 1946, from order of Dist. Judge, Akola, D/- 3rd May 1941.

Civil P. C. (1908), S. 60 (g) — Jagir with annual compensatory allowances not burdened with condition of service but resumable — Allowances, if attachable.

A jagir and certain annual money allowances (forming part of the jagir grant) granted inter alia by way of compensation on account of forest dues if not burdened with any condition of service, must be treated as personal property of the holder and there is nothing in S. 60 to exempt the amount of allowance from attachment while it is in the hands of the Government and before it reaches the hands of the judgment-debtor, in execution of a decree against the holder of the jagir : 8 A. I. R. 1921 Mad. 292 ; 14 A. I. R. 1927 Mad. 140 and 19 A. I. R. 1932 Mad. 417, Rel. on. [Paras 6, 12]

Even if the jagir and the allowances are absolutely inalienable, the inalienability attaches only to the right to receive the allowances and not to the specific amount as it accrued due every year. [Para 7]

The annual payment constitutes a debt payable by the grantor to the grantee every year even though the amount is payable on a future date. It may be that for a breach of the condition of loyalty laid down in the sanad the whole jagir as well as the allowances which are liable to be resumed, would be liable to be withheld. But until that is done the grantee would be perfectly free to enjoy the amount that he receives every year in any way he chooses : Case law referred. [Para 11]

A. V. Khare and T. B. Pendharkar—for Appellant.
M. Adhikari — for Respondent.

Judgment. — This appeal and Miscellaneous (Second) Appeal No. 151 of 1941 arise out of two execution proceedings started by two creditors separately against the respondent Raje Chainsing. Both the creditors applied for a prohibitory order by way of attachment of the sum of Rs. 2210-5-7 which the respondent receives every year from the Government through the Divisional Forest Officer, Akola. That amount is payable every year as an allowance by way of compensation for forest dues under a sanad granted to the respondent's ancestors by Government on 28th October 1896. The executing Court held that the allowances which are payable to the judgment-debtor were not liable to attachment. The lower appellate Court, agreeing with the executing Court, dismissed the appeal. This order governs the disposal of both the appeals.

[2] Three contentions are put forward on behalf of the appellants decree-holders: (1) That the contention as to the attachability or otherwise of the amount in the hands of Government is barred by virtue of two decisions, one reported in A. I. R. 1930 Nag. 134[1] and another Misc. Appeal No. 249 of 1937 ;[2] (2) That the respondent had himself paid the amounts of Rs. 400 and Rs. 200 out of the amount under consideration in the previous execution applications so as to preclude him from pleading that it was unattachable ; (3) That the condition of inalienability imposed by the sanad related to the right to receive the allowance and not the allowance as it became actually payable every year.

[3] The first two points are devoid of any substance. There was no plea that the decision in A. I. R. 1930 Nag. 134[1] operated as res judicata obviously because the parties there were different. Nor can the decision in Misc Appeal No. 249 of 1937[2] do so as the learned Chief Justice himself made it clear, in rejecting a review application in his order refusing leave to file Letters Patent appeal, that anything decided by him was not of a binding nature since the money had already been received by the judgment-debtor before the attachment.

[4] The second point had been abandoned in the lower appellate Court, and it is in itself devoid of force as the payments made in the previous executions cannot possibly operate as estoppel against the respondent.

[5] That leaves only the last point which involves the consideration of the question whether the money, while it is in the hands of the Government and before it reaches the hands of the judgment-debtor, is liable to attachment. For the proper appreciation of the point in issue it is necessary to state that under the sanad issued to the ancestor of the respondent by the Resident at Hyderabad under the authority of the Government of India, four villages, namely, Anar, Rohin Khirkhi, Salwan and Khardeo, were granted as a Jagir along with certain money allowances inter alia by way of compensation on account of forest dues amounting to Rs. 1561-15-7 which were payable annually subject to the following conditions among others :

"That the said Jagir and the said allowances, viz. Jaglia cess and compensation for forest dues, being service grants shall on no account be alienated by the said Raja or his successors either by sale or mortgage or in any other manner without the previous sanction of the Resident in writing."

[6] The learned counsel for the appellant conceded that for the sake of argument the allowances may well be regarded as forming part and parcel of the Jagir grant. It is on this footing that he based his argument that although the sanad described the Jagir and the allowances as service grants there is no obligation imposed upon the grantee to perform any public service. It was in reality a grant for the maintenance of the grantee and his successors. In 44 Mad. 632[3] it was held that unenfranchised inam lands granted not for future public or private services but as a matter of favour for the maintenance of the donee and his heirs are liable to attachment and sale in execution of a decree against the holder of the inam. It was there pointed out that any condition prohibiting alienation of the inam was merely intended to indicate that the Government had the right of resumption in consequence of the prohibited alienation. That condition relating to prohibition was held as not based on any ground of public policy except the protection of the right of the grantee. The same view was taken in 50 Mad. 441[4] and A. I. R 1932 Mad. 417.[5] As the Jagir is not burdened with any condition of service it must be treated as personal property of the holder and there is nothing in S. 60, Civil P. C., to exempt it from attachment.

[7] Even on the assumption that the Jagir and the allowances were absolutely inalienable the inalienability would attach only to the right to receive the allowances and not to the specific amount as it accrued due every year. The attachment in the present case is not directed against the incorporeal right to receive the allowances but against a particular sum which the respondent is entitled to receive from the Government. It is not contended, as it could not well be done in view of A. I. R. 1930 Mad. 134,[1] that the allowances constituted a pension. But it is urged that it could not constitute a debt as under the terms of the sanad it was liable to be withheld by the Government for the breach of any of the conditions laid down in the sanad. The only important condition is that the tenure of the grant is made dependent on the loyalty to the British Government. But that is a condition which is attached ordinarily to all such grants. The right of the grantee to enjoy the income of the jagir or the allowances as they accrue every year would not be jeopardised until he has committed a breach of the fundamental condition of the tenure of the grant and there is no plea that on account of the breach of condition the Government have withheld or intended to withhold the allowance. The annual allowances stand on the same footing as income from the Jagir.

[8] It is, however, contended that the respondent's right until the money is actually paid to him is an inchoate and contingent right like the right of a person entitled to periodical maintenance. Strong reliance is placed on 27 Cal. 38[6] in support of the argument. That case is clearly distinguishable on its facts. In that case half of the maintenance allowance which accrued due for the period extending from September 1888 to November 1890 was attached in anticipation on 5th August 1887. The attachment was held to be invalid as it was not an attachment of any existing debt but was of an anticipatory character. The amount, which was intended to be attached, could not become a debt if the maintainee had died before September 1888 as the maintenance allowance had been granted only for life. This case is wholly inapposite for the obvious reason that the respondent in the present case is entitled to receive the allowance by way of compensation for the loss of certain dues from the forest which, before the sanad, his ancestors were levying The allowance is of the nature of a proprietary right and not a personal right as the allowance would be payable by Government even after the death of the respondent to his heirs 27 Cal. 38[6] was distinguished on this ground in 9 C. W. N. 703[7] as also in 23 ALL. 164.[8] In the latter case the judgment-debtor had sold his property to the Court of Wards for consideration part of which was received by him in cash and part of which was left as an annuity payable to him. In the sale deed there was a condition whereby the judgment-debtor was not to alienate such annuity. The learned Judges who decided the case distinguished the case in 27 Cal. 38[6] and held that the annuity was in the nature of deferred payment and as such was not exempt from attachment. The learned Judges referred to 14 M.I.A. 40[9] as the authority for the proposition that even future maintenance could be attached.

[9] The learned counsel for the respondent has invited our attention to A. I. R. 1941 Rang. 256,[10] A I.R. 1942 Lah. 275[11] and A I.R 1943 Bom. 258.[12] These cases are in no way helpful to him. In the Rangoon case the question arose in regard to an amount in the Provident Fund which was not payable until the death of the subscriber. In the Lahore case there was an attachment of certain sum which the vendor had left with the vendee for payment to his creditors, and it was held that unpaid purchase price left with the vendee was a debt due by him to the vendor and that it was liable to attachment in execution of a money decree. In the Bombay case the amount which was payable as remuneration by the Collecter of Nasik to the Inamdar for some specified services which he was bound to render to the Government was held not attachable on the ground of public policy. The reason given was that if the moneys due to the Inamdar in the hands of the Government can be attached before they are paid over to the Inamdar the object of the grant would be defeated because there would be nothing to ensure that the Inamdar would be in a financial position to enable him to carry out his services. As has been already shown above there are no services attached to the grant in the present case.

[10] A case which comes very near the present one is to be found in 8 C.W.N. 665.[13] In that case there was a grant of an annual sum made by Government as a compensation for the loss sustained by the grantee on account of the resumption of the grant of the rent-free lands which formerly belonged to the grantee. The contention was raised that it was in the nature of pension and therefore, unattachable. That contention was overruled and it was held that the allowance was not exempt from attachment under the Civil Procedure Code.

[11] It is manifestly unreasonable to say that a specific cash allowance which has accrued or is to accrue due is inalienable. The cash payment could not be intended for any purpose other than personal use of the grantee. It is inconceivable that a specific sum which accrues due every year could ever be intended to be inalienable as it would run counter to the very purpose for which the money is payable. In the present case the annual payment is made in recognition of a proprietary right which the grantee's ancestor's enjoyed and the amount as it accrues due every year would certainly constitute debt payable by the grantor to the grantee every year even though the amount is payable on a future date. It may be that for a breach of the condition of loyalty the whole Jagir as well as the allowances which were liable to be resumed would be liable to be withheld. But until that is done the grantee in the present case would be perfectly free to enjoy the amount that he receives every year in any way he chooses. The mere existence of a condition prohibiting alienation of the corpus of an incorporeal right does not affect in any way the disposing power of the grantee over the usufruct arising periodically from it. That seems to be the principle of the decision in 59 Cal. 1[14] which was followed by Stone C. J. in Misc. Appeal No. 249 of 1937.[2]

[12] For the foregoing reasons we dissent from the lower appellate Court and hold that the allowance was not exempt from attachment. We accordingly allow these appeals with costs in all the Courts. Counsel's fees in each case Rs. 40.

A. V. Khare — for Appellant.

M. R. Bobde and P. R. Padhye — for Respondent.

Judgment. — This is a miscellaneous (First) appeal against the order of Mr. Adharsinha, Subordinate Judge, First Class, Chhindwara, in Execution Case in Civil Suit No. 8-B of 1934 passed on 12-8 1941.

[2] The facts are quite simple. The appellant (decree-holder) obtained a decree against the respondent (judgment-debtor) on 16-8-1934 in Civil Suit No. 8 of 1934. On 6-8-1937 the decree-holder applied for transfer of the decree from Chhindwara to Nagpur and on 13-8-1937 the decree was ordered to be transferred and a certificate of non-satisfaction was also granted. In the meantime, the judgment-debtor had applied for instalments and a stay order was passed by this Court on 21-9-1937. On this the Court recalled the certificate on 27-9-1937. The judgment-debtor was asked to furnish security but he failed to do so and on 5-11-1937 the Court ordered that the certificate be sent again for necessary action. Thereafter the decree-holder applied for transfer of the decree on 26-9-1940 and on 12-8-1941 the application was dismissed by the learned Judge as being barred by limitation.

[3] The decree-holder tries to save limitation in various ways. His first contention is that from 20-4-1938 till 25-12-1938 the matter was pending before the Debt Conciliation Board and hence under S. 23, C. P. Debt Conciliation Act that period must be excluded. He further says that the judgment-debtor in his application to the Board had shown this decretal amount as being due and this amounts to an acknowledgment under S. 19, Limitation Act and gives a fresh period of limitation from 20-4-1938, which is the date of the application before the Board Ex. C-4 He also says that on 30-9-1937 the counsel for the judgment debtor admitted the liability for the decretal amount in his memo of appeal before the High Court and therefore that too gives a fresh start of limitation and the present application of 26-9-1940 would be within 3 years from that date. It is obvious that even if one of these contentions is correct the limitation is saved and the execution is competent.

[4] Mr. Bobde who appeared for the respondent attacked the first application for transfer of the decree and said that that application did not save limitation because it cannot be said to be 'a step-in-aid of execution' because before there can be a step-in-aid of execution, there must be an execution pending. He relied on 45 Mad. 466[1] in support of his contention. There is a considerable difference of opinion on the question whether the phrase 'step-in-aid' of execution postulates that there must be an execution pending. Even in the Madras High Court the decisions are not uniform and very recently their Lordships of the Privy Council noted this difference of opinion though it was not necessary in that case to pronounce any opinion. See 1946 A. L. J. 268.[2] The view expressed in 45 Mad. 466[1] was doubted in 50 Mad. 49[3] and so far that High Court is concerned the matter is now settled by the Full Bench decision in I. L. R. (1945) Mad. 468[4] which expressly overrules 45 Mad. 466.[1] It is, therefore, not necessary that there must be an execution pending before action by the decree-holder can be described as a step-in-aid of execution. This is also the view expressed in I. L. R. (1939) ALL. 728,[5] 7 Pat. 703.[6] A similar view appears to have been taken by Pollock J. in I. L. R. (1943) Nag. 734.[7] These cases have my respectful concurrence and I am of opinion that a step-in-aid of execution can be taken before an application for execution of the decree has been made in Court. It has been held in a large number of cases that an application for the transfer of a decree to another Court is a step-in-aid of execution. See I. L. R. (1939) ALL. 97,[8] 35 ALL. 389,[9] I. L. R. (1940) 2 Cal. 252[10] and the cases cited therein. I respectfully agree with those decisions and hold that the application dated 6-8-1937 and the order dated 13-8 1937 on it were steps-in-aid of execution and therefore the execution is not barred as contended by the respondent.

[5] Learned counsel for the respondent next argued that S. 23, C. P. Debt Conciliation Act applies only when the application has been properly made to the Board and the Board has jurisdiction to entertain it. Learned counsel says that the important words in S. 23 of the Act are "proceedings under the Act" and action on an application filed before the Board which could not lie there, is not a proceeding under the Act. This is sufficiently answered by Pollock J in I. L. R. (1944) Nag. 244.[11] It is to be remembered also that the application was filed by the judgment-debtor to get the decree suspended and now having got his objective he is turning round and avoiding S. 23. However, the legal position under S. 23 is clear and a proceeding wrongly begun before the Board is no less a proceeding under the Act, and the time spent before the Board can be deducted.

[6] This is sufficient to dispose of the present matter before me and it is not necessary to discuss the other grounds on which limitation is sought to be saved. Even there the judgment-debtor is perhaps not in a better position. In I. L. R. (1944) Nag. 244[11] and I. L. R. (1941) Nag. 761[12] Pollock J. held that an acknowledgment of liability in the application before the Board gives a fresh start of limitation and these cases were approved in I. L. R. (1946) Nag. 493.[13] The contrary view in 1941 N. L. J. 134[14] was doubted by Pollock J. in I. L. R. (1944) Nag. 244[11] and was doubted by Grille C. J. and Puranik J. in I. L. R. (1946) Nag. 493.[13] Since it is not necessary to decide this point I say no more about it nor do I think it is necessary to decide the question whether the memorandum of appeal signed by a counsel can amount to an acknowledgment of liability under S. 19, Limitation Act.

[7] The result is that the appeal succeeds and is allowed with costs throughout.

Misc. Criminal Appln. No. 26 of 1947, Decided on 1-4-1947.

(a) Interpretation of statutes — Question as to powers of Legislature to enact—Correct method of approach stated.

Whenever the powers of a Legislature are brought into question, the correct method of approach is to look to the Constitution Act and to find out what it provides and what it prohibits. It is then necessary to examine the pith and substance of the impugned legislation critically to find out whether all that it provides falls within the powers granted by the Constitution Act and then to find out whether it transgresses any prohibition contained therein: (1878) 3 A. C. 889, Rel. on. [Para 7]

(b) Interpretation of statutes — Preamble containing less or more extensive expressions in import than those in other parts — Intention of legislature how to be gathered.

Although the preamble of a statute is the key to its interpretation the intention of the legislature is not necessarily to be gathered from the preamble taken by itself. In fact the intention can only be gathered from the Act taken as a whole. If the Court finds in the preamble any expression not so large and extensive in its import as those used in other parts of the Act and upon a view of the whole Act the Court can collect from the more large and extensive expressions used in other parts the real intention of the legislature it is the duty of the Court to give effect to the larger expressions. This applies equally to those Acts where the preamble goes further than the Act itself. [Para 8]

(c) Interpretation of statutes — Constitution Act how to be construed — Entries in lists in Sch. 7, Government of India Act (1935)—Interpretation of.

In interpreting a Constitution Act a wide meaning should be given to the words which confer on a legislature the power to legislate on certain topics and within the ambit of the words the most sovereign powers must be understood to be given to the legislature. The entries in the Constitution Act have always been given a large and liberal interpretation as the allocation of the subjects in the list is not by way of scientific definitions but by way of a mere simplex enumeratio of broad categories: 26 A.I.R. 1939 F. C. 1, Rel. on. [Para 11]

(d) C P. and Berar Maintenance of Public Order Act (15 [XV] of 1946), S. 2 (1) —Act whether repugnant to existing Indian Law—Government of India Act (1935), S. 107 and entry No. 1 of list II and entry No. 29 of list III of Sch. 7.

The Act has for its purpose the maintenance of public order and though incidentally it touches upon the subject of strikes and trade disputes, it does so merely because strikes promoted solely for the sake of causing unrest among workmen, lead directly or indirectly to a subversion of public order. Since the entire subject of the Act falls within entry No. 1 of list II of Sch. 7, Constitution Act, and not within entry No. 29 of list III of the Schedule, no question of repugnancy either directly or indirectly to an existing Indian Law arises. [Paras 13 and 14]

(e) Government of India Act (1935), S. 59 (1) — Sub-section whether mandatory.

(Quære). Whether S. 59 (1) is mandatory or merely directory and whether the sub-section is a condition precedent to the application of the bar contained in sub-s. (2). [Para 21]

(f) Government of India Act (1935), S. 59 (2) — Orders authenticated by Chief Secretary by order of Governor—Validity.

Where orders under S. 2 (1), C. P. and Berar Maintenance of Public Order Act (XV of 1946), are authenticated by the signature of the Chief Secretary and shown to be "By order of the Governor" the authentication follows the business rule correctly. Under S. 59 (2) this authentication is sufficient and the validity of the orders cannot be called in question on the ground that the orders were not made by the Governor. [Para 20]

(g) C. P. and Berar Maintenance of Public Order Act (15 [XV] of 1946), S. 2 (1) — "Provincial Government"—Meaning of—Presumption about orders passed under the section.

When S. 3 (43a), General Clauses Act (1897), has defined the words "Provincial Government" and the orders made under S. 2 (1), C. P. and Berar Maintenance of Public Order Act (15 [XV] of 1946), use this phraseology, the meaning given to these words in the General Clauses Act must equally be held applicable to the same words used in the orders. In view of the fact that the C. P. and Berar Maintenance of Public Order Act uses the terms which have special meaning given to them for all purposes by the General Clauses Act the Court is entitled to presume, till the contrary is established, that the correct authority named in the Act had in fact passed the orders. [Para 21]

(h) Government of India Act (1935), S. 59 (1) — Scope of—Special enactment passed by competent legislature—Powers invested in Provincial Government—Exercise of.

Section 59 (1) deals with the normal executive activities of Government which are not covered by statute. It does not purport to limit the scope and extent of any special enactment passed by a competent legislature and within its province. When the legislature has chosen to invest the Provincial Government with certain powers the Provincial Government is the proper body to exercise these powers and when the orders purport to have been made by the Provincial Government it matters little whether the Provincial Government means the Cabinet, or the Ministry, or a particular Minister or the Governor. [Paras 21 and 22]

(i) C. P. and Berar Maintenance of Public Order Act (15 [XV] of 1946), S. 2 (1)—"Is acting" meaning of — Past action.

Since the Act seeks to restrict the liberty of the subject it must be strictly construed. Construction which secures the liberty of the subject is to be preferred to one which curtails it. The Act in S. 2 (1) uses the words "is acting". There are no words in the Act which make it retrospective. Detention cannot, therefore, be ordered on the basis of past actions and some activity of the type contemplated by the Act must be shown to have continued after the Act came into force. [Para 26]

(j) Government of India Act (1935), S. 52 — Special responsibilities of Governor — Scope of — Impingement upon legislative functions of legislature.

The special responsibilities of the Governor under S. 52 really arise in the ministerial field when executive powers are either abused or not used by the appropriate authority. They do not ordinarily impinge upon the legislative function of the legislature so as to trench upon the legislative list. The Legislature has plenary powers on all the topics contained in the list. The Courts are precluded by S. 53 (2) from investigating the question whether the Governor ought not to have assented to a certain bill dealing with matters within the sphere of his special responsibilities.

Order.— These are 12 applications by persons detained by the Provincial Government under S. 2 of the Central Provinces and Berar Maintenance of Public Order Act, 1946 (ACT NO. 15 (XV) of 1946). This Act was brought into force on 21st November 1946 and is to remain in force for one year from that date. The detenus challenge their detention on various grounds and the present applications being under S. 491 of the Criminal P. C. are in the nature of petitions for issue of a writ of habeas corpus.

[2] The first ground on which detention is challenged is that the Act as a whole or at least in part is ultra vires the Provincial Legislature. It is convenient before discussing this question to analyse this Act to find out what its pith and substance is. The operative part is contained in S. 2 (1) which reads thus :

"The Provincial Government if satisfied that any person is acting in a manner prejudicial to the public safety, order, or tranquillity, or is fomenting or inciting strikes with intent to cause or prolong unrest among any group or groups of employees may if it considers such order necessary make an order (a) directing that he be detained."

Under sub-section (2) of this section, District Magistrates have been invested with similar powers but under S. 3 their power to detain persons is limited to a period of 15 days. The Provincial Government under the same section can detain a person for 3 months. Under S. 5 the detenu is communicated the grounds on which he is detained to enable him to make representations to the Provincial Government against his detention. Under S. 11 there is an indemnity for and protection of action taken bona fide under the Act. Under S. 12 the application of other laws is declared to be not barred. It is convenient to reproduce S. 12 because some argument was based upon it. Section 12 reads thus :

"The provisions of this Act shall be in addition to and not in derogation of any other Act, Ordinance or Regulation for the time being in force."

[3] The detenus were arrested and lodged in the jail and were duly furnished the grounds of their detention. These grounds of detention have been tendered in evidence by the detenus and they have sworn affidavits either to deny or to explain the circumstances mentioned in the grounds of detention. It may be said here that no material other than these grounds has been adverted to by the Provincial Government and in fact the affidavit of the Chief Secretary says that the grounds of detention clearly make out a case for detaining these persons. The question of the suffiiciency of the grounds on which detention has been ordered in these cases will be taken up later.

[4] The first question is, is the Act ultra vires the Provincial Legislature? The argument on behalf of detenus is that S. 2 as well as the preamble of the Act clearly show that the Act was intended to prevent strikes and this makes the Act fall within the legislative powers granted by item 29 in List III of the Seventh Schedule to the Government of India Act, 1935. Entry NO. 29 of the concurrent legislative list deals with "trade unions and industrial and labour disputes." Since the carrying on of a strike in a lawful manner is permitted by the Trade Unions Act and the Trade Disputes Act, the impugned Act is repugnant to existing Indian Law and under S. 107 of the Constitution Act is void because no sanction of the Governor-General was admittedly obtained. It is contended that the impugned Act seeks to negative what the Trade Disputes Act permits, and in so far as the present legislation is contrary to the existing provisions of the two Acts mentioned above, it is void.

[5] The argument on behalf of the Provincial Government is that the power to enact the impugned Act is to be found in entry NO. 1 of List II which runs thus :

"Preventive detention for reasons connected with the maintenance of the public order; persons subject to such detention."

It is also contended that the Act also falls within the general heading "Public Order" in the same entry. Reliance is also placed on S. 12 of the impugned Act which speaks of this Act as being in addition to the existing Indian Law.

[6] It is convenient to begin with S. 12. If the legislative competence to enact the present law be wanting, the Act must be regarded as void. Similarly if repugnance is established between the pres nt Act and existing Acts of the Indian Legislature, the enacting of Section 12 would not save the impugned legislation. Section 12 is merely an expression of opinion put in ex abundanti cautela so that no dispute as to the intention of the Legislature may arise. The question of the validity of the impugned Act, however, will have to be judged on its own merits and S. 12 would not help if the Act is found to be ultra vires on any ground. Section 12 of the Act, therefore, is inconclusive and ineffective in so far as the validity of the Act or any of its provision is concerned.

[7] Whenever the powers of a Legislature (whether central or provincial) are brought into question the correct method of approach is to look to the Constitution Act and to find out what it provides and what it prohibits It is then necessary to examine the pith and substance of the impugned legislation critically to find out whether all that it provi les falls within the powers granted by the Constitution Act and then to find out whether it transgresses any prohibition contained therein. Their Lord-hips of the Privy Council have clearly indicated this in the leading case in (1878) 3 A. C. 889[1] at pp. 904, 905 in the following words:

"The established Courts of Justice, when a question arises whether the prescribed limits have been exceeded, must of necessity determine that question; and the only way in which they can properly do so, is by looking to the terms of the instrument by which, affirmatively, the legislative powers were created and by which, negatively, they are restricted. If what has been done is legislation, within the general scope of the affirmative words which give the power, and if it violates no express condition or restriction by which that power is limited (in which category would, of course be included any Act of the Imperial Parliament at variance with it) it is not for any Court of Justice to inquire further, or to enlarge constructively those conditions and restrictions."

[8] The petitioners contended that the field in which the impugned Act lies is clearly indicated by the preamble and the title of the Act. They urge that the intention of the Legislature and the scope of the Act must be gathered from the preamble and emphasis is laid by them on the words "the prevention of the fomenting or incitement to strikes in the Central Provinces and Berar" which are to be found in the preamble as well as the title of the Act. Since the subject of strikes relates to Trade Unions and Industrial and labour disputes, the Act, according to the petitioners, seeks to legislate upon the field indicated by item No. 29 in the concurrent legislative list and in so far as the field as already occupied by the Trade Disputes Act, it is void. It is true that the preamble of a statute is the key to its interpretation but the intention of the legislature is not necessarilly to be gathered from the preamble taken by itself. In fact the intention of the Legislature can only be gathered from the Act taken as a whole. In the leading case in (1828) 108 E R 863[2] at p. 870 Lord Tenterden C. J said:

"In construing Acts of Parliament we are to look not only at the language of the preamble, or of any particular clause, but at the languge of the whole Act. And if we find in the preamble, or in any particular clause, an expression not so large and extensive in its import as those used in other parts of the Act, and upon a view of the whole Act we can collect, from the more large and extensive expressions used in other parts, the real intention of the Legislature, it is our duty to give effect to the larger expressions, notwithstanding the phrases of less extensive import in the preamble, or in any particular clause".

These observations apply equally to those Acts where the preamble goes further than the Act itself.

[9] In the operative portion of the present Act the detention is for two purposes. A person can be detained if a person is acting in a manner prejudicial to public safety, order or tranquillity, and in connection with strikes it is said that he may also be detained if Provincial Government is satisfied that the fomenting or inciting of strikes is with the intention of causing or prolonging unrest amongst any group or groups of employees. Now the entry No. 1 in List II allows preventive detention to be ordered, subject however to the qualifications that the preventive detention must be "for the reasons connected with the maintenance of public order". The short question, therefore, is whether the detention which is authorised under the impugned Act is for reasons connected with the maintenance of public order.

[10] Section 2 (1) of the impugned Act is divisible into two parts. The first part definitely falls within the powers granted to the Legislature by entry NO. 1. That part provides that a person may be detained if he is acting in a manner prejudicial to the public safety, order or tranquillity. Public safety and public tranquillity are inextricably bound up with the existence of public order. If public tranquillity and safety are disturbed the necessary consequence would be the breach of public peace and order. There can be no doubt that the first part of S. 2 (1) of the impugned Act is entirely within the competence of the Provincial Legislature.

[11] The only dispute really is with regard to the second part. Certain considerations must be borne in mind in approaching this subject. It is well known that in interpreting a Constitution Act a wide meaning should be given to the words which confer on a Legislature the power to legislate on certain topics, and within the ambit of the words the most sovereign powers must be understood to be given to the Legislature. The entries in the Constitution Act have always been given a large and liberal interpretation. The reason is manifest. The allocation of the subjects in the list is not by way of scientific definitions but by way of a mere simplex enumeratio of broad categories. As said by Jayakar J. in 1939 F C R 18[3] at p. 96.

"That the provisions of an Act like the Government of India Act, 1935, should not be cut down by a narrow and technical construction, but considering the magnitude of the subjects with which it purports to deal in very few words, should be given a large and liberal interpretation . . . . . "

See also 1930 A. C. 124[4] at pp. 136 and 137. It is also to be borne in mind that the legislative lists in Sch. 7, Constitution Act, are not always mutually exclusive. In spite of the fact that an effort has been made to keep all the three lists distinct, there is an overlapping of the jurisdictions conferred by the rival lists. This was held in P. C. Appeal No. 19 of 1946, D/- 11-2-1947[5] by their Lordships in the following terms:

"It is not possible to make so clean a cut between the powers of the various legislatures: they are bound to overlap from time to time."

Their Lordships also cite with approval the observations of Gwyer C. J. in 1940 F. C. R. 188[6] at p. 201 which read:

"It must inevitably happen from time to time that legislation, though purporting to deal with a subject in one list, touches also on a subject in another list, and the different provisions of the enactment may be so closely intertwined that blind adherence to a strictly verbal interpretation would result in a large number of statutes being declared invalid because the Legislature enacting them may appear to have legislated in a forbidden sphere. Hence the rule which has been evolved by the Judicial Committee whereby the impugned statute is examined to ascertain its "pith and substance", or its "true nature and character" for the purpose of determining whether it is legislation with respect to matters in this list or in that . . . ."

Again in the same case their Lordships of the Privy Council say:

"Subjects must still overlap and where they do the question must be asked what in pith and substance is the effect of the enactment of which complaint is made and in what list is its true nature and character to be found. If these questions could not be asked, much beneficient legislation would be stifled at birth, and many of the subjects entrusted to Provincial Legislation could never effectively be dealt with.

Thirdly, the extent of the invasion by the Provinces into subjects enumerated in the Federal List has to be considered. No doubt it is an important matter, not as their Lordships think, because the validity of an Act can be determined by discriminating between degrees of invasion, but for the purpose of determining what is the pith and substance of the impugned Act. Its provisions may advance so far into Federal territory as to show that its true nature is not concerned with provincial matters, but the question is not, has it trespassed more or less, but is the trespass, whatever it be, such as to show that the pith and substance of the impugned Act is not money-lending but promissory notes or banking? Once that question is determined the Act falls on one or the other side of the line and can be seen as valid or invalid according to its true content.

This view places the precedence according to the three lists in its proper perspective.

No doubt where they come in conflict List I has priority over Lists III and II and List III has priority over List II, but, the question still remains, priority in what respect? Does the priority of the Federal Legislature prevent the Provincial Legislature from dealing with any matter which may incidentally affect any item in its list or in each case has one to consider what the substance of an Act is and, whatever its ancillary effect, attribute it to the appropriate list according to its true character? In their Lordships' opinion the latter is the true view."

[12] It will be noticed that it is not the fomenting or inciting of a strike of any kind which is hit by S. 2 (1) of the impugned Act. If the Provincial Legislature had intended that the labourers and employees of Trade Unions should not go on a strike at all the Act may conceivably be said to come into clash with existing Indian legislation. The emphasis in the present Act is not so much on strikes as such as on the maintenance of public order. A person is liable to detention who in the opinion of the Provincial Government is fomenting or inciting strikes with intent to cause or prolong unrest amongst any group or groups of employees. The creation of unrest amongst labourers is something more than the carrying on of bona fide trade disputes. The promoters of bona fide trade disputes are not intended to be hit; nor is the person promoting a legal strike without causing unrest among employees liable to detention. It is the causing or prolonging of unrest among workmen and employees which is the real reason of the detention. If a large and liberal interpretation is placed upon entry No. 1 it cannot be gainsaid that the causing or prolonging of unrest is a reason at least connected with the maintenance of public order. The entry itself speaks not of the maintenance of public order simpliciter but of public detention for reasons connected with the maintenance of public order. The phraseology used in the entry is extensive in its meaning and the Legislature has been given wide powers to decide what is connected with the maintenance of public order in a particular area. The pith and substance of the impugned Act is preventive detention for reasons connected with the maintenance of public order and not industrial and labour disputes.

[13] The present legislation cannot be described as colourable nor can the Legislature be said to be doing indirectly what it cannot do directly. It is obvious that the Provincial Legislature cannot repeal the Trade Unions Act and the Trade Disputes Act unless the Governor-General or His Majesty signify their assent, nor can it frame any laws which are repugnant to these enactments. In our opinion the enacting of the present Act does not indirectly do any of these two things. It does not trench upon the field occupied by the Indian Legislature. The present Act has for its purpose the maintenance of public order and though incidentally it touches upon the subject of strikes and trade disputes it does so merely because strikes promoted solely for the sake of causing unrest among workmen lead directly or indirectly to a subversion of public order.

[14] Since the entire subject of the present Act falls within entry 1 of List II, Sch. 7, Constitution Act, no question of repugnancy either directly or indirectly arises. No sanction of the Governor-General was necessary because all the powers for the enactment of the impugned Act are to be found in the Provincial legislative list and it is not necessary to go to the concurrent legislative list at all. If on an examination of the pith and substance of the impugned legislation it is found to fall fully within the Provincial legislative list, it does not matter if it incidentally touches some matters included in the first and the third list. See P. C. Appeal No. 13 of 1940, D/- 5-2-1947.[7]

[15] The learned Advocate-General further argues that the Trade Unions Act and the Trade Disputes Act do not apply to the strikes which have been incited by the present petitioners because they do not relate to any trade or industry. According to him these so-called trade unions are not trade unions in the strict sense of the term, as defined in the Trade Unions Act because the persons who have registered themselves are not employed in any trade or industry. According to him the provisions of Trade Unions Act and Ss. 3, 15 and 16, Trade Disputes Act do not, therefore, apply to the petitioners and they cannot challenge the validity of the impugned Act. It was urged on behalf of the petitioners that the strikers belong to groups which in most cases hold certificates of registration as trade unions under the Trade Unions Act and that S. 10 of that Act prohibits the Court from enquiring as to whether they are duly registered or not. It is urged that so long as the certificate is not cancelled the right of the holders of the certificate to carry on a trade dispute and a legal strike cannot be questioned inasmuch as the Trade Disputes Act applies to their case. It is urged that the petitioners thus have a right to challenge the validity of the present legislation by the Provincial Government.

[16] There is a complete misapprehension as to the manner in which the legality of an Act of the Provincial Legislature is to be challenged. The legality of the impugned Act or its repugnancy to existing Indian Law is not to be judged on the ground of the applicability of existing Indian Law to any special case. We have indicated above the correct method of approach to such a problem. The Trade Disputes Act provides for the regulating of trade disputes and strikes. Certain strikes are declared illegal and made punishable under the Act. The present Act deals with the incitement of a strike not with a view to carrying on of genuine trade disputes but with the ulterior motive of creating unrest and turmoil so as to affect public order. We have shown above that there is no repugnancy between the two Acts and the whole of the impugned Act lies within the powers granted to the Provincial legislature by entry No. I of List II. It is, therefore, not necessary for us to enter too largely into a discussion as to whether we are entitled to question the registration of these bodies of men under the Trade Unions Act. Prima facie, the certificate of registration would be conclusive evidence that they are trade unions duly registered. We, however, express no definite opinion on this matter because it is not germane to the present discussion.

[17] The argument of Mr. Hazarnavis that the legislative powers of the Provincial Legislature are subject to the special responsibilities of the Governor under S. 52 of the Government of India Act, 1935, may be disposed of here. The argument is that the special responsibilities under this section embrace "the prevention of any grave menace to the peace or tranquillity of the province or any part thereof" and that the Governor could not delegate these functions to the Legislature to legislate upon. It was contended that the legislative powers granted by entry No. I of List II must be read as being subject to the powers of the Governor and that to that extent the Governor alone could legislate upon these topics. The argument is intricate and somewhat difficult to follow. The Legislature has been given plenary powers on all the topics contained in the List. The special responsibilities of the Governor really arise in the ministerial field when executive powers are either abused or not used by the appropriate authority. The manner in which the Governor exercises his special responsibility is indicated in the Instrument of Instructions. The special responsibilities of the Governor do not ordinarily impinge upon the legislative functions of the Legislature so as to trench upon the legislative list. The Governor has an overriding executive power under S. 52 which he can exercise in his individual judgment and one of the aspects of it is the maintenance of public order. He can take action in his individual judgment and even contrary to the advice of his ministers. Under S. 50 of the old Government of India Act, the Governor could overrule his Executive Council in this matter. The same obtains in a large measure under S. 52 of the present Constitution Act. The Governor not having chosen to exercise his individual responsibilities it is not open to the Court to sit in judgment over him. Similarly, the argument that the Governor ought not to have assented to the bill which deals with matters within the sphere of his special responsibilities is not for a Court of law to investigate. The Courts are precluded from such an enquiry by S. 53 (2), Government of India Act, 1935.

[18] In our opinion none of the grounds urged to challenge the authority of the impugned Act are effective. We, therefore, hold that the Act is intra vires and is not repugnant to the Trade Unions Act or the Trade Disputes Act.

[19] It was next urged on behalf of the petitioners that the orders were on their face defective as it is the Provincial Government which has been shown to have taken action. It was contended that there was nothing to show that the Governor had acted as required by S. 2 (1) of the present Act, read with S. 3 (43), General Clauses Act. No presumption, it was argued, can be drawn because S. 59 (1), Constitution Act, has been infringed. According to this section, all orders of the Government of the province have to be expressed in the name of Governor and the impugned orders do not say so. It was submitted that these orders cannot be taken to be the orders of the Governor, nor has any affidavit been sworn in this behalf.

[20] As to the affidavit it is clear to us that as there was no allegation in the petitions that the Governor had not passed these orders, there was no need for the Crown to make any statement on the point in their return. We have been assured by the learned Advocate-General that the final orders were in fact passed by His Excellency the Governor in each case. But that apart, the orders are authenticated by the signature of the Chief Secretary and shown to be "By order of the Governor." The authentication follows the business rule correctly. Under S. 59 (2), Constitution Act, this authentication is sufficient and the validity of the orders cannot be called in question on the ground that orders were not made by the Governor. Against this, it was contended that sub-s. (1) of S. 59 speaks of the recitals in an order or instrument, and sub-s. (2) of that section speaks of the authentication and that the condition precedent to the application of the bar under sub-s. (2) of S 59 is that the order must show on its face that it was made by the Governor. Reference was also made to S. 49 (1) which it was pointed out provides that the executive authority of the province shall be exercised by the Governor in the name of His Majesty. It was argued that S. 59 (1) is mandatory and must be followed and that the petitioners were entitled to challenge the orders.

[21] Section 49 (1) deals with the revesting of executive authority in relation to a province resumed by His Majesty under S. 2, and, in our opinion, is not relevant in this context, Under S. 49 (1), the Provincial Legislature may invest a subordinate authority with such functions which it deems proper. In our opinion when the General Clauses Act has already defined the words "Provincial Government" and the orders use this phraseology, the meaning given to these words in the General Clauses Act must equally be held applicable to the same words used in the orders. In view of the fact that the Act uses the terms which have special meaning given to them for all purposes by the General Clauses Act we are entitled to presume, till the contrary is established, that the correct authority named in the Act had in fact passed the orders. Omnia praesumuntur rite esse acta. We have no difficulty in applying this presumption in the present cases as we have been assured by the learned Advocate-General that the orders were in fact passed by His Excellency the Governor in each of these cases and that if this fact had been challenged earlier, an affidavit would have been filed in reply. In our opinion it is unnecessary in view of this assurance to decide whether S. 59 (1) is mandatory or merely directory and further whether that sub-section is a condition precedent to the application of the bar contained in the sub-section which follows it. There is yet another answer to this argument. Section 59 (1), Constitution Act, deals with the normal executive activities of Government which are not covered by statute. It does not purport to limit the scope and extent of any special enactment passed by a competent Legislature and within its province.

[22] The impugned Act has also purported to confer these powers of detention upon the District Magistrate, and there can be little doubt that the District Magistrate can exercise them in the same way as District Magistrates now take preventive action under S. 144 and other sections of the Criminal Procedure Code. The District Magistrate can make the orders and they would be promulgated in the manner normal in such cases. Equally the Legislature can, provided the measure is within its competence, invest any other person or body with this authority. In the present case it has chosen to invest the Provincial Government with these powers. and that being so the Provincial Government is the proper body to make these orders of detention. It matters little, so far as the present cases are concerned, whether the Provincial Government means the Cabinet, or the Ministry, or a particular Minister, or His Excellency the Governor, because the order purports to have been made by the Provincial Government and the detenus have not shown that the authority which made this order is not the authority invested with the requisite powers under the Act. The order is valid on the face of it, and in summary proceedings of this nature where the burden is on the detenu it is not permissible for us to presume that the order is invalid. There must be material before us which will lead us to infer the contrary. There is no such material. Not one of the affidavits states who actually passed these orders. Not one of them states that it was not the authority contemplated by the Act.

[23] As regards the promulgation of the order it has been promulgated by order of the Governor and this is the normal means of promulgating all orders of Government made either at ministerial or gubernatorial level.

[24] The broad question was next debated as to whether we are at liberty to question the reasons on which the Provincial Government has acted in these cases. We are relieved from the duty of deciding this matter in these cases because both sides have placed before us the material on which detention had been ordered in these cases. Since no secret was made of these reasons nor was any claim of privilege advanced on behalf of the Crown we do not consider it necessary to decide this vexed question. There are certain differences between emergency legislation passed during the period of war and legislation passed during times of peace. Ordinarily the action of the executive is always open to challenge in a Court of law. We express no definite opinion on this matter because as we have said Government has already put the grounds of detention into the hands of these detenus under S. 5 of the Act and has stated in this Court that these, in fact, were the grounds on which action was taken. In view of the fact that the material is already before us for scrutiny, we see no reason to enter into a discussion of the rights and privileges of the detenus vis a vis the Provincial Government Similarly in these cases we do not see any necessity to call for any evidence in support of the affidavits filed either by the Provincial Government or the detenus. Section 491, Criminal P C., lays down a summary procedure to secure the liberty of the subject. It does not require that Courts should enter upon lengthy enquiries into allegations of fact. We express no definite opinion as to the powers of this Court to order an enquiry. We are, however, satisfied that in these cases no enquiry in fact is necessary. The material placed before us is sufficient for us to judge whether there has been any fraud upon the statute or not, because if there is no fraud, the detention (the Act being valid) cannot be challenged. Ordinarily it is for the Provincial Government to satisfy itself as to the sufficiency of the material. Beyond this we do not express any opinion on this point.

[25] There was considerable argument as to whether detention could be ordered on the basis of past actions. The words in S. 2 of the Act are "is acting." These words were compared with those used in R. 129 of the Defence of India Rules to show that the latter enactment clearly spoke of past actions It was argued that the present Act must be held applicable only to activity of the kind prohibited, if indulged in after the date of the passing of the Act.

[26] Since Act 15 (XV) of 1946 seeks to restrict the liberty of the subject it must be strictly construed. It is an accepted rule of interpretation that the construction which secures the liberty of the subject is to be preferred to one which curtails it. In Maxwell's Interpretation of Statute Edn. 9, p. 289 the following passage occurs :

"Statutes which encroach on the rights of the subject, whether as regards person or property, are similarly subject to a strict construction in the sense before explained. It is a recognised rule that they should be interpreted, if possible, so as to respect such rights : Lord Westbury : (1863) 10 H.L.C. 367[8] at p.386, (1932) 1 K B. 684,[9] (1884) 12 Q.B.D. 224,[10] (1935) 2 K. B. 257[11] at p. 264."

If it was intended that the detention could be ordered on the basis of past actions nothing was easier than to say this. There are no words which make this Act retrospective so as to enable past actions to be visited with detention. The Act uses the words "is acting" and since an Act operates from the time it becomes law some activity of the type contemplated by the Act must be shown to have continued after the Act came into force. This, in our opinion, is clearly the meaning behind these words. There would otherwise be no locus poenitentiae for any person, however much he may desire to act in accordance with law. Section 2 (1) of the Act requires "satisfaction" of the fact that the person concerned "is acting" in one or other of the ways specified. That imports continuity of action sustained on and after the passing of the Act. It is not enough that he should have acted in the past. There must be material to indicate that he continued so to act after the Act was passed and that, but for his apprehension, he would be likely to go on doing so. As there was no material to indicate this in three of the cases we directed the release of those detenus on the dates of argument. The material furnished by Government in those cases showed that the satisfaction was as regards past acts and there was nothing to indicate that the acts continued after the date of the Act. The detenus denied that there was such action after the Act. The affidavits of Government did not counter this.

[27] The orders of detention use the language "has been acting", "has been inciting" and "has been fomenting". It was argued that they are defective for the reasons set out above. But here we think it necessary to construe the real meaning of the orders in the same manner as one considers the pith and substance of an Act. There is no need to copy the words of a statute slavishly in the order provided its essentials are complied with. Indeed slavish rubber-stamp orders have been condemned by this Court in the past. In the present case each detenue was in custody at the date when the orders were made by the Provincial Government. It is obvious that the language "is acting" would have been inappropriate—and that was one of the objections taken. It was argued that as the detenus were in jail when the orders were passed they could not have been acting in the manner contemplated by the Act at the date when the orders were made. In our opinion the orders, therefore, quite properly use the phrase "has been acting" etc., in place of the words "is acting". But of course what we have to see is whether the orders convey the sense of continuity at the time which the Act requires. We think they do in the cases which now remain.

[28] In each of these cases the order sets out the satisfaction of the Provincial Government regarding the fact of acting in one or other of the manners contemplated by the Act and proceeds to enumerate in brief the 'actings'. The bulk of the acts which are said to constitute the "acting" consist of past acts, but in each case (except the three in which we have passed orders of release) there is included some overt act done after 21-11-1946 on which date the Act came into force. The series of acts so set forth convey the sense of continuity which the Act requires and the inclusion of an overt act done after 21-11-1946 imports that the said acting was continued after the datum line. These statements, combined with the reference in the order to S. 2 (1) (a) of the Act, are sufficient to show that the "satisfaction" relates to a continuous course of conduct which was persisted in after the coming into force of the Act.

[29] Now, we have already held that there were no powers of detention in respect of past acts—by which we mean acts committed before 21-11-1946, but as we have already remarked references to such acts are relevant to disclose continuity of action. It is true that up to 21-11-1946 persistence in such acts would not have led to detention. Up to that date such a course of conduct was unobjectionable from the point of view of the present Act — (we say from the point of view of the present Act with deliberate intent because we do not mean to imply that none of the acts complained of contravene other laws. But with such other laws, if there be any, we are not concerned). If, therefore, the "objectionable" conduct ceased on or before 20-11-1946 there would be no power of detention. But if the same conduct were to be persisted in on or after 21-11-1946 then at once that which was "unobjectionable" before that date would immediately become "objectionable" and the necessary continuity of conduct being present the "offender" would be liable to detention under the Act. We now turn to the individual cases.

[30] In Miscellaneous Criminal Case No. 13/47, Dashrathlal Choube, the grounds of detention allege acts of incitement and instigation committed in the months of June, October and December 1946. They further allege an actual riot in October 1946 and an actual strike in December 1946. The petitioner's affidavit does not deny the commission of the acts; all he states is that he was within his legal rights and therefore the acts complained of do not amount to either instigation or incitement. But that is not an answer to the return. A riot relates to public disorder and strikes causing unrest among workmen are prone to result in public unrest which in turn often leads to public disorder.

[31] The application is dismissed.

[32] The case of S. K. Mukerji Misc. Cri. Case No. 17 of 1947 is similar to that of Dashrathlal Chobe. He is also from Raipur. The grounds of detention disclose prejudicial activities in August, September, October and December 1946. One part of the allegations against him is made in the following words :

"That between October and December 1946 you have been inciting the municipal sweepers to strike and brought about a strike by them".

The affidavit also states that Mukerji was "directly responsible for instigating municipal sweepers".

The facts of instigation and incitement have not been denied in Mukerji's affidavit. In his first affidavit he states that no sweepers' strike took place at Raipur till the day of his arrest. But that is no answer to the allegation that he instigated a strike and continued to do so down to December 1946. In his second affidavit he said that he did not bring about a sweepers' strike at any time. But we are not here to judge that issue. The fact remains that they did strike when he was arrested and that they demanded his release. Obviously they would not do that unless he was intimately connected with them. Also, although he says he was not in Raipur when the Jubilee Hospital workers struck and the Bidi workers struck he admits he was elected President of the Hospital Workers Union in his absence and admits that in both cases his good offices were availed of to bring about a settlement. These afford grounds for the necessary "satisfaction". As we have said, we cannot enquire into the sufficiency of the grounds provided some grounds exist.

[33] The application is dismissed.

[34] We come next to the Nagpur detenus. Shyamlal Roy's case, Misc. Cri. Case No. 14 of 1947. The allegations against him are that he incited strikes in August 1946 (railway coolies), also employees of the Nagpur Improvement Trust and Government peons on and off from before September 1946 and was present and spoke at a meeting of the Government peons at the Town Hall in December 1946.

[35] Here also the fact of instigation has not been denied. All he says is that he did not ask the peons to strike at the Town Hall meeting. So also, as regards the coolies, what he says is that the strike was settled in one day and that no call for a strike was given by him. But it is one thing to call for a strike and another thing to incite or instigate a strike to cause unrest among employees without calling for one; also A can incite or instigate and B make the call. Equally one can instigate and yet not make a call because the time is not yet ripe. It is no use calling for a strike until the ground work has been laid. These evasive replies are not a good answer to the return. Here also we hold there was material for the satisfaction required.

[36] The application is dismissed.

[37] In A. B. Bardhan's case, Misc. Cri. Case No. 20 of 1947 the allegations cover prejudicial activities in January, July and December 1946. There is here a denial regarding the allegations relating to the January incident, but none regarding the two incidents in July and the one in December. On 11th July 1946 he is said to have instigated school and college students to strike. He denies that he instigated the school students but does not deny the allegation regarding the college students. These strikes led to two public fights. As regards the postal workers' strike the allegation is that he went round in a van with a loudspeaker and called on them to strike. He does not deny this but says he was not concerned with the strike "called by their Union." That is not the allegation made against him. Then he was arrested in the Town Hall in Dec. 1946 where the Government Peons had assembled. He admits he spoke but says he only moved a resolution condemning the arrest of three members of the Communist Party. It is evident then that he was using this meeting for a political purpose not connected with the grievances of the peons. Whether he actually incited the peons to strike in the Town Hall or not his presence there, coupled with his previous activities, one of which led to public disorder, furnishes material on which satisfaction can be based.

[38] The application is dismissed.

[39] As regards B. N. Mukerji, Misc. Cri. Case No. 21 of 1947, his prejudicial activities range from March 1946 to December 1946 and consist of urging a mass agitation against the reduction in rations, protest meetings against the Trade Disputes Bill and the projected Government Peon's strike in December 1946.

[40] He admits he delivered a speech against the rations cut in March 1946 and also that he issued a statement against the Trade Disputes Bill and spoke in a public meeting against the Bill. He does not deny that he urged a mass agitation against the rations cut. All he says is that his object was not to disturb public tranquility. The two are not the same. One's object in hitting a man over the head may be to reform him, the effect may be that he dies, but the concrete fact for investigation would be was he hit over the head. So here the question is did Mukerji urge a mass agitation and that is not denied.

[41] As regards the Government peons, Mukerji has denied that he incited them to strike and that he organized the procession but he admits his presence at the meeting "as one interested in the working class movement in general.".

[42] As we have said, we cannot judge the sufficiency of the grounds for satisfaction but have merely to see whether grounds on which action could be taken exist. The facts we have referred to, in our opinion, afford such material.

[43] The application is rejected.

[44] In the case of H. K. Vyas, Misc. Cri. case No. 22 of 1947, the grounds allege prejudicial activities in January 1946 (textile workers) March 1946 (reduction of rations), July 1946 (postal workers), September 1946 (Government Press employees), October 1946 (textile workers and rikshaw men) and December 1946 (Government peons).

[45] In the case of the postal workers there is said to have been actual obstruction by Vyas directed against men who refused to go on strike and again in the case of the Government Press employees.

[46] Activities in connection with the rations cut are admitted and there is no denial that the speech fomented public discontent. All that is said is that they were normal activities and that he did not urge the people to break the peace and that his activities were not prejudicial to public tranquillity and order.

[47] It is admitted that clashes occurred among the textile workers as a result of the decision to go on strike and it is not denied that he incited them to strike. All he says is that he did not speak at any meeting. So also the fact of obstruction in the case of Government Press employees is not denied. It is also not denied that he organised the procession of the Government peons in December 1946. We need not go deeper. We find there is material on which satisfaction can be based in this case also.

[48] The application is rejected.

[49] In Mustaque Hussain's case, Misc. Cri. Case NO. 24 of 1947, the allegations are that he instigated a strike by the licensed railway coolies in July 1946, instigated and fomented the strike by the employees of the Government Press (September 1946) and that is to say, activities ranging from July 1946 to January 1947 are disclosed.

"that you have instigated the strike contemplated by the municipal sweepers in Nagpur this month (January 1947)"

[50] It was argued in this case that as the applicant was arrested on 21st December 1946 he could not have instigated the strike of January 1947. That of course does not follow. The groundwork of a strike is usually prepared well ahead of time and there is no denial in the affidavits of activities regarding this between the 21st November and the 21st December. The affidavit says there was no instigation in either December 1946 or January 1947. It is silent regarding instigation between the 21st November and the end of that month. The burden in these cases is on the applicant and the burden is a heavy one as this Court, the Privy Council and the House of Lords have all stated from time to time: See for example, I. L. R. (1943) Nag 154[12] at pp. 159, 173. We are bound to assume a return accompanied by an affidavit and grounds of detention and which is prima facie in order, to be good until the contrary is established When the affidavit in reply is evasive, as here, and has the lacuna which we have indicated then the return must be accepted.

[51] The application is rejected.

[51a] In D. L. Jayawant's case, Misc. Cri. Case NO. 25 of 1947, the allegations are that "you, as secretary of the unauthorised peons and other Allied Workers Union, have been inciting these groups of employees to strike, and delivered a speech at the Town Hall at Nagpur on 21st December 1946, inciting the Government Peons to strike."

The question of continuity was raised in this case. It was argued that as only one specific overt act is referred to, namely, the speech at the Town Hall, the necessary continuity is lacking. But we think that the grounds do indicate continuity of action. The allegation is not that there was one isolated act of instigation but that there was continuous conduct culminating in this act when the arrest was made. Jayawant s affidavit supports this view.

[52] The Union came into existence in July 1946, and as Jayawant was elected its Secretary it is reasonable to suppose that he had some hand in bringing the Union into being. A call for a strike was issued in August and was not withdrawn till September because a relief committee was appointed. This committee granted relief but the recommendations were considered inadequate and so the meeting of December 1946 was called to continue the agitation. We find that the necessaay continuity of action is present in this case and also that there are materials on which action could be taken.

[53] The application is rejected.

[54] The last of the Nagpur cases is that of Om Prakash Mehta, Misc. Cri. Case NO. 26 of 1947. The arguments on the merits were not pressed in this case because he is now detained in connection with other charges and so the matter has become purely academic so far as he is concerned. His application is accordingly rejected.

[55] From here we turn to Gulabchand Agarwal of Mandla, Misc. Cri. Case NO. 19 of 1947. The charges against him relate to inciting the Mandla municipal sweepers to strike in January 1946, the postal workers to strike in July 1946, and the sweepers to issue a notice of a second strike in January 1947.

[56] This detenue was arrested on 27th December 1946 and the same argument was used in his case as in the case of Mustaque Hussain For the reasons given there, we hold that this detenue has not shown the return to be bad.

[57] The affidavits of the detenue do not deny the allegations of incitement in regard to any of the three strikes. What is contended is that they were legitimate activities. But that relates to the sufficiency of the grounds and not to their existence.

[58] The application is rejected.

[59] The remaining detenus have already been released. They are : Dr. D. K Diwanji, Misc. Cri. Case NO. 23 of 1947, Dhanraj Acharya, Misc. Cri. Case NO. 16 of 1947 and Ganesh Mote, Misc. Cri. Case NO. 15 of 1947.

Certain accused were undergoing prosecution for certain offences. In the chalan 13 witnesses were cited against them. Only 4 of these were, however, examined prior to the framing of the charge. After the charge had been framed and certain prosecution witnesses had been further cross-examined, the prosecutor stated that he did not want other prosecution witnesses to be examined. When the examination of the defence witnesses had ended the case was closed for arguments. Arguments were duly heard but on the date fixed for the delivery of judgment the Magistrate in pursuance of the defence complaint that the prosecution had deliberately withheld evidence issued process for the attendance of the remaining nine witnesses given up by the prosecution.

Held that the Magistrate was legally entitled to act as he did act under S. 540 and it could not be said that he acted in order to fill up lacuna in the prosecution case. Fida Hussain — for Applicants.

R. Kaushalendra Rao, Government Pleader — for the Crown.

Order. — The 17 applicants are undergoing prosecution in the Court of the First Class Magistrate, Amraoti, under Ss. 148, 188 and 337, Penal Code, in respect of disturbances which took place in Amraoti on the night of 8th September 1946 and in the chalan 13 witnesses were cited against them. Only 4 of these were, however, examined prior to the framing of the charge; and on 20th November 1946 the District Police Prosecutor intimated that a prima facie case had been established and that he would examine the remaining prosecution witnesses if necessary after the framing of the charge. After the charge had been framed and 3 of the prosecution witnesses had been further cross-examined, the District Police Prosecutor stated that he did not want other prosecution witnesses to be examined.

[2] On 11-2-1947, when the examination of the defence witnesses had ended the case was closed for arguments 2 days later. Arguments were duly heard but on 22-2-1947, the date fixed for the delivery of judgment, the Magistrate in pursuance of the defence complaint that the prosecution had deliberately withheld evidence issued process for the attendance of the nine witnesses given up by the prosecution as well as for that of the Additional District Magistrate, Deputy Superintendent of Police and City Inspector.

[3] The applicants went up in revision against this order but their application was summarily rejected by the Sessions Judge, East Berar, and they have now moved this Court to have the order set aside on the ground that it favoured the prosecution and was not in the interests of justice.

[4] In A. I. R. 1928 Lah. 647[1] the Magistrate, after the defence was closed and the arguments were heard, felt on the records as they stood that some points had been left obscure and that in order to elucidate them it was necessary to recall certain witnesses and to examine a new witness; Tek Chand J. held that there was no illegality in the procedure adopted by the Magistrate. In 19 Cr. L. J. 630[2] it was held that it was not proper for the High Court to interfere in revision in a case in which the Magistrate after the evidence of the defence was closed examined certain witnesses for the prosecution and gave at the same time full liberty to the accused to cross-examine them. In A. I. R. 1924 Mad. 587[3] Odgers J. decided that even after both parties closed their cases it is open to the Court to summon any person as a witness if his evidence appears to it to be essential to the just decision of the case.

[5] The trial Magistrate was legally entitled to act, as he did act, under S. 540, Criminal P. C., and the fact that he had not so acted in order to fill up lacuna in the prosecution case was clear from the contents of the order-sheet, dated 22-2-1947, in which he mentioned that he was issuing summonses to the 9 witnesses because of the defence complaint in argument that their evidence had been deliberately withheld. This indicated that the defence counsel were of the view that this evidence might have supported their case, and at this stage it is not open to me to assume that their evidence will be adverse to the accused and in favour of the prosecution. If that evidence is prejudicial to the accused, the question can be re-agitated in due course by them, but as things stand it would not be proper for this Court to interfere with the discretion of the trial Magistrate. The application is dismissed.

Dr. T. J. Kedar—for Applicant.

W. B. Pendharkar, Addl. Govt. Pleader — for the Crown.

Order.—The applicant, Chironjilal of Lormi, Mungeli Tahsil, Bilaspur district, was convicted and sentenced to undergo 3 months rigorous imprisonment under R. 81 (4) of the Defence of India Rules by the First Class Magistrate, Bilaspur, and his appeal was dismissed by the Extra Additional Sessions Judge, Bilaspur. He has now come up in revision to this Court.

[2] The prosecution case against him was, briefly stated, to the effect that he, a licensed sugar dealer, had, on 10-2-1946, at Lormi sold 6 maunds 15½ seers of sugar to Putu (P. W. 1) and Bacholi (P. W. 2) at the rate of Re 1/- per seer in contravention of the price-control order dated 28-1-1946 of the District Magistrate, Bilaspur, by which the maximum retail price of sugar was fixed at Rs. -/8/3 per seer. Putu is Bacholi's uncle and, according to them, they had purchased the sugar for the preparation of sweets which they were to sell at Belpan where there was a big mela. The 4 bags containing the sugar were loaded in Sarha's (P. W. 3's) cart, an operation which was witnessed by Sewakram (P. W. 4), Gumashta Mukaddam, who questioned Putu and Bacholi and passed the information gained by him to the police with the result that the cart was intercepted by Shivsahai (P. W. 7) Head-Constable at a distance of about one mile from Lormi on the way to Belpan.

[3] The applicant in examination denied that he had sold any sugar to Putu and Bacholi and claimed that on the day in question 6 maunds 15½ seers of sugar were not in stock. He also implied that he was not aware of the District Magistrate's price-control order. The defence and the evidence thereto were not accepted by the Court below for adequate reasons with which I am in agreement.

[4] I am also of the view that their finding on the merits vis-a-vis the prosecution case was correct and that the applicant had clearly contravened the price-control order dated 28-1-1946 of the District Magistrate, Bilaspur, by charging Re 1/- per seer for the sugar instead of -/8/3 per seer.

[5] It was, however, strenuously urged that the conviction registered on 3rd of December 1946 was illegal, inasmuch as the Defence of India Act and the Rules framed thereunder had ceased to be in force on that date and there was no other law which authorised the continuance of the trial after 1-10-1946. It was further claimed that the Defence of India Act being a temporary statute expired automatically and lapsed without repeal by any statute, that S. 6 of the General Clauses Act had no application and that proceedings instituted before the expiry of the Defence of India Act could not be legally continued after its expiry. These contentions were repelled by the learned Extra Additional Sessions Judge who relied on a dictum of Alderson, B. in 5 Jurist 1064[1] which was followed in I. L. R. (1945) Nag. 867.[2] The question in that case was, however, different and distinguishable.

[6] The matter has now been set at rest by their Lordships of the Federal Court in Criminal Appeals Nos. 1 and 2 of 1947, dated 11-4-1947, in which it was held that the amendment to sub-s. (4) of S. 1 of the Defence of India Act made by Ordinance XII of 1946 would save prosecutions against breaches of orders for acts or omissions committed prior to the expiration of the Act. Their Lordships relied on (1945) 63 T. L. R. 6[3] which was under the English Emergency Powers (Defence) Act, 1939.

[7] In A.I.R. 1947 Mad. 325,[4] it was also held that in view of the words "things done or omitted to be done" in S. 102 (4), Government of India Act, offences committed before the expiration of the six months' period after the ceasing of the proclamation of emergency can be prosecuted after the expiration of that period and proceedings instituted before its expiry can be lawfully prosecuted to a conclusion.

[8] The applicant's contentions must, therefore, fail and, as adumbrated, the conviction which was in order is maintained. As to sentence, the Courts below have given satisfactory reasons for awarding jail punishment. The quantity of sugar involved was appreciable and the profit illegally made by the applicant was substantial. The fact that he is 55 years of age does not operate in his favour, inasmuch as his age should have prevented him from committing the grave anti-social offence in question. The application is dismissed.

M. R. Bobde and K. G. Chendke— for Appellant.:

B. R. Mandlekar, G. R. Deo, N. B. Chandurkar and M. R. Mandlekar— for Respondents.

Judgment.— This is a Letters Patent appeal against the judgment and decree of Puranik J. in Second Appeal No. 512 of 1940. Since an important question of law was involved which required the consideration whether I. L. R. (1941) Nag. 732[1] lays down correct law, the appeal was referred by the Honourable the Chief Justice to this Full Bench.

[2] This appeal arises out of a suit instituted by the plaintiffs Nakchhed and Bisahuram (respondents here) for recovery of Rs. 1,680 on bonds executed by Sewakram defendant (appellant here). Sewakram admitted the bonds but pleaded that he had applied to the Debt Conciliation Board, Bilaspur, for the conciliation of his debts including the debts in suit. The Board sent notices to these creditors, one of whom, Nakchhed, appeared before the Board on the 5th January 1938 but no statement of debt was submitted by him as required by Section 8 (1), Central Provinces Debt Conciliation Act, nor were the original bonds produced before the Board. Sewakram contended that the debts were discharged under S. 8 (2) of the Act and under Section 9 (3) the bonds were not admissible in evidence. It was also pleaded that inasmuch as Nakchhed was the karta of the family he effectively represented the other creditor and the whole of the debt was discharged.

[3] The plaintiffs denied that they had been served with any notices. They further pleaded that Nackchhed was present on 5th January 1938 not because he had received any notice but because he had some other work. The plaintiffs denied that Nakchhed was the karta of the family and he pleaded that there was a partition between the two brothers in 1936.

[4] The trial Judge and the first appellate Judge have held that Nakchhed was the karta of the family and that he had appeared before the Board on 5th January 1938. As to the service of the notices, the two Courts held that the evidence given by the plaintiffs was insufficient to displace the presumption that the Board had acted according to law.

[5] It was, therefore, held that the plaintiffs had no right to bring the suit which was accordingly dismissed. The second appeal was heard by Puranik J. who held, following I. L. R. (1941) Nag. 732[1] that inasmuch as no notice was sent under S. 7 (1) of the Act, the proceedings before the Board must be treated as without jurisdiction and hence as null and void. On the question whether notices under S. 8 (1) were served or not the learned Judge was inclined to remand the case for evidence but as he had already held that the proceedings before the Board were null and void, he did not see any need of ordering an inquiry as the result thereof would not have made any difference in the case. The case was thus sent back to the trial Court to be heard and decided on merits. The learned Judge, however, granted leave to the respondent and hence this appeal was filed.

[6] When this appeal first came up for hearing it was apparent that it might be necessary to consider whether I. L. R. (1941) Nag. 732[1] laid down correct law. Since, in referring the appeal, no question has been framed and referred to this Bench we understand the order to mean that the whole of the appeal has been referred to us for decision and we have, therefore, pronounced judgment instead of recording opinions.

[7] It has now been admitted that no notice was sent to the creditors as required by S. 7 of the Act. Similarly, it has been admitted by the appellant that there is no proof that notices under S. 8 had been served upon the creditors, it being conceded that all that can be said is that there is a presumption that the correct procedure was followed in the case. It is also no longer in dispute that Nakchhed was the karta of the family.

[8] Puranik J. has followed I.L.R. (1941) Nag. 732[1] and naturally much of the argument was about the correctness of that ruling. Mr. Bobde who appeared for the appellant drew our attention to the record of the case and said that the summary of facts in I. L. R. (1941) Nag. 732[1] was incomplete and the head-note did not correctly represent the decision in the case.

[9] The facts were that the appellant Nanhoo was not an agriculturist because according to the first two Courts he did not earn his livelihood mainly by agriculture. This is, however, clear from para. 2 of the judgment at p. 733 of the report.

[10] Prima facie a valid objection to the jurisdiction of the Board could have been raised by the creditor Zillimul because under S. 4 of the Act only debtors of a restricted class could apply to the Board. Zillimul would have been entitled to show that the debtor was not an agriculturist. By not sending the notice to him the creditor was in the dark and was deprived of this opportunity. The Divisional Bench, however, held as follows :

"It is said nevertheless that the Board has come to the conclusion that a notice was served under S. 8, that the creditor in question has not filed the statement required and therefore pursuant to S. 8 (2) the debt in question must be deemed to be duly discharged.

Further it is said that in fact, whether rightly or wrongly, the Board did receive an application under S. 4, did admit it, that the creditor did not, within the 30 days allowed by S. 7A, take an objection against its being admitted and therefore the jurisdiction of the Board cannot now be questioned.

We are of the opinion that this is fallacious. The Debt Conciliation Act is now time expired and we do not propose to examine at length the various difficulties of construction that it raises. It is, in our opinion, sufficient to say that where an Act requires a tribunal to give notice that it is about to enter upon the determination of point A it cannot effectively decide point A without giving notice and in the absence and behind the back of the person affected. Accordingly in this case this Board never effectively admitted the application. The fact that thereafter it acted as if it had admitted the application is neither here nor there. It is merely another case of a Debt Conciliation Board proceeding under the mistaken belief that it has admitted an application when it has done no such thing."

It is said that the law laid down by the Divisional Bench goes much further than the Act envisages. Reference was made to other cases which we shortly review here. Support for the view expressed in I.L.R. (1941) Nag. 732[1] is to be found in the opinion of Bose J. in Civil Revn. No. 673 of 1941[2] where he says:

"One of the fundamentals of jurisdiction in the case of a Debt Conciliation Board is admission of the application. This cannot be done behind the back of the other side. Section 7 (2) expressly says that it shall not be. It requires notice to be served under S. 7 (1). If this notice is not served then service of notice under S. 8 (1) will not do, because that can only be done at a later stage when the Board is properly seized of the matter. It is not so seized until the question about the admission of the application is heard and decided in the presence of the parties, or after notice under S. 7 (1).

If the other side appears without notice and takes no objection to the entertainment of the application that is another matter. It would be pointless to go through the formality after appearance, and if no objection is taken then the question of notice will be deemed to have been waived. That was the position in 1942 N.L.J. 194[3] at p. 195. But if the creditor does not appear and no notice is issued under S. 7 (1) then S. 8 (2) cannot come into operation however many notices may have been issued under S. 8 (1)."

[11] A similar view was expressed in I. L. R. (1945) Nag. 260[4] by Grille C. J. and one of us (Sen J.) in the following words:

"A notice of the order under S. 7 (1) was to be sent by registered post to the debtor or the creditor, as the case may be. In this case no notice as required under S. 7 (2) was sent. Where notice under S. 7 of the Act is not given, the proceedings must be treated as if the application had never been admitted. The Board's subsequent decisions are not final: See 1941 N.L.J. 220."

The remark is obiter because the decision in the case did not turn on this point and the learned Judges have said so at the end of the paragraph from which the extract last quoted above is taken.

[12] In 1942 N. L. J. 194[3] at p. 195 the matter was dealt with in a different way. It was there held :

"The other point was under S. 7, Debt Conciliation Act. This point was taken relying on a Bench decision of this Court in I.L.R. (1941) Nag. 732.[1] There is, however, a difference because in that case the absence of the notice resulted in the absence of the contestants at a particular stage of the enquiry. Here the contestants were all present. Moreover this point is not taken in the memorandum of appeal."

[13] There are two other cases in which the same distinction was made. In Second Appeal No. 896 of 1944,[5] it was held that if a creditor appears, though no notice under S. 7 is issued to him, and enters into the agreement drawn up and registered under S. 12, he is bound by it. I.L.R. (1941) Nag. 732[1] was distinguished.

[14] Similarly in Civil Revn. No. 487 of 1944[6] the case in I. L. R. (1941) Nag. 732[1] was distinguished. In this case the creditor in response to a notice under S. 8 (1) of the Act appeared before the Board and filed a statement but did not accept the offer made and a certificate was granted against him. When the creditor after obtaining his decree sought to execute it, the judgment-debtor objected pleading the certificate. The creditor contended that the proceedings of the Board were null and void as owing to its failure to issue a notice under S. 7 (2) of the Act, it had acquired no jurisdiction.

[15] It was held in the case that since the creditor had appeared before the Debt Conciliation Board in response to the notice under S. 8 of the Act and had filed his statement of debt in writing and thus submitted to the jurisdiction of the Board, he was debarred, in view of the principle underlying S. 7-A (3) of the Act.

[16] It would thus appear that the extreme view propounded in I. L. R. (1941) Nag. 732[1] did not find favour in the subsequent cases. In fact, except for I. L. R. (1945) Nag. 260[4] there has been a tendency to distinguish the case. We do not consider that Civil Revn. No. 673 of 1941[2] adds anything to I. L. R. (1941) Nag. 732[1] as Bose J. was a party to the latter decision.

[17] It is not necessary to consider the position prior to the introduction of S. 7-A in the Act because in this case the application was made after that section was introduced. To begin with it must be noticed that under S. 4 the application to the Board to effect a settlement between the debtor and his creditor or creditors could be made either by the debtor or the creditor. By sub-s. (2) of S. 4 if the debtor and the creditor applied simultaneously the application of the creditor merged in that of the debtor. These facts, which have not been stressed before us, explain the meaning of S. 7 and must, therefore, be borne in mind. Section 5 merely dealt with verification of the application. Section 6 was in two parts. Sub-section (2) applied to applications by the creditor and the particulars required were: (a) the place of residence of the debtor, (b) the amount and particulars of the creditor's claim. Sub-section (1) dealt with the application of the debtor and in addition to the statement that he was unable to pay his debts, the debtor was required to give his place of residence, the particulars of all claims against him together with the names and addresses of his creditors, and the list of all his property together with its valuation and location. A glance at Form I will show that the creditor was required to complete paras. 1 and 4 of the form and leave out paras. 2 and 3 while the debtor was required to complete the entire form.

[18] Under S. 7 (1) on receipt of these applications the Board could, (a) dismiss the application if it thought that it was not desirable to attempt to effect a settlement or (b) entertain the application for hearing and for this purpose it had to fix a date and place for hearing the application. The Board in either of the two cases had to pass an order, notice of which had to be sent to the debtor or the creditor as the case may be.

[19] Section 7 (2) was as much applicable to an application by the creditor as to an application by the debtor. The Board had to do the preliminary scrutiny without hearing the applicant and to make up its mind as to the desirability of proceeding with the application. If it dismissed the application summarily, notice of the dismissal was sent to the applicant. There would be no point in sending the notice to the other side and if the application was by a creditor, there was hardly any material on which to send notice to the other creditors whose very existence was not disclosed in the application. Form No. 3 devised under R. 14 could not have been of use because that Form gave notice of further consideration of the application and would have been most inappropriate if the notice was one of dismissal of the application. It is, therefore, fair to infer that Form 3 was to be used only if the Board proceeded to consider the application, and if it dismissed the application it had to devise the manner in which to send intimation of its order to the applicant.

[20] The Board could dismiss the application on various grounds. Jurisdiction to entertain the application (i. e. the want of it) was one such ground. If the application was dismissed, the aggrieved party could move the Board objecting to the dismissal within 30 days. Prior to the amending Act XIX of 1939 time ran from the date of the order, but by the amendment under this amending Act time began from the date on which the intimation was sent by registered post under S. 7 (2).

[21] It is now necessary to reproduce S. 7-A. This section was introduced by Act XV of 1936, S. 2. It originally read as follows :

"7-A. (1) If, on receipt of an application under S. 4, the Board admits the application as being within its jurisdiction or, under sub-s. (1) of S. 7, dismisses it on the ground of want of jurisdiction, a debtor or his creditor may, within thirty days from the date of admission or of the order of dismissal, as the case may be, make an objection in writing to the Board against such admission or dismissal.

(2) On receipt of an objection under sub-s. (1), the Board shall make such order thereon as it thinks fit and it shall be final.

(3) If no objection is made under sub-s. (1), or if an objection is made and decided under sub-s. (2), the jurisdiction of the Board shall not be questioned in any civil Court."

The underlined (here italicised) words in sub-s. (1) were substituted by the following words under Act XIX of 1939 :

"—within thirty days from the date on which intimation of admission or dismissal, as the case may be, is sent to him by registered post—"

We may say at once that this amendment of 1939 merely gives the terminus a quo to the period of 30 days which but for this amendment was the date of the order under S. 7 (1).

[22] Now it is obvious that the principle underlying S. 7A (3) is to make the Board's decision on questions of jurisdiction final and to bar interference by any Civil Court. But the operation of sub-s. (3) is dependent upon two conditions. The first condition is that the aggrieved party did not make any objection and the second condition is that the party made the objection but the Board decided it against him.

[23] It is one of the fundamental principles of administration of justice that a person must be heard before any decision is given against him. It is also equally true that Civil Courts have jurisdiction to enquire into any matter unless such jurisdiction is expressly taken away. It appears to us that if the aggrieved party was not informed of the order, his right to challenge the jurisdiction of the Board remained and consequently interference by Civil Courts was not barred. It is true that S. 7A (1) as originally drafted was defective, inasmuch as it did not correlate the period of 30 days with the sending of the notice. The amendment in 1939 served to remove this defect. Even so it could never have been intended that the rights of debtors and creditors were concluded even though the Board had sent no notice as required by S. 7 (2) of the Act. In our opinion in such a case the Civil Court would be entitled to question the jurisdiction of the Board.

[24] It appears to us that the spirit of S. 7 is brought into relief by the subsequently added S. 7A. To this extent we are entitled to consider S. 7A though subsequently added to the Act. The admission or dismissal of the application was not stayed pending the reply to the notice issued under S. 7 (2). In fact, if one reads Ss. 7 and 8 together (ignoring for the nonce, S. 7A) the opening words of S. 8 fit in with the provisions of S. 7 (1). Piecemeal legislation is never good and the introduction of S. 7A created difficulties which have led to conflicting decisions. Even at the end there was a lacuna in the Act. It arises in this way. Suppose the application was by a creditor and the Board decided to entertain the application. Suppose also that the notice was sent to the debtor and he failed to appear. Section 8 required that the action under that section should be taken after examining the debtor. The notice sent under S. 7 (2) was merely an intimation and not a process compelling attendance of the debtor in such a case. Of course, the Board could utilise S. 11 of the Act, but that was another matter. There was nothing compelling about the notice under S. 7 (2).

[25] In our opinion notice under S. 7 (2) was merely an intimation of the facts (a) that the application was dismissed or (b) that the application would be considered on the date named in the notice. This is clear from the manner in which S. 7A (particularly the amendment introduced by Act XIX of 1939) is worded.

[26] We are of opinion, therefore, that the notice under S. 7 (2) was not the sine qua non of the admission of the application. In fact the application was admitted or dismissed as the case may be under sub-s. (1) prior to the stage contemplated by sub-s. (2). This is stated in so many words by S. 7A, particularly after the amendment by the amending Act, XIX of 1939. The notice in question had nothing to do with the admission of the application, and we respectfully disagree with the contrary opinions expressed in I. L. R. (1941) Nag. 732[1] and Civil Revision No. 673 of 1941.[2] As a corollary the matter of jurisdiction must be held to be at large if the opportunity afforded to the aggrieved party in S. 7A was not given, and both before the Board itself or before a Civil Court the question could be agitated afresh as the bar of S. 7A (3) would apply only if the Board had strictly complied with law.

[27] The creditors were not shut out in Civil Court from raising the objection as to the jurisdiction of the Board. We closely questioned learned counsel for the respondents as to what they have done to establish want of jurisdiction. We were referred to para. 7 of the written statement, dated 26-9-1939, filed as a rejoinder by the plaintiffs. That paragraph reads as follows :

"7. That the defendant is the resident of mouza Meau tahsil Jangir. That he purposely and deliberately made the application to the Debt Conciliation Board, Bilaspur, so that these creditors may not be able to be present before the Debt Conciliation Board, Bilaspur, and that their debt will be discharged. That the defendant has played a fraud on the creditors and the Debt Conciliation Board, Bilaspur."

It is to be noticed in this connection that the defendant had made a specific pleading that he had lands in Bilaspur tahsil and was therefore entitled to make an application to that Board. This is what he said :

"1. That the defendant having a tenancy holding of Rs. 96 rental of holding in mauza Gatora in Bilaspur tahsil and being a permanent resident of that place applied to the Debt Conciliation Board, Bilaspur, for the conciliation of the debts in suit."

The plaintiffs did not at any stage specifically deny this fact. Their rejoinder is disingenuous on this point. They only said :

"That the plaintiff had no knowledge or information that the defendant had any lands in tahsil Bilaspur."

In our opinion this is not a denial of the statement made by the defendant (appellant). It is true that the defendant did not lead any evidence and mere pleading is not evidence. He is, however, entitled to show that the plaintiffs' own witness Jogoram (P. W. 3) proves the case inasmuch as he stated that the defendant is a tenant of mouza Gataura and goes there often. In our opinion the statement of the defendant remained untraversed and is proved by the evidence led by plaintiffs themselves. The plaintiffs have failed to prove want of jurisdiction in this case. They had a chance to do so in the Civil Court but they failed to allege or prove this aspect of the case. The decision of the Board cannot therefore be challenged on the ground of want of jurisdiction.

[28] It only remains to consider if the plaintiffs are estopped from pleading that they had not received the notices. In this case one of the creditors appeared before the Board on 5-1-1938 but it is a matter of some doubt whether he did so in answer to the summons under S. 8 or had some other work. The creditors have led evidence to show that they were not served at all. For the reasons given by Puranik J., which have been set out with extreme cogency by him, we are also not prepared to draw a presumption under S. 114, Evidence Act, in favour of the debtor and would remand the case for further inquiry which Puranik J., contemplated.

[29] We accordingly set aside the decree passed by Puranik J., and order that the case be sent back to the trial Court to give a finding after due inquiry whether the notices issued under S. 8 of the Act had been served or not. For this purpose parties may be allowed to lead further evidence if they so desire.

[30] The parties are directed to appear before the trial Court on 14-10-1947. The findings be certified to this Court as soon as practicable and the parties will be entitled to file objections within 15 days of the receipt of the findings in this Court.

ORDER OF REFERENCE.

This judgment governs two first appeals, First Appeal No. 119 of 1940 and First Appeal No. 121 of 1940.

[2] Both these appeals involve only one question of law which may be stated thus:

"Whether the power of a Hindu father to sell the interests of his sons in the joint family property for the discharge of his antecedent debts, which are not tainted with illegality or immorality vests, on his adjudication as an insolvent under the Provincial Insolvency Act in the Insolvency Court or the Receiver appointed by the Court and whether the Court or the Receiver, as the case may be, has a right to sell the interests of the sons of the insolvent for the satisfaction of the debts of the insolvent."

[3] It appeared at one time that the High Courts in India were unanimous in the answer to this question, the answer being that the undivided shares of the sons do not vest in the Receiver but the father's power of disposal over those shares vests in him. The decisions of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in 6 Lah. 1[1] and 17 Lah. 644[2] were not regarded in any way inconsistent with the aforesaid answer. The Court of the Judicial Commissioner, Nagpur, as well as this Court consistently took this view as appears from the reported decisions in 29 N. L. R. 159[3] I. L. R. (1937) Nag. 512[4] and I. L. R. (1943) Nag. 390[5] The last case was decided after considering both the decisions of the Judicial Committee referred to above. The other High Courts in India also took the same view as is clear from the cases reported in 49 Mad. 849,[6] 13 Lah. 464,[7] 53 ALL. 239,[8] 5 Pat. 476,[9] and 16 Pat. 60.[10] The learned Judges of the Patna High Court had no doubt taken a different view in 15 Pat. 363,[11] but that case was overruled by a subsequent Full Bench decision of that High Court. The Full Bench decision is reported in 16 Pat. 60.[10]

[4] In I. L. R. (1937) 2 Cal. 675,[12] which was a case of a Dayabhaga Hindu joint family, the learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court expressed a doubt regarding the correctness of the above view though they did not think it necessary in that case to express a definite opinion, as the decision turned on another ground viz., the effect of the attachment of the son's share, which according to the learned Judges put an end to, or at any rate suspended the powers of, the karta or the managing member to deal with the attached property. We are not concerned with that aspect in the appeals before us.

[4A] The learned Judges of the Madras High Court doubted the correctness of the decision in 49 Mad. 849[6] in view of the reasoning of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in 17 Lah. 644[2] and referred the question to a Full Bench. In the Full Bench decision which was reported in I. L. R. (1943) Mad. 83[13] it was pointed out that in both the cases before the Judicial Committee their Lordships had to consider the effect of the insolvency of the father in a Mitakshara joint family, under the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, 1909, and in particular in the light of S. 52 (2) (b) of that Act. Their Lordships have made it clear that they were deciding that question on the wording of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, 1909.

[5] There is no provision in the Provincial Insolvency Act corresponding to S. 52 (2) (b), Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, 1909. The decisions under the Provincial Insolvency Act are based on the interpretation and the effect of S. 2 (d) which, defines 'property,' and S. 28, the vesting section, for which the corresponding provisions in the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act are S. 2 (e) and 17 respectively.

[6] In I. L. R. (1943) Mad. 83[13] the learned Judges of the Madras High Court were dealing with the case of a manager who was not the father of the Mitakshara joint family in the light of the provisions of the Provincial Insolvency Act, and they distinguished the case of a father-manager on the ground that his powers were greater than the powers of a manager who is not the father. The relevant extract from the judgment of the Full Bench delivered by Leach C. J. is as under :

"The Judicial Committee in both the Lahore cases were interpreting the Act governing the law of Insolvency in the Presidency Towns of India, and when, as we have here, decisions of the highest tribunal construing S. 2 (e) and S. 17, Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, the same interpretation must be placed on identical provisions in the Provincial Insolvency Act unless the Act it-elf contains some additional provision running counter, which is not the case ..... If the power of the father is not property under the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, it cannot be regarded as property under the Provincial Insolvency Act, and, and if the father's power is not property, the power of the manager who is not the father cannot be property."

The decision of the Full Bench was that the Official Receiver had no power to sell the undivided share of a coparcener who is not a manager and that the assignee from the Receiver acquired only the interest of the insolvent manager in the properties in suit.

[7] The effect of the insolvency of the father in a Mitakshara joint Hindu family was directly in issue before the Divisional Bench of the Madras High Court in I. L. R. (1944) Mad. 212.[14] The learned Judges observed that the decisions of the Judicial Committee were based on S. 52 (2) (b), Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, for which there was no corresponding provision in the Provincial Insolvency Act. The learned Judges further pointed out that on the reasoning contained in the two decisions of the Judicial Committee the power of the insolvent father to dispose of the entire family property for his personal debts was not 'property' within the definition of the word 'property' in S. 2 (e), Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, which is identical with the definition contained in S. 2 (d), Provincial Insolvency Act. The learned Judges decided that the father's power of disposal is not property under the Provincial Insolvency Act and it does not vest in the Receiver under S. 28 (2) of the Act.

[8] In I. L. R. (1942) 2 Cal. 413[15] the Divisional Bench of the Calcutta High Court while dealing with the effect of the insolvency of the father in a Dayabhaga joint Hindu family held that under the Provincial Insolvency Act the power which can only be exercised for the joint benefit of the bankrupt and another—the only power which a father in a Dayabhaga joint Hindu family has—is not the power which can be exercised by the bankrupt for his own benefit and it is not therefore property within S. 2 (d), Provincial Insolvency Act. This decision in a way suggests that the powers of the father in a Mitakshara joint Hindu family which can be exercised for his own benefit may fall within the definition of the word property in S. 2 (d), Provincial Insolvency Act.

[9] It is clear from what is stated above, that there is of late much divergence of opinion on the question stated above. The High Courts in India are clearly divided in their views, the Calcutta and Madras take one view while other High Courts including this High Court take a different view.

[10] In view of the fact that the question formulated above arises frequently and is of general importance, it is, in our opinion, expedient that it should be referred to a Full Bench for its opinion. We may point out that an identical question was referred to a Full Bench in First Appeal No. 118 of 1940 but the reference had to be dropped on account of a settlement reached between the Receiver and the scheduled creditors in that case.

[11] Let the papers be laid before the Honourable the Chief Justice for orders.

[12] The question that has been referred to us for decision is as follows :

"Whether the power of a Hindu father to sell the interests of his sons in the joint family property for the discharge of his antecedent debts, which are not tainted with illegality or immorality, vests, on his adjudication as an insolvent under the Provincial Insolvency Act, in the insolvency Court or the Receiver appointed by the Court and whether the Court or the Receiver, as the case may be, has a right to sell the interests of the sons of the insolvent for the satisfaction of the debts of the insolvent ?"

and the reason why this question has been referred to the Full Bench is clearly set out in the referring order.

[13] As the order states, neither the Court of the Judicial Commissioner nor this Court has ever entertained any doubt as to the right of the Receiver in an insolvency case to sell, in the case of the insolvency of a Hindu father, the interests of his sons in the joint family property to satisfy his antecedent debts, provided such debts are not tainted with illegality or immorality. The extreme view that the interests of the sons in the joint family property itself passed on with the interests of the father, which is a proposition that was negatived in 6 Lah. 1,[1] has never been held here. In 29 N. L. R. 159[3] it was laid down that when the manager of a joint Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara law, is adjudicated an insolvent, then, assuming that the debts payable by the manager are such as are binding on the coparceners, their undivided interests in the joint family property do not vest in the Receiver; but the power of disposal of such interests which the manager possesses under the Hindu law for satisfaction of such debts, passes on to the Receiver under S 28 (2), Provincial Insolvency Act. It will be noted that this case is one of a manager. The argument is of course stronger in the case where the manager is the father. This principle was affirmed in I. L. R. (1937) Nag. 512[4] where it was held that the Receiver appointed by the Insolvency Court has power to sell the shares of the insolvent's sons in the joint family property for paying the just and proper debts of their father, the insolvent, and indeed in I. L. R (1943) Nag. 390[5] a decision to which one of us was a party and a decision which is subsequent to both 6 Lah. 1[1] and 17 Lah. 644[2] it was assumed, after consideration of those decisions, that there could be no question of the proposition that the power of the father to sell his son's share in the joint family property for his own debts vested in the Receiver.

[14] Subsequent to the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the connected cases of 6 Lah. 1[1] and 17 Lah. 644[2] there have been two diametrically opposed interpretations, the earlier being a Full Bench decision of the Patna High Court in 16 Pat 60[10] and the later a Full Bench decision of the Madras High Court in I. L. R. (1943) Mad. 83.[13] There is also the decision in I. L. R. (1942) 2 Cal. 413[15] but that was a decision concerning the power of the manager to deal with the property of his coparceners under the Dayabhaga school. Any dicta concerning what the law might be in the case of the karta of a Mitakshara Hindu joint family would be obiter and do not, in our opinion, call for consideration.

[15] It has been contended before us in support of the view that these connected decisions of their Lordships of the Privy Council have disrupted the view, taken not only in this Court but universally in India, of the power of a Receiver to sell the son's interests in the joint family of which the father and manager have become insolvents, that the direct ruling of their Lordships that the power does exist is applicable only to cases arising out of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act and is based on a consideration of the terms of S. 52 (2) (b) of that Act, corresponding provisions of which do not exist in the Provincial Insolvency Act of 1920, and that it has been laid down by their Lordships that this power to sell is not "property" as defined in the appropriate clause of S. 2, the definition section of either Act and that consequently as it is not "property" and nothing corresponding to S. 52 exists in the Provincial Insolvency Act, there remains now no power in the Receiver to sell or to apply the power in the way the insolvent father could have applied it. That is the view taken in the Madras High Court in contra-distinction to the view expressed some six years earlier in the Patna High Court. Their Lordships of the Madras High Court have referred to the Patna view in the following words :

" The only High Court which has considered the question since the delivery of the judgment in 17 Lah. 644 [2] is the Patna High Court. In 16 Pat. 60,[10] a Full Bench of that Court held that the father's power to sell vested in the Official Receiver under the Provincial Insolvency Act. We have considered that judgment, but we do not find anything in it which tends to shake the opinion which we have just expressed."

[16] While preferring the view of the Patna High Court to that of the Madras High Court, we do not propose to dismiss our consideration of the latter High Court's judgment in quite so summary a manner, and while expressing our respectful dissent from their conclusion, we would suggest that the conclusion reached is due to a misinterpretation of what their Lordships of the Privy Council have said. Their Lordships were presented with a plea of the defendants, vide 6 Lah. 1,[1] that on adjudication of the father and manager of the joint Hindu family

" the whole of the family estates and effects as well as the right, title and interest of the insolvent became vested in the Official Assignee of Bombay, who since then became the legal owner with powers of control and disposal and obtained possession of all the estate and properties including the house through which plaintiff claims possession."

As their Lordships said, this involves a startling proposition that

" when a Hindu, who happens with his sons to constitute a joint family subject to the law of the Mitakshara, is adjudged an insolvent under the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, 1909, not only his own rights but all the rights and interests of his sons who are his coparceners in joint family property vest in the Official Assignee by virtue of the adjudication alone."

This proposition their Lordships proceeded to negative in 6 Lah. 1, [1] and in the subsequent case, 17 Lah. 644, [2] they decided the point which had been specifically left open that the power of the Hindu father, governed by the Mitakshara law, to sell the joint family property to pay his antecedent debts did vest in the Official Assignee.

[17] When their Lordships referred to S. 2 (e), Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, which is identical with 2 (d), Provincial Insolvency Act, in these terms

" The father's power to dispose of the joint property is not absolute, but conditional on his having debts which are liable to be satisfied out of that property; and S. 2 seems to contemplate an absolute and unconditional power of disposal" they are, in our opinion, not to be taken as placing an absolute limitation on the interpretation of the word "property" in that definition as, with all respect, we consider the Madras High Court appears to hold. In the first place, we do not think that there could be any intention or any possibility of reaching a conclusion limiting the definition which begins with the word "includes". In the next place, their Lordships were disposing of an unwarranted interpretation which appears to lie on the surface of the phrase "disposing power" which might be taken to mean, as their Lordships indicate, an absolute and unconditional power of disposal, and their Lordships have pointed out that the power of the father of a Mitakshara family is not absolute but conditional on his having debts which are of a nature which the Hindu law says shall be satisfied out of that property. We do not find in their Lordships' judgment, in the same way as it was not found in I. L. R. (1943) Nag. 390, [5] anything to show that this power did not vest in the Receiver and is not one of the items of "property" which by S. 28, Provincial Insolvency Act, does so vest.

[18] Finally, we would point out in answering the contention based on the finding of the Madras High Court that what may be good law in respect of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act is not good law under the Provincial Insolvency Act, the fact that the pronouncement of their Lordships in the case before them that the claim of the Official Assignee to exercise the insolvent's powers to sell the joint family property for his antecedent debts was well-founded, is based on decisions which their Lordships cited with such approval that, in their own words, "it is unnecessary (for us) to refer further." Two of these decisions are from the Madras High Court—46 Mad. 54, [16] 47 Mad. 87, [17] and two from the Allahabad High Court—44 ALL. 316 [18] and 47 ALL. 263, [19] and both these latter decisions are decisions under the Provincial Insolvency Act. That, in our opinion, is sufficient to dispose of the contention that the law is otherwise under the Provincial Insolvency Act than under the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act. It has been faintly objected before us that 44 ALL. 316, [18] one of the cases to which we have referred, is founded on 7 Bom. 438 [20] of which their Lordships have expressed disapproval in 6 Lah. 1 [1] at p. 16. A glance at the earlier case will show that two propositions were advanced there, one being identical with that on which 44 All. 316, [18] was decided, namely that from the date of the adjudication the Receiver takes over all rights in the insolvent's property which the insolvent himself possessed and one of those rights would be to alienate coparcenary property belonging to himself and his minor sons in satisfaction of antecedent debts incurred by him, provided those debts were not tainted with immorality, and another proposition, which is the one of which their Lordships expressed disapproval, where it was indicated that what would vest in the official Assignee would include the actual unpartitioned separate interest of a Hindu coparcener in the immovable property of a joint family—vide 6 Lah. 1. [1]

[19] To sum up then, we are of opinion that the judgments of their Lordships of the Privy Council in 6 Lah. 1[1] and in 17 Lah. 644 [2] have not altered the law as laid down by this Court and its predecessor in respect of the vesting of a Hindu father's right to sell his son's shares in the undivided joint family property for his antecedent debts, in the Receiver when the father is adjudged an insolvent. The cursus curiae of this Court remains undisturbed and the question is answered in the affirmative.

Civil Revn. No. 407 of 1944, Decided on 5-4-1946, from order of Sub-Judge, 1st class, Daryapur, D- 17-7-1944.

(a) Court-fees Act (1870), S. 12—Order accepting plaintiff's valuation — Revision — Civil P. C. S. 115.

Where the Court disallows defendant's objection as to valuation in plaint and accepts plaintiff's valuation and the question of jurisdiction is not involved, no revision lies against such order as a rule of practice and the question of court-fee can be left over to be determined in an appeal from the decree. But where the question of jurisdiction is also involved, it is expedient to entertain revision petitions under S. 115, Civil P. C. so that the question of jurisdiction may be determined at the outset. 25 A. I. R. 1938 Nag. 122 (F. B.) Foll., Case law discussed. [Paras 4, 5]

(b) Court-fees Act (1870), Ss. 7 (iv) (c) and 17—Suit for cancellation of document and for possession —Valuation—Payment on entire value of property not necessary —Separate court-fee not to be paid for relief of possession.

A suit for cancellation of a deed of gift and for the recovery of portion of the property covered by the deed is governed by S. 7 (iv) (c). Plaintiff has to state the amount at which he values the suit. He need not pay court-fee on the entire value of the property as S. 40 Specific Relief Act, allows cancellation of a document in part. Plaintiff is not liable to pay court-fee on the relief of possession under S. 7 (v) as that claim is only ancillary to the main claim of cancellation of the document: Case law discussd. [Paras 10, 11, 12]

Order.—This is an application to revise an interlocutory order of the Subordinate Judge, First Class, Daryapur, passed in civil suit No. 209-A of 1944 on 17th July 1944. By that order the lower Court accepted the valuation for court-fees and jurisdiction as put by the plaintiff and permitted the suit to proceed.

[2] One Mahomed Shareef died on 29-3-1943 survived by his three widows named Mt. Binnabi, Mt. Gulabbi and Mt. Bunabi, and a son named Mahomed Ibrahim, and a daughter named Mt. Rahimbi. Within a month of the death of Mahomed Shareef, there arose disputes among his heirs which were apparently sought to be settled on 20-4-1943 by the execution of 4 documents by Mt. Binabi, Mt. Gulabbi and Mahomed Ibrahim as follows: A gift deed in favour of Abdul Jalil (defendant 1) comprising two revenue paying fields of the market value of R. 6,000. A gift deed in favour of Mahomed Yasin (defendant 4) comprising one field of the market value of Rs. 200. A gift deed in favour of a Musjid (represented by panchas defendants 5 to 10) and comprising one field of the market value of Rs 400. A partition deed of the rest of the property was executed by the two widows and the son whereby it was divided into 2 lots, one of which was allotted to Mahomed Ibrahim, Mt. Bunabi and Mt. Rahimbi jointly and the other to Mt Binnabi and Mt. Gulabbi jointly. The suit out of which this proceeding arises was instituted by Mahamed Ibrahim for a declaration that the above-mentioned 4 documents were void and inoperative as against him on account of misrepresentation, fraud and undue influence and for a fresh partition and possession of his share of the property left by his father.

[3] The suit for purposes of court-fees and jurisdiction, was valued as follows: For Court-fees: The fields which were comprised in the three gift deeds were valued on the basis of the land revenue assessed on them, the land revenue Rs. 234; plaintiff's share (9 annas 4 pies) of the land revenue Rs. 136-4-0 × $7\frac{1}{2}$=1053-8. The relief in regard to partition of the property was valued at Rs. 200. Total for court-fees Rs. 1253-8-0. For jurisdiction: the suit was valued at Rs. 136-4-0 X 15=2047-8-0 + 200-0-0=2247-8-0. In the lower Court the defendant objected to the valuation on the ground that the valuation for court-fees and jurisdiction should have been on the basis of the market value, and contended, on that view, that the suit was beyond the jurisdiction of the lower Court. The lower Court held that the suit was properly valued both for purposes of court-fees and jurisdiction on the basis of the land revenue.

[4] It is contended in limine that an application for revision does not lie as the lower Court accepted the plaintiff's valuation. The point was debated at some length with citation in I. L. R. (1938) Nag. 106,[1] I. L. R. (1943) Nag. 802,[2] 16 Pat. 766,[3] 56 Mad. 744[4] and A. I. R. 1941 Cal. 518[5] to show that the view which I had taken in 1946 N. L. J. 110[6] was erroneous. The authorities no doubt make a distinction between an order demanding additional court-fees and an order accepting the court-fees paid by the plaintiff while considering the question of the exercise of revisional jurisdiction. But in principle there is really no basis for any such distinction. If refusal of the Court to proceed with the suit unless the plaintiff pays additional court-fees is regarded as failure to exercise jurisdiction, it may also be said on the other hand that the Court wrongly accepting inadequate court-fees and permitting the suit to proceed would be wrong assumption of jurisdiction.

[4A] The controversy is usually raised by the defendant, involving questions of court-fees and jurisdiction or court-fees alone, by saying that the suit is under-valued. If the Court accepts the defendant's plea, it calls upon the plaintiff to make up the deficit court-fees and refuses to proceed with the suit unless that is done. This is regarded as a refusal to exercise jurisdiction. On the other hand, the Court may reject the defendant's contention and accept the plaintiff's valuation. In this case if the Court is wrong in rejecting the defendant's contention it would be permitting the under-valued and under-stamped suit to proceed which it would have no jurisdiction to do. Is it not a wrong assumption of jurisdiction? Why should the High Court entertain the revision petition only where the Court accepts the defendant's contention and not otherwise? The Court cannot give itself jurisdiction which it does not possess by taking an erroneous view of the law. Even in cases in which the question of the amount of court-fees alone is involved, the error of the Court in accepting court-fees as paid by the plaintiff may be manifest on the face of it as it was in 1946 N. L. J. 110.[6] In such a case a party who contests the correctness of the Court's order is not entitled to invoke the provisions of S. 115, Civil P. C.; but if he applies for revision only to draw the attention of the High Court to the manifest error would it be wrong for the High Court of its own motion to take action under S. 12 of the Court-fees Act and rectify the error? The revisional jurisdiction is entirely discretionary which the High Court may exercise in any manner that it deems reasonable and proper. Nevertheless I agree that the view expressed in I. L. R. (1938) Nag. 106[1] should be adopted as a rule of practice; and the cases in which the question of court-fees, not involving also the question of jurisdiction, can well be left over to be determined in an appeal from the decree.

[5] In the present case, the question of court-fees is mixed up with that of jurisdiction. If the rule enunciated in I. L. R. (1938) Nag. 106[1] is applied, this revision petition could not even be admitted. What would be the result? The suit would proceed to its termination in the Subordinate Judge's Court and an appeal would be preferred against it. If the appellate Court would agree with the defendant, the whole proceeding would have to be declared null and void and the plaint would have to be returned for presentation to proper Court i. e., a Court which is competent to try a suit of the value upwards of Rs. 5,000. What a waste of time, money and labour it will be? It is therefore expedient in cases such as this, involving question of jurisdiction, to entertain revision petitions under S. 115, Civil P. C., so that the question of jurisdiction may be determined at the outset on the principle underlying S. 21, Civil P. C.

[6] The questions raised in this case are of a complex character and it is therefore necessary to analyse the claim for reliefs prayed for by the plaintiff in respect of each of the several documents.

(A) Gift deed in Jalil's favour comprises fields assessed to	...	Rs. 218-12-0 worth Rs. 6,000.
(D) Gift deed in Yasins' favour comprises 1 field assessed to	...	Rs. 6-0-0 worth Rs. 200.
(E) Gift deed in favour of mosque comprises 1 field assessed to	...	Rs. 8-11-0 worth Rs. 400.
		Rs. 233-7-0 Rs. 6600

In the partition deed property (including fields and houses) worth Rs. 1091-0 3 was allotted to the plaintiff and Mt. Rahimbi and property worth Rs 887-15-3 was allotted to Mt. Binabi and Mt. Gulabbi.

[7] The plaintiff was out of possession of all property except that portion which fell to the joint share of himself and Mt. Rahimbi. The plaintiff was a party to the execution of the gift deeds as well as the partition deed. On the allegations of fraud etc., he prayed for a declaration that the gift deeds and the partition-deed be declared void and as consequential reliefs asked for possession of the fields comprised in the gift deeds and for partition of the whole property included in the gift and partition deeds.

[8] I shall take up the question of the gift deeds. The defendants' (applicants') contention is that the case is one which falls to be governed by s 7 (iv) (c), Court-fees Act, for the reason that as he was himself a party to the execution of these gift deeds, he cannot merely ask for a declaration that they were void but also that they should be cancelled. That the plaintiff in such a case as this cannot evade payment of court-fees on the consequential relief by merely asking for a declaratory relief is now well settled: see I. L. R. (1943) Nag. 440.[7] But the point here is that he does ask for consequential relief viz., the possession of the fields. Is the plaintiff to pay separate court-fees on the relief of cancellation in addition to what he had paid for the relief of possession? The learned counsel on either side debated the point at great length with citation in 7 N. L. R. 190,[8] 16 N. L. R. 84,[9] 25 N. L. R. 52,[10] 1930 N. L. J. 180[11] 54 ALL 812,[12] and 10 Pat. 482[13] but could not find the answer. As I looked up the authorities I am inclined to think that recent Madras decisions lend some guidance to the solution of the problem. In 38 Mad. 1184[14] the plaintiff prayed for a declaration that a decree was of no legal effect and for possession of properties affected by it. He paid court fees as follows:

Court-fee for declaration ... Rs. 10/-
Court-fee for possession of properties on Rs. 500/- being five times the kist of the lands sought to be recovered. ... Rs. 37/8/-

The District Munsif held that the prayer for the declaration was a substantial relief and that the plaintiffs must value their relief for declaration at Rs. 2400/- the amount of the decree sought to be set aside, in addition to the court-fees paid for the relief of possession. On appeal the District Judge, holding that S. 7. (iv)(c), Court-fees Act was applicable, accepted the plaintiffs' valuation of the reliefs and set aside the Munsifs' order. The question was considered by the Division Bench of the High Court under S. 115, Civil P. C., (in spite of the fact that the District Judge had accepted the plaintiffs' valuation) and the learned Judges held that the District Judge was mistaken in thinking that S. 7 (v) (c), Court-fees Act regulated the valuation of the whole suit, since part of the relief claimed was possession which has to be valued in accordance with S. 7 (v), notwithstanding that a declaration was asked for; but they agreed with the District Judge that the two prayers could not be regarded separately as the possession was not asked for on any other ground than that the decree in execution of which it was lost, should be declared invalid. It was conceded in that case that the two reliefs could not be valued independently and that the relief of possession was merely consequential.

[9] By Act V of 1922, the Provincial Legislature of Madras amended sub-section (iv) of S. 7 Court-fees Act by introducing clause (iv-A) to provide specifically for cases of cancellation of decrees and other documents. According to it, in a suit for cancellation of a decree or other instrument, the court fees were prescribed to be paid according to the value of the subject-matter of the suit; such value was deemed to be

"if the whole decree or other document is sought to be cancelled, the amount of the value of the property for which the decree was passed or other document executed; if a part of the decree or other document is sought to be cancelled, such part of the amount or value of the property."

With reference to this enactment the question arose whether the "value of the property" meant market "value" or "statutory value" as laid down in S. 7 (v), Court-fees Act. In A. I. R. 1927 Mad. 825[15] it was held that in a suit to set aside a decree the court-fees were payable on the basis of the statutory and not the market value if the property was revenue-paying land. In A. I. R. 1932 Mad. 491,[16] which was a suit for setting aside a partition deed, the court-fees were allowed to be paid on the statutory value of the subject-matter of the suit, following the last mentioned case.

[10] I am not concerned here with the local amendment of S. 7 (IV), Court-fees Act made in Madras but with the interpretation put on the word "value". Since, in our Province, in the absence of such an amendment of the Court-fees Act, the suit for cancellation of a document would fall under S. 7 (iv) (c), it has to be considered whether the market value or the statutory value should be taken to be the basis for calculation of court-fees. In cases such as mortgage deeds or decrees for money or even sale deeds, the question may well arise, as it did in 7 N. L. R. 190,[8] 16 N. L. R. 84,[9] 25 N. L. R. 52,[10] whether the court-fees are payable on the amount, the payment of which the plaintiff seeks to avoid or the value of the property in dispute; but in the present case the question relates to a gift deed which comprises only the revenue-paying fields. It therefore stands on a better footing than the decree, which was the subject-matter of the suit in A. I. R. 1927 Mad. 825.[15] As the suit falls under S. 7 (iv) (c), the plaintiff has to state the amount at which he values his suit. He has stated the value to be 7½ times the land revenue payable on the fields. Can the Court refuse to accept his valuation? The answer is yes, but that is subject to a qualification viz., that the plaintiff's valuation is fanciful or otherwise unreasonable. This was pointed out in I. L. R. (1938) Nag. 558[17] at p. 566. It cannot be said that the plaintiff's valuation is unreasonable since that would be the right valuation if the plaintiff had brought a suit for possession only. As the learned Judges point out in A. I. R. 1927 Mad. 825,[15] where special rule of valuation is provided by law itself, it is but proper to follow that rule rather than adopt any other method.

[11] The next question is: Has the plaintiff to pay court-fees on the entire value of the property or only a part of it commensurate with his share in it? It is contended that since the document has to be cancelled, court-fees must be paid in full. I do not see my way to accede to this contention in view of S. 40, Specific Relief Act, which permits of cancellation of a document in part. I may as well advert here to 30 Cal. 738[18] in which case their Lordships of the Privy Council pointed out that a person aggrieved with a partition could sue to set it aside so far as it affected himself (ibid p. 752).

[12] Now, it may be recalled that the plaintiff has paid court-fees only for the relief of possession but has not paid court-fees for the relief of cancellation. The question is, should he be called upon to pay double set of court-fees? I think, he should not be. In 56 Mad. 401[19] it was held that in a suit for cancellation of a sale deed and for the recovery of possession of the property covered by the deed, the plaintiff is not liable to pay court-fees on the relief with regard to possession under S. 7 (v), Court fees Act because the claim for possession is only ancillary to the main claim which is the setting aside of the sale deed. This view accords with the local amendment of S. 17, Court-fees Act made by C. P. and Berar Act I of 1941, (vide proviso to section 17 (2)). That disposes of the question relating to the three gift deeds.

[13] As to the partition-deed, the plaintiff had paid only Rs.20 as for declaration but has not paid on the relief of cancellation. He was one of the executants of the partition deed and he cannot reopen the transaction unless he obtains cancellation of that deed. He must therefore pay court-fees on his 7/12th share of the value of the property comprised in that deed. It is as follows:—

S. No./2	Assessment 50
9/1	20-6-0
8	46-8-0
8/2	32-8-0
14	63-14-3
	262-9-6 x7 ½	=1968-12-0
House worth	250
House worth	400
3 mango trees.	6
	656	656-0-0

The plaintiff must pay court-fees on 7/12th of 2624 12 0=1531 in round figure for the relief of cancellation. He need not pay for the relief of possession.

[14] The value for jurisdiction will be as follows:—

Gift deeds—plaintiff's 7/12th share of the total assessment.	—	136-4-0 x 15	=2043-12-0
Partition deed: (a) Fields	-Do-	153-4-0 x 15	=2298-12-0
(b) Houses and trees worth	—	656-0-0
		4998-8-0

As the value for jurisdiction does not exceed Rs. 5,000, the suit is triable by the lower Court. The case is sent back to the lower Court with direction to recover court-fees on Rs. 1531 on account of the relief relating to the partition deed.

[15] I make no order as to costs as the success is equally divided between the parties.

Civil Revn. No. 298 of 1944, Decided on 25-7-1947, from order of 4th Sub-Judge, 2nd Class, Nagpur, D/- 4-5-1944.

(a) Court-fees Act (1870), S. 7 (iv) (c) and S. 7 (iv) (f)—Mode of valuation of plaint — Valuation by plaintiff — Arbitrary valuation — Power of Court to interfere under O. 7, R. 11, Civil P. C.

The principle underlying S. 7 (iv) (c) and S. 7 (iv) (f) is substantially the same. In both the cases it is for the plaintiff to put his valuation whether it is a case of consequential relief or whether it is a case of accounts. Ordinarily the Court should not endeavour to correct the plaintiff's valuation except in a clear case where the disparity is so great as to show that the plaintiff has not endeavoured to fix a fair value at all but has simply set down a figure which is unreasonable and bears no relation to the value of the right litigated. When the valuation put for court-fee purposes by the plaintiff on a relief sought by him in a suit appears to be arbitrary and unreasonable the Court may reject the plaint and leave the plaintiff to correct the valuation or have the suit rejected. There is nothing in the Court-fees Act which shows that in this type of case the power which the Court is given by the Civil P. C. to challenge an undervaluation is taken away and if the Court thinks that the value assessed is unreasonable there is no reason why it should not treat that unreasonable valuation as an undervaluation and exercise its powers under O. 7, R. 11, Civil P. B. R. Mandlekar — for Applicants.

P. Lobo and H. N. Vaidya — for Non-Applicants, Nos. 1; and 2 and 3, respectively.

Order. — The plaintiff (non-applicant No. 1 before me) filed this suit for accounts of a dissolved partnership or for dissolution and accounts under the Partnership Act valued at Rs. 150/- for the purposes of court-fees as well as jurisdiction. On the face of the plaint, the business of partnership between the parties was a big concern as it involved the work of constructing buildings and taxi-trucks, and other construction work in the Nagpur Aerodrome Area under the Central Public Works Department, Aviation Division, Nagpur, worth over a lac of rupees. After the institution of the suit, the plaintiff filed an application (interlocutory application No. 1) for the appointment of a Receiver on 29-3-1944 on the ground that the second defendant Budh Singh (who died during the pendency of this revision leaving him surviving a widow and 5 sons, non-applicants Nos. 4 (a) to (f)) had fraudulently contrived to obtain and disburse an amount of Rs. 1,42,143-15-6 on 28-2-1944 on behalf of the partnership from the office of the Executive Engineer, Aviation Division, Central Public Works Department, Nagpur, in spite of notices served on the defendants individually on 25-11-1943 to the contrary. It was also alleged that all the valuable and relevant documents concerning the business were removed from Nagpur to Akola in Berar where 3 of the defendants reside with a view to preventing the plaintiff from having any access thereto and to causing him loss and annoyance. On 30-11-1944 the plaintiff also filed an application (interlocutory application No. 10) for attachment before judgment under O. 38, R. 5, Civil P. C., and there again he complained that Budh Singh (defendant 2) had drawn other sums totalling to Rs. 5,72,000/- on various dates, which he had partly paid to defendents 3 and 5 and 6 to the exclusion of the plaintiff. It was contended that this money belonged to the partnership in suit and was deposited in the Imperial Bank of India, Nagpur, and that out of this sum defendant 2 had drawn a sum of Rupees 2,90,000 in his favour. In view of the large and extensive business of the partnership worth over a lack of rupees the defendants applied to the lower Court and contended that the plaintiff had deliberately and arbitrarily undervalued his relief and that his valuation at Rs. 150 for the purposes of court-fees and jurisdiction was palpably low and absurd. It was further contended that in any case the valuation ought to be in excess of Rs. 5,000 which he had actually contributed as his share of capital for the partnership and filed his suit in a higher Court so as to be able to agitate the dispnte in the High Court by way of first appeal. The plaintiff has by putting such a low valuation deliberately filed his suit in the Court of the 4th Subordinate Judge, 2nd Class, Nagpur, with a pecuniary jurisdiction of Rs. 500 only so as to deprive the defendants of their right to appeal to the High Court. If the plaintiff's suit is correctly valued the Court of the 4th Subordinate Judge, 2nd Class, will have no jurisdiction to try it and the plaint will have to be returned for presentation to the proper Court.

[2] The lower Court, relying upon some observations in the Full Bench case reported in I. L. R. (1938) Nag. 558[1] and divorced from the context, rejected the defendants' application and negatived their contention on the ground that the Court was powerless to challenge the valuation put by the plaintiff on the relief claimed in the suit. It is against this order that Attarsingh, Harnamsingh and Harbuxsingh (defendants 4 and 6) have jointly preferred this revision.

[3] It is contended by Mr. B. R. Mandlekar advocate for the applicants that the lower Court did not correctly appreciate the principles of law as laid down in the Full Bench case in I. L. R. (1938) Nag. 558[1] and he pointedly referred to the discussion of the matter at pp. 569 to 571. It is no doubt true that the question about the court-fees before the Full Bench was in regard to a case under S. 7 (iv) (c) of the Court-fees Act and that the point for decision before me relates to a case under S. 7 (iv) (f) of the Court-fees Act. In my view the principle underlying both these provisions is substantially the same. In both the cases it is for the plaintiff to put his valuation whether it is a case of consequential relief or whether it is a case of accounts. It is held by the Full Bench that ordinarily the Court should not endeavour to correct the plaintiff's valuation except in a clear case where the disparity is so great as to show that the plaintiff has not endeavoured to fix a fair value at all but has simply set down a figure which is unreasonable and bears no relation to the value of the right litigated and it is further held that when the valuation put for court-fee purposes by the plaintiff on a relief sought by him in a suit appears to be arbitrary and unreasonable the Court may reject the plaint and leave the plaintiff to correct the valuation or have the suit rejected. Their Lordships have observed that there is nothing in the Court-fees Act which shows that in this type of case the power which the Court is given by the Civil Procedure Code to challenge an undervaluation is taken away and if the Court thought that the value assessed was unreasonable there was no reason why it could not treat that unreasonable valuation as an undervaluation and exercise its powers under O. 7, R. 11, Civil P. C.

[4] The learned counsel for the applicants also relied on 21 Pat. 720[2] in support of his contention that the mere admission of a plaint or appeal did not operate to deprive the Court of the power to reject it for insufficiency of court-fee under O. 7, R. 7, Civil P. C., 1908. It was further contended that regard being had to the nature of the partnership transactions involving thousands of rupees and to the fact that this partnership was assessed to excess profit taxes to the extent of a lac of rupees or more and also the fact that the Court will be required to examine such extensive accounts between the parties for the purpose of ascertaining the plaintiff's 1/7th share of the profit of partnership, it is quite obvious that the plaintiff's valuation of his relief of Rs. 150 for the purpose of court-fees and jurisdiction is manifestly low and unreasonable and it is the duty of the Court to correct the valuation and in case the proper valuation exceeds the jurisdiction of the Court to return it for presentation to the proper Court. It is further contended that the view of the lower Court that it is powerless and has no jurisdiction to correct the valuation is not tenable in law and that the lower Court has failed to exercise the jurisdiction that vests in it under S. 115, Civil P. C.

[5] The learned counsel appearing on behalf of the plaintiff (non-applicant No. 1 here) contended that it might turn out after the rendition of accounts that the plaintiff might not be found to be entitled to the relief of Rs. 150 as valued in the plaint. It was also argued that in case the plaintiff is eventually found entitled to any amount in excess of Rs 150 he will not be allowed to execute the decree unless he has made up the deficit court-fee under S. 11 of the Court-fees Act and that in any case there will be no loss of revenue. It should be borne in mind that S. 11 of the Act will come into play only after the final decree is passed as it would be by virtue of a final decree that the plaintiff's share would be definitely ascertained. My attention in this connection was drawn to a Division Bench case, viz., Misc. F. A. No. 257 of 1939.[3] A similar argument based on the provisions of S. 11 of the Court-fees Act was put forward in that case, but it was repelled by their Lordships on the ground that there was nothing in S. 11 that took away the power of the Court to challenge an undervaluation in the plaint.

[6] The learned counsel for the plaintiff (non-applicant No. 1) relied upon A. I. R. 1941 Rang. 322[4] at p. 323 and 1942 N. L. J. 197.[5] The Rangoon case was a suit for administration being suit for accounts and there is conflict of decision whether a suit for administration is a suit for accounts for purposes of S. 7, para. (iv), cl. (f) of the Court-fees Act. The Madras High Court has recently decided in I. L. R. (1942) Mad. 455[6] that a suit for administration is not a suit for accounts and is not governed by this clause. In any case whether a suit for administration is one for accounts or not I am not, with great respect to the learned Judges of the Rangoon High Court, inclined to accept the extreme position laid down by them that the plaintiff is entitled to place his own valuation on the relief sought and that it cannot be challenged by the Court under any circumstances. That the remedy suggested by them to the aggrieved defendant who considers that the relief has been undervalued and he is being deprived of his rights of appeal thereby lies under S. 24, Civil P. C., does not appeal to me as correct. Their Lordships suggest that in case the amount eventually found due to the plaintiff in a suit for accounts exceeds by far the plaintiff's valuation the aggrieved defendant should either move the High Court or the District Court for a transfer of the suit or appeal or other proceeding to any Court subordinate to it and competent to try or dispose of the same. Manifestly this remedy is obviously unworkable for the simple reason that the valuation of the lis continues throughout all its stages up to the termination of the lis and it would be apparently very difficult to persuade the High Court to transfer the appeal from the file of the District Court to its own file under the provisions of S. 23, Civil P. C., merely because the amount that is found due to the plaintiff has exceeded the plaintiff's valuation to such an extent that first appeal lay only to the High Court. The Nagpur case can be distinguished from the present case in so far as in that case there was no difficulty of jurisdiction being ousted in case the plaintiff's valuation was corrected by the Court.

[7] I think that there is ample material on the record to show that the plaintiff's valuation at Rs. 150/- is manifestly low and unreasonable and the lower Court had had full jurisdiction to correct it. I do not think that in the circumstances of the case it is fair and just to allow the plaintiff to carry on his litigation till the end, and then in the event of his success enable him to offer the deficit court-fees and reap full benefit of his decree. I allow the revision petition and set aside the order of the lower Court and direct it to enquire into the matter and decide the question of correct valuation of the plaintiff's relief in the suit. The costs of this application should be borne by the plaintiff (non-applicant No. 1). Counsel's fee Rs. 100/- as certified.

Limitation Act (1908), Art. 75 — Applicability — Instalment bond with exigibility clause — Starting point—Waiver—What amounts to.

A suit on an instalment bond with an exigibility clause is governed by Art. 75. The cause of action to recover the entire debt starts when the exigibility clause comes into operation unless the payee or the obligee waives the benefit. Once the exigibility clause comes into operation the primary terms about repayment are superseded and the cause of action to recover all the instalments due or not due under the original agreement accrues. The creditor thereafter cannot take advantage of the primary terms and sue for those instalments only which are within limitation on the strength of the primary contract terms. The exigibility clause is for the benefit of the creditor and he has a right to waive that benefit even in the absence of a fresh agreement, a fresh consideration or a fresh bilateral arrangement. Where the benefit of the exigibility clause when it comes into operation on the first occasion is waived, the cause of action accrues when fresh default is made in respect of which there is no waiver. Waiver is a mixed question of law and fact and it has to be properly pleaded and proved by the creditor. A choice left to the creditor in the default clause itself is inconsequential. A mere inaction on the part of the creditor such as an abstinance to sue or a mere receipt of payment does not amount to a waiver. What is required is some overt act on the part of the creditor communicated to the debtor. The payment by the debtor and the acceptance by the creditor specifically made towards the satisfaction of a particular defaulted instalment would amount to a waiver of that default and of the benefit arising out of that default: Case law discussed. [Paras 5, 6 and 12]

Order.—This is a civil revision by the plaintiff against the dismissal of his suit based on an instalment bond dated 27-4-1936 for Rs. 231-4-0 payable by 9 annual instalments on the follow.

ing dates : Rupees 25 on 27-4-1936. Rs. 25 on 10-5-1937. Rs. 25 on 30-4-1938. Rs. 25 on 9-4-1939. Rs. 25 on 7-5-1940. Rs. 25 on 26-4-1941. Rs. 25 on 15-4-1942. Rs. 25 on 4-5-1943. Rs. 25 on 22-4-1944. It is further stipulated that interest at 1-8-0 p.c. p.m. would be paid on defaulted instalments and the entire amount would become payable on default of any three instalments.

[2] The defendant paid the following amounts: Rupees 25 on 27-4-1936. Rs. 25 on 23-8-1937. Rs. 25 on 7-6-1938. Rs. 25 on 8-2-1940. Rs. 10 on 28-4-1942.

[3] The pleadings in the case are, as usual, not clear and much is left merely to inferences. The plaintiff put down the cause of action for the suit on 15-4-1942, i. e., on default of the 7th instalment and pleaded that the first four instalments were satisfied. Waiver is not pleaded expressly. What was however implied was that the defaults in payment of the second, third and fourth instalments on due dates were waived when the debtor paid the amounts on 23-8-1937, 7-6 1938 and 8-2-1940 as instalments and were received and appropriated by the creditor as instalments. It is on that basis that the plaintiff regarded the fifth, sixth and seventh instalment as defaulted instalments bringing into operation the exigibility clause.

[4] In the absence of an express plea of waiver the lower Court dismissed the plaintiff's suit in limine as barred by limitation. Relying on 28 N. L. R. 44[1] and I. L. R. (1943) Nag. 630[2] it held that mere forbearance to sue after the operation of the exigibility clause does not amount to a waiver. The extracts of account books which the plaintiff had filed were returned to him and they are again produced in this Court.

[5] It is beyond dispute that the article of the Limitation Act which governs a suit on an instalment bond with an exigibility clause is Article 75 of the Act. It is equally beyond dispute that the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in 7 Luck. 442[3] does not apply to suits falling under Article 75, Limitation Act. The cause of action to recover the entire debt starts when the exigibility clause comes into operation unless the payee or the obligee waives the benefit; where the waiver of the benefit of the exigibility clause when it came into operation on the first occasion is pleaded and proved, the cause of action accrues when fresh default is made in respect of which there is no waiver.

[6] It was at one time thought that waiver was not necessary to be pleaded and proved when the clause in the bond sued upon itself left an option to the creditor to take or not to take the benefit of the exigibility clause. It was also thought that the plaintiff was in any case entitled to recover such instalments as were within limitation on the basis of the primary term regarding the payment of instalments. Both these contentions are now set at rest. It was pointed out by the Full Bench of the Judicial Commissioner's Court in 28 N. L. R. 44[1] following 53 Cal. 277[4] that the wording of the clause was immaterial. It was observed that the question is not what the creditor should do but what the debtor was liable for. The same view is taken in a very recent Full Bench decision of the Allahabad Hign Court reported in 57 ALL 108[5] and also in A. I. R. 1947 ALL 38.[6] Thus it is absolutely necessary in a suit falling under Article 75 of the Limitation Act, and not instituted within 3 years of the operation of the exigibility clause that the creditor must plead and prove that he waived the benefit of the exigibility clause when it operated. Once the exigibility clause comes into operation, the primary terms about repayment are superseded and the cause of action to recover all the instalments due or not due under the original agreement accrues. The plaintiff cannot thereafter take advantage of the primary terms and sue for those intalments only which are within limitation on the strength of primary contract terms: vide 30 N. L. R. 314,[7] 57 ALL 108.[5]

[7] Waiver, as has been observed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in A. I. R. 1933 P. C. 233[8] is a mixed question of law and fact and it is therefore necessary that it should be properly pleaded and proved. It is well established, as was held in 47 ALL 552[9] and other decisions that mere failure to sue does not amount to a waiver as contemplated by Article 75, Limitation Act. It is also held in 7 N. L. R. 147[10] and other cases that a mere payment and acceptance of an overdue instalment did not amount to a waiver of the defaulted instalment. On this point the decisions are not unanimous and the Calcutta High Court has consistently held that the acceptance of an overdue instalment amounts to a waiver of the default. The latter view has found favour with Manohar Lall J. in 18 Pat. 459[11] and I respectfully agree with that view. The learned Judge has pointed out and if I may say so with respect, quite correctly that where the creditor has accepted an overdue instalment it must be held that he has waived his right which accrued to him on that default and that the starting point of limitation would be from the next default, if not waived.

[8] The conflict of view as stated above is, in my view, more apparent than real. Even after the exigibility clause comes into operation, the creditor has to recover his debt and the debtor is liable to pay it. Thus in making a part payment of debt, the debtor discharges his liability partially and the creditor gives him a discharge to that effect. This obviously does not amount to a waiver. A distinction should therefore always be made between the payment made by the debtor and accepted by the creditor specifically towards the satisfaction of the defaulted instalment and the payment made only towards the reduction of the debt. If the creditor chooses to accept the payment not merely towards the reduction of a debt but towards a specific defaulted instalment and appropriates it as such, then that instalment cannot after that date be still regarded as a defaulted instalment supporting the operation of the exigibility clause. A satisfied instalment and a defaulted instalment are contradictions in terms. Moreover in receiving a defaulted instalment as such there is an implied agreement if an agreement is necessary, that the creditor gives his right to treat that as a defaulted instalment.

[9] In 47 ALL. 552[9] Mukerji J. relied on the passage in Halsbury's Laws of England vol. 7, page 423, article 868 and took the view that waiver is, in effect, a substituted contract. With utmost respect I do not see my way to agree with this view. The passage from Halsbury was in respect of a substantive law of contract and in my opinion it has no application to the 'waiver of benefit' within Art. 75, Limitation Act, which is a procedural law. It is apparent from Art. 75, Limitation Act, that the default clause is for the benefit of the creditor. This was accepted by Bose J. in I. L. R. (1943) Nag. 630.[2] It follows, therefore, that one for whose benefit the clause is meant may waive the benefit of that clause without the consent of the other party. The choice is exclusively of the creditors. As Fry J. (as he then was) correctly observed in (1878) 8 Ch. D. 201.[12]

"Where a right has accrued it can be waived but to amount to waiver there must be something done which is inconsistent with the continuance of that right".

[10] I cannot improve upon the language employed by Sulaiman C. J. while discussing this aspect of the case in 57 ALL. 561[13] at p. 567 and I therefore reproduce what is observed there:

"It is not necessary that there should be either a fresh contract between the parties or a fresh consideration proceeding from the debtor in order to bind the creditor by his choice. It seems to me that the words 'waives the benefit' in Art. 75 do not mean the same thing as availing one-self of the equitable doctrine of waiver, for which either fresh consideration, a fresh agreement or something amounting to an estoppel is necessary. That doctrine is invoked against a creditor, whereas the waiver of the benefit spoken of in Art. 75 is something exercised for the benefit of the creditor and not against him. The waiver therefore may be a purely one-sided act and need not be for consideration proceeding from the debtor. The waiver may be by the expression of an intention to waive the benefit either by communication to the debtor or by any other overtact. Waiver is a mixed question of law and fact, and, as pointed out by my learned brother, it depends on the circumstances of each case.

. . . . . waiver is something more than mere inaction or omission. But in my opinion it is not necessary that it should amount to any novation of contract or any new agreement for consideration or that it should be any other bilateral agreement."

[11] In 18 Pat. 459[11] at pp. 478-479 Manohar Lall J., one of the Judges constituting the Full Bench, observed:

"The weighty observations of Lord Deman and Fry. J. quoted in the order of reference correctly indicate how this question should be determined. It is there laid down that mere failure to sue or inaction by the creditor is not a waiver of the default, something else must be established to show that the promisee has waived his right. For instance, his acceptance of an overdue instalment or his communicating to the promisor for a consideration that he will not insist upon his rights which have already accrued to him on the default which has taken place, or, it may be that the promisor himself approches the promisee or writes to him to stay his hands and not to proceed to demand the full amount and if the promisee agrees to such request, these will ordinarily amount to a waiver. In such cases it is clear that some overt act has been established from which the Court of fact can draw the conclusion that the obligee has waived the default. In some cases it will be easy to decide this question by looking at the frame of the suit and to find from the plaint the manner in which the allegations have been made."

[12] On the aforesaid discussion and authorities the following points can be taken to be well-established:

(a) That the exigibility clause in an instalment is for the benefit of the creditor and he has a right to waive that benefit even in the absence of a fresh agreement, a fresh consideration or a fresh bilateral arrangement.

(b) That a mere inaction on the part of the creditor such as an abstinance to sue or a mere receipt of payment does not amount to a waiver. What is required is some overt act on the part of the creditor, communicated to the debtor, by which a Court of fact can conclude that the creditor has waived the benefit.

(c) The payment by the debtor and the acceptance by the creditor specifically made towards the satisfaction of a particular defaulted instalment would amount to a waiver of that default and of the benefit arising out of that default.

(d) A waiver is a mixed question of law and fact. It has to be properly pleaded and proved. A choice left to the creditor in the default clause itself is inconsequential.

(e) In the absence of proof of waiver, the creditor cannot fall back on the primary terms of the bond regarding repayment and claim to recover on that basis instalments which are still within limitation.

[13] Now keeping these principles in view the plaintiff must plead in every case based on an instalment bond if he waived the benefit of the exigibility clause when it accrued on the first occasion and on subsequent occasions and when according to him that benefit again accrued and which he has not waived. As said above, the plaintiff vaguely pleaded that the first four instalments have been recovered and he subsequently disclosed the dates of repayment which were other than due date of instalments. His suit is specifically for the amount due on the 5th and subsequent instalments. He produced along with the plaint the extracts of his regularly kept account books (these extracts are yet to be proved). In these accounts the repayments, though not made on due dates, are specifically appropriated towards particular instalments and those instalments are consequently treated as satisfied. It is not clear from the record if the appropriation was made at the prorequest of the debtor or with his knowledge and consent. The plaintiff had no opportunity to go into the witness box and matters have yet remained to be explained. It is clear to my mind that what the plaintiff meant to plead was a waiver but he has not done so with sufficient clarity. In my opinion, the learned Judge of the lower Court acted with undue haste in dismissing the plaintiff's suit without trial. The decision of the lower Court is not satisfactory.

[14] In the ends of substantial justice, I set aside the decision of the lower Court and remand the case to the lower Court for a fresh trial giving to the parties fresh opportunity for pleading and adducing evidence.

[15] In the circumstances of the case, I do not allow costs to the applicant in this case.

BOSE AND HEMEON JJ.

Beohar Singh Raghubir Singh — Assessee — Applicant v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U. P., C. P. and Berar, Lucknow—Opposite party.

Misc. Civil Cases Nos. 63 of 1944 and 7, 8, 85, 91, 92 and 98 of 1945, Decided on 4-9-1946, reference made by Income-tax Appellate Tribunal, Bombay, D/- 6-7-1944.

* (a) Income-tax Act (1922), S. 2 (1)—Forest, income from.

Income derived from sale of forest produce such as timber, tendu leaves, harra etc., derived from a forest which is not cultivated but is of a spontaneous growth and the produce of which is not due to the skill or labour expended on it by the assessee is not agricultural income and is not exempt from taxation.

[Paras 26, 29, 30]

(b) Incom-tax Act (1922), S. 66—High Court—Functions of.

The High Court to which a reference is made is not a Court of appeal and is not free to debate such questions as might seem to arise in the case, however important they may be. It is only an advisory body which is not free to tender unsolicited advice. It can only advise on questions referred. [Para 2]

(c) Income-tax Act (1922), S. 2 (1) — Agriculture —Meaning of.

Agriculture is the art or science of cultivating the ground. The essence of agriculture even when it is extended to include "forestry" is the application of human skill and labour; without that it can neither be an art or science: Case law discussed. [Para 7]

(d) Interpretation of Statutes — Meaning of words—Same word used in different Acts—Acts of Central and Provincial Legislatures.

It is open to the legislature to widen or restrict the ordinary meaning of a word and because it chooses to do so for the purposes of a particular Act it does not follow that the same result is intended in another Act framed for a different purpose, having different provisions and using different language. [Para 9]

Held, that in construing a Central Act like the Income-tax Act [in this case with reference to the meaning of "agricultural income" in S. 2 (1)] it was not a proper approach to take into consideration local statutes like the Land Revenue Code. [Para 19]

(e) Income-tax Act (1922), S. 2 (1)—Pasturage.

The pasturing of cattle is so closely allied to agriculture that it has come to be considered part and parcel of it. [Para 12]

(f) Income-tax Act (1922), S. 2 (1) and S. 4 (3) (viii)—Object of exemption of agricultural income.

It is not correct to say that the object of exempting agricultural income from income-tax is to avoid double taxation. [Para 16]

(g) Income-tax Act (1922), S. 6—Other sources—Meaning of—Income-tax Act, S. 12.

The words "income from other sources" describe a true residuary group embracing within it all sources of income, profits and gains which are liable to tax under the Act. The income to fall under this head need not be ejusdem generis with the previous kinds of income. [Para 18]

(h) Income-tax Act (1922), S. 2 (1)—Distinction between clause (a) and clause (b).

Clause (a) refers to income derived from land which is used directly for agricultural purposes and clause (b) to by-products such as selling of milk, the pasturing of cattle etc. provided the endeavour is agricultural and provided it is reasonably connected with land used for agricultural purposes. [Para 23]

(i) Income-tax Act (1922), S. 2 (1) —Agricultural income—Meaning of.

It is essential that the income should be derived from some activity which necessitates the employment of human skill and labour and which is not merely a product of man's neglect or inaction except for the gathering in of the spoils. Not only must the assessee labour to reap the harvest but he must also labour to produce it. [Para 23]

(j) Income-tax Act (1922)—Interpretation Departmental instructions in Income-tax Manual.

In interpreting the Act it is not proper to take into consideration the departmenal instructions contained in the Income-tax Manual into consideration. [Para 24]

(k) Incom-tax Act (1922), S. 2 (1) — Income from Lac.

For the purposes of the Income-tax Act lac cultivation cannot be regarded as an agricultural operation and income derived from this source is taxable. 28 A. I. R.

1941 Pat. 289 (S. B.), Foll.; 24 A. I. R. 1937 Nag. 289, Disting. [Para 28]

Interest received from tenants on the arrears of rent due from them is agricultural income. Misc. Civil Case 34 of 1945, D/- 29-10-1945, Foll. [Paras 36, 39]

(m) Income-tax Act (1922), S. 2(6-c)—Capital receipt and income—Income derived by sale of timber.

Whether a given receipt is capital receipt or income depends on circumstances so that what is income in the hands of one man may be a capital receipt in those of another.

Where the assessee sold timber annually from the forest and there was no reduction or loss of any capital asset, that is the forest land:

Held that the receipts derived by sale of timber were income and not a receipt of a capital nature : 30 A. I. R. 1943 P. C. 153, Rel on. [Paras 40, 41]

(n) Income-tax Act (1922), S. 2 (1)—Bazar dues.

Bazar dues, i. e., collections from persons who are permitted to erect temporary stalls on agricultural land on weekly bazar day, are not agricultural income. [Para 42]

(o) Income-tax Act (1922), S. 4 (3)—Exemption —Burden of proof.

The burden lies on the assessee to bring himself within the purview of the exemption. [Para 30]

(p) Income-tax Act (1922), S. 2 (1)—Nazarana.

Nazarana is not ipso facto an agricultural income in the absence of any evidence to show that it was derived from agricultural sources. [Paras 43, 44]

Order.—This judgment will govern miscellaneous civil case No. 63 of 1944 and miscellaneous civil cases Nos. 7, 8, 85, 91, 92 and 98 of 1945. The questions they raise are not common to all, except as regards one question, but as the others are interlinked between them it will be convenient to group the cases according to the questions referred and deal with all in one judgment.

[2] These cases are all income-tax references made under S. 66 (1), Income-tax Act, as amended in 1939. In view of the contentions made before us, we think it desirable to set out the limits of our authority at the outset. It is important to emphasise that we are not a Court of appeal and accordingly are not free to debate such questions as might seem to us to arise in the case, however important they may appear to be. We are only an advisory body which is not free to tender unsolicited advice. We can only advise on the questions referred and accordingly will have to confine our answers to the questions asked. We have certain other powers, and indeed it will be necessary to exercise them in one of the cases heard along with these (we shall deal separately with that), but these powers only enable us to send the matter back and compel a reference. Until that is done, we have no power to debate questions which have not been referred. This is clear from the Act, but the matter has been placed beyond controversy by their Lordships of the Privy Council in 12 Pat. 318[1] at p. 335, I. L. R. (1940) Kar. P. C. 335,[2] 54 Bom. 437[3] at p. 455 and 60 Bom. 248[4] at p. 257. It has also been so decided by this Court in I. L. R. (1946) Nag. 594[5] at page 601.

[3] The question which concerns all the cases has been referred in these terms in Misc. Civil Case No. 63/44 :

"Whether, in the circumstances of this case, the income of Rs. 10,835 derived from the sale of forest produce is "agricultural income" exempt from taxation under S. 4 (3) (viii), Income-tax Act."

The point is the same in the other cases though in some of them the language is a little different, and, naturally the figure differs in each case.

[4] The question is one of mixed fact and law. So far as the facts are concerned they will be found separately in each case. So far as the law goes it will be necessary to search for some general and clear cut principle, because opinions have differed, and in the absence of principle, opinion tends to be arbitrary.

[5] The definition given in the Act is that "agricultural income" means :

"(a) any rent or revenue derived from land which is used for agricultural purposes, and is either assessed to land revenue in British India or subject to a local rate assessed and collected by officers of the Crown as such; (b) any income derived from such land by (i) agriculture."

Clause (b) throws us back to cl. (a) because of words "such land" which refer to the land described there. It is land which is (1) used for agricultural purposes and (2) either assessed to land revenue in British India or subject to a local rate assessed and collected by officers of the Crown as such.

[6] It is admitted that the land in all these cases is either assessed to land revenue or is subject to a local rate assessed and collected by officers of the Crown as such, and that, therefore to that extent, the income complies with the definition. But that is not enough, for, it must also either be used for agricultural purposes or for agriculture. The question, therefore, is how far does agriculture covers forests? Opinions differ regarding this, and because of that the learned acting Advocate-General suggested that it will be pertinent to go back to first principles and analyse the root of the word.

[7] The dictionaries tell us that agriculture comes from ager, a field, and cultura, cultivation. This implies the use of human skill and labour; and that is exactly how the dictionaries define it. Webster, for instance, says that agriculture is the "art or science of cultivating the ground," and includes in it the rearing and management of livestock, husbandry, farming and so forth. Other dictionaries including the Oxford English Dictionary, employ the same basic conception. Some include "forestry", in the term. It is to be observed, however, that the word used when forestry is included, is forestry and not forests. The distinction is important because when one turns to the definition of forestry in the dictionaries one finds that is also an art or a science. Thus, Webster says it is "the art of farming or cultivating forests; the management of growing timber," and the Oxford English Dictionary says much the same thing. Therefore, throughout we find that the essence of agriculture, even when it is extended to include "forestry," is the application of human skill and labour. Without that it can be neither an art nor a science. And that we feel must be the determining factor in this class of case.

[8] Turning next to the cases, one of the most important is the Federal Court judgment in 1942 F. C. R. 53,[6] not because it deals directly with this question, though it touches an allied matter, but because it lays down certain general principles which bind us, and clears much of the ground.

[9] The learned Judges were dealing with the expression "agricultural land" in the Constitution Act, and after pointing out that it had not been defined there said at page 61 :

"It must accordingly be understood in the sense which it ordinarily bears in the English language," and again at page 62 :

"As regards the connotation of the word "agriculture," it may be pointed out that "agriculture," has been variously defined in several English and Indian statutes for the purposes of these statutes and it is neither useful nor legitimate to attempt to draw any inference from these statutory definitions for the purpose of determining the ordinary connotation of the word in English language."

They then referred to decisions in which the Court has placed a restricted meaning on the terms "in view of the indications afforded by the particular Act which had to be considered by the Court," and to others which construed the term in a more general sense. The sum and substance of it all is that it is of little avail to consider these decisions because, of course it is open to the Legislature to widen or to restrict the ordinary meaning of a word, and because, if it chooses to do so for the purposes of a particular Act it does not follow that the same result is intended in another Act framed for a different purpose, having different provisions and using other language. In the face of that we do not think it will be either profitable or proper to consider in detail the various decisions which construe the term, or analogous expressions, for the purpose of some particular Act. Some of them have been referred to in the Federal Court's judgment at pp. 62-65, and others will be found in decisions like 20 Pat. 699[7] and 54 Mad. 900.[8] It will suffice to say that the following cases related to special Acts, and at least part of the decisions in each is based upon matters special to those Acts : 22 Mad. 39,[9] 24 Mad. 421,[10] 54 Mad. 900,[8] 44 ALL. 19,[11] 46 ALL. 831,[12] 46 Bom. 48[13] at p. 51, A. I. R. 1919 Lah. 222[14] and I. L. R. (1938) Nag. 31.[15] The other cases in this class, though dealing with special Acts, base the decision on general grounds and to that extent are more in point. But all they serve to show is that difference of opinion is possible, the meaning being extended in some cases and restricted in others. Thus, 45 Mad. 710,[16] holds that the growing of casuarina trees for fuel is an agricultural purpose and 46 Bom. 48[13] discards what we might term the human agency test and employs instead one which determines whether the income is derived from the produce of the land and not what is the actual quantum of labour bestowed on it. Of these two the former is largely based on considerations which the Federal Court state are irrelavant, namely, the meaning of the term in certain English Acts where special statutory definitions are given. With the latter we do not, with respect, agree.

[10] As to the other cases, the Federal Court state that the view taken in 24 Mad. 421,[10] 22 Mad. 39[9] and 45 Mad. 710,[16] has not gone unchallenged and the learned Judges refer to 54 Mad. 900.[8] So also they state that the decision of the Judicial Committee in 46 ALL. 831,[12] upholding 44 ALL. 19[11] lays down no principle or test of general application. They are accordingly not of much value for the present purpose. The only decisions in this class which, in our opinion, lay down general rules are best referred to in the language of the Federal Court, 1942 F. C. R. 53[6] at pp. 62-63 :

"Their Lordships confirmed a decision of the Punjab Chief Court to the effect that land used as a tea garden was used for "agricultural purposes." In the judgment of the Chief Court (which was generally approved by their Lordships) it was observed that "the term 'agricultural land' is used in the Act of 1905 in its widest sense to denote all land which is tilled" ..... The Chief Court had held that land covered by a natural forest was not agricultural, and this view also would seem to have been confirmed by the Judicial Committee."

We have underlined (here italicized) the word "tilled" because, in our opinion, that brings out the distinction which we have sought to draw between an agricultural and a non-agricultural purpose. The decisions referred to are A. I. R. 1919 Lah. 222[14] at p. 225 and 5 Lah. 50[17] at p. 52.

[11] From here we proceed to consider cases under the Income-tax Act. A large number were cited but those dealing with forests are not many. Of them, 45 Mad. 518[18] at p. 526 thought, without deciding the point, that "forestry" might be regarded as agriculture. We stress, however, the use of the word "forestry" as opposed to "forests".

[12] 51 Cal. 504[19] held that income derived from pasturage was agricultural income but not that from fisheries or from land leased for stacking timber. The "pasturage" part of the decision would, at first sight, appear to offend the rule we have suggested but the point was not decided because it was not contested once the case reached the High Court (see page 527.) But that apart, nearly every rule has its exceptions and the pasturing of cattle is so closely allied to agriculture that it has become to be considered part and parcel of it and the meaning of the term is now so well established that there is no longer room for doubt. That, however, does not apply to forests, or even to forestry, though we think it possible that the latter might fall within the scope of the definition.

[13] 54 Mad. 21[20] holds that income from unassessed forest land is not agricultural income, and 20 Pat. 699 [21] at p. 724 applies the same rule to uncultivated forest land, as also does A. I. R. 1945 Oudh, 35,[22] A. I. R. 1945 Oudh 42,[23] A. I. R. 1945 Oudh 44,[24] and 1946 I. T. R. 356.[25]

[14] This resume will show that so far as forests are concerned the definition we have adopted making actual cultivation with the aid of human skill, and labour the dividing line, reconciles, as far as we can see, the various cases which have been cited on the matter of forests.

[15] The other cases cited to us are not in point and do not help because they deal with other matters, such as dairy farming, A. I. R. 1938 Rang. 260,[26] allowances from a zemindari to a Rani, 9 Luck 115,[27] a money-lender who cultivates a field in lieu of a debt due to him, I. L. R. (1937) Mad. 734,[28] and royalties from a coal mine, 22 Pat. 713[29] at p. 722. All we need say with respect to them, excluding of course the judgment of the Privy Council, is that in so far as their more general observations agree with the distinction we make, they support us, and in so far as they do not, then, with great respect, we differ from them. Their Lordships held that royalties from coal mines were not agricultural income and nothing that their Lordships said detracts from our view.

[16] It will be necessary, however, for us to meet certain arguments. It was suggested in some of the cases that the object of exempting agricultural income from tax was that it already pays tax in another form, namely land revenue or cesses, and, therefore, the idea is to avoid double taxation. This view will be found advanced in, for instance, 45 Mad. 518[18] at pp. 526, 527. But we think it is sufficiently met in A. I. R. 1945 Oudh 35[22] at p. 39. The learned Judges point out there that the fact that the Act requires the income not only to be subject to land revenue or cesses but also to be derived from agriculture or from land used for agricultural purposes shows that incomes from other types of land are not exempt even though they pay land revenue. And that of course is patent. Rents derived from bungalows on malik makbuza land in a town are already taxable. Nor indeed is there any reason why there should not be double taxation if the legislature chooses to impose it. That is also dealt with in the Oudh case. The argument is also met by what their Lordships of the Privy Council say in 58 Cal. 430[30] at p. 444. Their Lordships point out that in such cases the land revenue or cesses paid are deducted from the gross receipts because the tax is not levied on gross receipts but on income. In practice, therefore, there is no double taxation.

[17] It was also argued that this income is not taxable at all because S. 6 of the Act sets out the only sources of taxable income. It cannot fall under the head "income from property" because S. 9 defines that and there is no room for forest produce there. So also S. 10 sets out what is to constitute "profits and gains of business, profession or vocation". That also excludes income from forests. And as regards "other sources", it was contended that this must be read "ejusdem generis" with what precedes it. It was said that an important head of income such as the present could hardly have been left for inclusion under a general section. It was pointed out that forests cover a large section of India and, therefore, assume more than ordinary importance in this country.

[18] That may be so, but the same applies to agriculture, and S. 4 (3) (viii) and 2 (1) (a) and (b) would be otiose if agricultural income is exempt in any way. The fact that it was necessary to include these sections shows that income of this sort would be taxable but for the exemptions. But this apart, the matter has now been set at rest by their Lordships of the Privy Council. In 58 Cal. 430[30] at p. 442, their Lordships say that the words appear to be "Clear and emphatic, and expressly framed so as to make the sixth head mentioned in S. 6 describe a true residuary group embracing within it all sources of income, profits and gains provided the Act applies to them, i.e., provided that they accrue or arise or are received in British India or are deemed to accrue or arise or to be received in British India, as provided by S. 4 (1), and are not exempted by virtue of S. 4 (3)".

In view of that it is not necessary to say anything further.

[19] Part of the argument on behalf of the assessees had reference to certain provisions in some of our local Acts, such as the Land Revenue Act; but we do not consider that a proper approach when construing an Act of the Central Legislature. Central Acts apply all over India while Provincial Acts have limited provincial application; also Acts touching the same topics can, and often do, differ from Province to Province. It would be impossible for us to conclude that the words in a Central Act have one meaning in one Province and another in another. The same assessee might have forests in this Province as well as in other Provinces. The local Acts in each might differ. It would be impossible for us to hold that his income from forests is exempt here while taxable elsewhere because the same words used in the Income-tax Act mean one thing in one place and another in another.

[20] It is pertinent here to quote the Privy Council in 23 W. R. 314.[31] The case is not in point but the observations are pertinent. At page 317 their Lordships say:

"It is obvious that an enactment which is intended to apply to all the Courts in India, and which is also a modern enactment, ought to receive the same construction in all those Courts, and that no inconsistent course of practice should be allowed to spring up in any of the presidencies.";

"unless, therefore, etc . . . . . we must come to the absurd conclusion that the same words are to be interpreted by the High Court in one sense when it is exercising its original jurisdiction or sitting on an appeal from a decree made under that jurisdiction, and in a different sense when it is sitting on an appeal from a mofussil Court; and further that the Legislature has by the same form of words intended to make one law for the mofussil Courts, and another for those of the Presidency towns."

[21] Another branch of this argument had relation to a possible conflict between the provincial and Federal Legislative Lists in the Constitution Act unless the matter was decided in the way contended for by the assessees. But the basis of that argument is that agricultural income from land revenue paying estates etc., cannot be taxed. No one questions that, and if the income from these forests is agriultural income then, of course, it cannot be taxed. The whole question is whether it is such income. The other phase of this argument was only a variation of what was argued before the Federal Court in 1942 F. C. R. 1.[32] It would be pointless to elaborate this further.

[22] Attempts were made to induce us to consider passages in the report of the Select Committee which dealt with the Indian Income-tax bill. 1939 F. C. R. 18[33] at p. 46 was relied on. But that passage has been much misunderstood and was explained by Gwyer C. J. in 1941 F. C. R. 12[34] at p. 41. It is true this was not done in the course of a judgment but was an interjection during the arguments, but the substance of what he said accords with what the Privy Council laid in A. I. R. 1930 P. C. 120.[35] Two other decisions of the Judicial Committee are also apposite: 22 Cal 788[36] at p. 799 and 43 Mad. 550[37] at p. 564.

[23] Mr. Mangalmurti stressed the difference between the words "any rent or revenue derived from land which is used for agricultural purposes" in S. 2 (1) (a) and the words "any income derived from such land by agriculture." He argued that the former was the wider and would include income from any by-product of the land and certainly income which came directly from the land. In our judgment the first clause refers to income derived from land which is used directly for agricultural purposes and the second to by-products, such as the selling of milk, the pasturing of cattle etc., provided the endeavour is agricultural and provided it is reasonably connected with land used for agricultural purposes. The distinction may be of importance in some cases, but here it still leaves the burden of deciding what "agriculture" means. As we have said whatever else may be necessary it is essential that the income should be derived from some activity which necessitates the employment of human skill and labour and which is not merely a product of man's neglect or inaction except for the gathering in of the spoils. Not only must be labour to reap the harvest—that of course he must do else there could be no income—but be must also labour to produce it.

[24] An attempt was also made to get us to take into consideration the previous practice of the department and the instructions embodied in the Income-tax Manual. This also is not permissible. It shows no more than that either certain officers of the department hold a certain view of the law, or that it was considered expedient at that time, for this reason or that, not to tax income of this kind. The Courts are here to interpret the law and what departmental officers thought is not relevant. The argument is doubtless founded on certain observations of Lord Halsbury in 1891 A. C. 531[38] at p. 546 but Lord Macnaghten said in the same case at page 591 that he would prefer not to express an opinion on the point. Also a later House of Lords case 1915 A. C. 1100[39] at pp. 1107 & 1108 brushed aside the continuous interpretation which the Supreme Court of Ceylon had placed on a statute for 44 years. We do not think, therefore, that it will be proper to take those matters into consideration and so will exclude them.

[25] Having enumerated the general rule we will now proceed to examine the facts in each case separately and determine how far they conform to the rule we have enumerated.

[26] Misc. Civil Case No. 63/44.—The facts were agreed in this case. It appears from the order of reference, as also from the decision of the Income-tax Appellate Tribunal in appeal, that the forest here was not a cultivated one and was of spontaneous growth. The same remarks apply to the following items of produce, namely, harra nuts and mohua flowers. According to our definition, they are not included within the exemption and so are liable to tax.

[27] As regards lac, it was held in 20 Pat. 699[7] at p. 726 that income from this source is taxable. On the other hand one of us (Bose J.) held in I. L. R. (1938) Nag. 31[15] at p. 33 that lac cultivation is an agricultural operation. But the decision was based on the C. P. Tenancy Act and it was made clear that that Act had extended the definition of agriculture. Accordingly, what 4 N. L. R. 104[40] at p. 112 had held was not agriculture (namely lac cultivation) was considered to be "agriculture" because of the extension of the definition in the later Act for the purposes of that Act.

[28] Now, it is clear from 4 N. L. R. 104[40] at p. 112 that

"Lac is neither timber nor fruit. In the case before me, it is not the produce of the tenant's labour, but of his neglect and idleness. It is the deposit of an insect upon the smaller branches of the palas trees".

Again at page 110 Stanyon A. J. C. says :

"Such propagation can only be developed by allowing the land to lie waste so that the palas trees can spread over it as jungle. Therefore the produce of lac involves a use of the land in a manner which is opposed to agriculture, as we understand that term in relation to village operations in this province."

In the circumstances we are of opinion that for the purposes of the Income-tax Act lac cultivation cannot be regarded as an agricultural operation. In any case it has not been shown that in this case the conditions were otherwise than as described above.

[29] Our answer to the question referred in this case is that the Rs 10,835 derived from the sale of forest produce is not "agricultural income" and so is not exempt from taxation.

[30] Miscellaneous Civil Case No. 7 of 1945. Here also the facts are agreed. The forest income is derived from a sale of timber which the assessee cuts into beams, logs, poles etc.; also from the sale of tendu leaves which are used in the manufacture of bidis. The finding regarding the nature of the forest is to be found in the Tribunal's appellate order and is given in these words:

"It is impossible that all these forest trees or tendu shrubs could have been planted or reared by any process of agriculture, that is to say, by the cultivation of the soil. It may be that at some stage in their growth the trees required to be watered or watched. But the fact is that they had been standing upon the land for a number of years during which the soil has remained untouched."

The evidence adduced by the assessee to show that he had planted the trees was disbelieved. In the circumstances, the burden being on the assessee to bring himself within the purview of the exemption, and he not having proved that the forest was "cultivated" by him in the sense that its produce was due to the skill and labour which he expended on it as opposed to produce which would come in anyway from natural causes despite inaction on his part, we are of opinion that the Rs. 19,447 arising from those sources was rightly held to be taxable.

[31] Miscellaneous Civil Case No. 8 of 1945. The forest income here was derived from leases of the forest "for the purpose of cutting and removing standing timber and fuel, and taking tendu leaves, lac and harra therefrom".

[32] The finding regarding the nature of the forest is to this effect:

"The trees in these forest lands are obviously of spontaneous growth and must have been standing for a number of years. It is impossible to say that they were either planted or reared up by any process of agriculture."

We hold that the Rs. 12,373 assessed to income under this head was rightly assessed.

[33] Miscellaneous Civil Case No. 85 of 1945. In this case, Rs. 1,799 received from the sale of harra and tendu leaves has been assessed. The Appellate Assistant Commissioner found here that the forest was of spontaneous growth and that "nothing is done in the nature of preparing land for the growth of the trees therein". The Tribunal has accepted this and nothing has been shown us to the contrary. Accordingly, here also, we hold the income was rightly assessed.

[34] Miscellaneous Civil Case No. 91 of 1945. Here also the finding of the Tribunal is that the forest was :

"Of a spontaneous growth and no process of agriculture was employed in growing the forest. It may be that at one time forest guards may have been employed but that does not make it an agricultural income. Active human agency in tilling the soil was not employed nor any process which is commonly understood as an agricultural process was used in the production of the forest trees which grow spontaneously and which were sold from time to time to clear off the overgrowth."

We agree that the income under this head was rightly assessed.

[35] Miscellaneous Civil Cases Nos. 92 and 98 of 1945. The income in both these cases was from the sale of forest trees. The findings in each regarding the facts are the same as in Miscellaneous Civil Case No. 91/45, and are given in the same words. Our conclusion is, therefore, the same in these two cases as in Miscellaneous Civil Case No. 91/1945.

[36] We now turn to points which are not common to all the cases. A question of interest arises in Miscellaneous Civil Case No. 63/44, as also in Miscellaneous Civil Cases Nos. 8 and 85 of 1945. We will deal with that. The question has been posed in much the same language in all three cases except for the figure. It was (we quote from Miscellaneous Civil Case No. 85/1945.)

"Whether the sum of (Rs. 1,270) representing interest received by the assessee on the arrears of agricultural rents due to him from his tenants is agricultural income within the meaning of S. 2 (i) (a), Income-tax Act ?".

[37] This matter has been recently decided by a Divison Bench of this Court in Misc. Civil Case No. 34 of 1945.[41] We do not feel free to differ from this decision though had the matter been res integra we might have taken another view.

[38] It was contended by the learned acting Advocate-General that the decision is distinguishable and that it is, in any event, wrong. The ground of distinction is said to be that the question posed there narrows the scope of the enquiry to the Central Provinces Tenancy Act whereas here there are no such limitations. It is true the Central Provinces Tenancy Act is expressly mentioned in the question referred in that case whereas it is not mentioned in the present cases but that makes no difference. We are not asked to decide whether all interest is exempt but whether interest received from tenants on the arrears of rent due from them is. These interests are received under the provisions of the Central Provinces Tenancy Act and therefore whether the Act is expressly mentioned or not the fact remains that the rent is received in the same way and for the same reasons in both sets of cases. We are unable to distinguish that case from the present ones.

[39] As regards the contention that the decision is, in any event, wrong, we find that the matter is debatable and that it is as easy for a Judge acting judicially to reach the one conclusion as the other. In an ultimate analysis it narrows down to a question of individual preference, it being possible to advance cogent reasons on either side. That being the position, we do not feel free to differ, nor do we think it proper to refer the point to a Full Bench. This, we feel, is one of the cases in which certainty is of more value than the doubtful satisfaction of reaching a conclusion by a mere counting of heads. The matter has been fully debated in other High Courts. Opinions have differed and the Division Bench in the former case preferred one view to the other. In our view either the legislature should step in and say which view should prevail, or we should in this Province, accept the view of our own High Court. After all the two, the rent and the interest, are so intimately bound together that it is not unreasonable to hold that they are species of the same genus, though we realise that it is anomalous that while a man who receives his rent regularly and places the money it represents in a bank must pay tax on the interest he receives from the bank whereas another who leaves his money with the tenant and receives interests from the tenant instead of from a bank need not. But anomalies arise on the other view too. The interest is recoverable under the Central Provinces Tenancy Act in the same way and along with the rent which is in arrear. It creates the same burden on the land and subjects a defaulting tenant to the same penalty. In the circumstances, we hold, following Misc. Civil Case No. 34 of 1945[41] that the interest in these three cases is exempt from taxation, it being agricultural income.

[40] Miscellaneous Civil Case No. 7/45 raises another question. We are asked to decide whether a profit of Rs. 19,447/- arising from the sale of forest produce, such as timber and tendu leaves, is a receipt of a capital nature and so exempt on that score.

[41] Their Lordships of the Privy Council point out in 22 Pat. 713 [29] at P. 724 that whether a given receipt is capital expenditure (receipt ?) or income depends on circumstances, so that what is income in the hands of one man may be capital expenditure (receipt ?) in those of another. The facts here are admitted and are stated thus in the order of reference.

"But it was admitted before us that the assessee sells timber annually and derives the income in question and that there has been no reduction or loss of any capital asset, that is the forest land, by the timber being cut and sold."

That places the matter, in principle, on a par with the decision of the Judicial Committee just cited. We hold that the Rs. 19,447/- under this head is income and was rightly included in the assessment.

[42] Miscellaneous Civil Case No. 8/45 raises the following additional question:

"Whether there was any material to hold that the "bazar dues" and "nazrana receipts" of Rs. 171/- and Rs. 192/- respectively were items of "agricultural income" . . . .

As regards this, the Tribunal said:

"The learned advocate for the assessee explained that the items comprised in it were collections from persons who were permitted to erect temporary stalls on the assessee's agricultural lands on weekly bazar days. The explanation itself is sufficient to reject the assessee's claim to such receipts being regarded as agricultural income".

With that we agree and add that the point was abandoned before us by counsel for the assessee who appeared in place of Mr. Mangalmurti on the second day. We hold the Rs. 192/- was rightly included in the assessment.

[43] As regards the nazrana, receipts under this head can flow from sources which are not agricultural, as for example, money taken from consent to a transfer of tenancy and other lands, presents on the occasion of a marriage, and so forth. Therefore, until we know exactly what the nazrana consisted of, it is impossible for us to say whether the income is agricultural or not. The Tribunal says:

"it was alleged before us that it represented the amount levied from tenants taking up vacant plots for the purpose of cultivation. But the statement was not borne out by any evidence.

[44] We asked counsel to point out any evidence to us which would indicate the nature of the nazrana and he admitted there was none. The burden is on the assessee and as he has produced no evidence on this point his contention must fail. We hold there is no material and that the sum of Rs. 192/- was rightly assessed.

[45] The result of our findings is that the assessees have lost in all the cases and on all the points except on the question of interest in three of the cases, namely, Miscellaneous Civil Case No. 63/44 and Miscellaneous Civil Cases Nos. 8 and 85 of 1945. They will, therefore, pay the costs of the Commissioner in all but these three cases. Counsel's fee Rs. 100/- in each case.

[46] As regards the remaining three cases, the success of the assessee on this point in two of the cases is so negligible as compared with his failure that we think it proper that each should pay the Commissioner's costs there as well. In Miscellaneous Civil Case No. 63/44 the assessee lost on the item of Rs. 10,835/- and succeeded only as regards Rs. 501/-. In Miscellaneous Civil Case No. 8/35 the assessee failed as regards Rs. 12,373/- and succeeded as regards Rs. 314/-. We therefore, direct that each of these two assessees should pay the Commissioner's costs. Counsel's fee Rs. 100/- in each case.

[47] That leaves Miscellaneous Civil Case. No. 85/45. There, the success and failure is almost equal. The assessee lost as regards Rs. 1,799/- and won as regards Rs. 1,270/-. There will be no order as to costs in this case.

POLLOCK AND SHEVDE JJ.

Hazarilal and others—Appellants v. Choudhary Halkulal and others — Respondents.

First Appeal No. 97 of 1940, Decided on 23-9-1947, from decree of 2nd Sub-Judge, 1st Class, Jubbulpore, D/-29-2-1940.

(a) Pleadings—Practice—Point not specifically pleaded by defendant but fair notice of case to be made by him given to plaintiff—Court would be disinclined to stress structure of pleadings too strictly.

Where in a suit the defendant has not specifically pleaded certain point, the High Court in appeal will not be inclined to stress the structure of the pleadings in the suit too strictly if fair notice of the case to be made out by the defendant had been given to the plaintiff: 21 A. I. R. 1934 P. C. 130, Rel. on. [Para 15]

(b) Hindu law—Widow—Co-widows in possession of joint estate derived from husband can make absolute partition so as to extinguish right of survivorship inter se—Such agreement held was not proved.

Two or more co-widows of a Hindu governed by the Benares School of the Mitakshara, who have inherited the property of their husband, are entitled, by agreement among themselves, to make an absolute partition of their joint estate so as to extinguish the right of survivorship inter se. Where there is no direct evidence to prove such an argeement, the agreement cannot be inferred from the mere fact that one of the co-widows has transferred her share independently and the other co-widow has not protested against it nor has taken any steps to challenge it in a Court of law during her lifetime: 1 A. I. R. 1914 Nag. 21 and 15 A. I. R. 1928 P. C. 251, Rel. on. [Para 16]

(c) Hindu law —Widow—Widows cannot by any agreement between them affect rights of ultimate reversioners.

The fact that co-widows at the time of partition between them have entered into an agreement to relinquish their rights of survivorship cannot affect the rights of the ultimate reversioners, because two or more widows cannot, by any agreement between them, affect the rights of the ultimate reversioners: 16 Mad. 1 (P. C.), Rel. on. [Paras 18 & 19]

(d) Hindu law—Widow—Surrender—Surrender by one of two co-widows of her share in favour of next reversioner—Other co-widow not joining nor surrendering her share—Surrender is invalid.

An alienation by a widow or other limited heir of the estate, inherited by her, may be validated, if it can be shown to be a surrender of her whole interest in the whole estate in favour of the nearest reversioner, if there be only one, or of the whole body of reversioners, if there be more than one at the time of the alienation, and if there are two or more widows, the surrender must be by all of them. Where the surrender was by only one of the co-widows and the other co-widow did not join in the act of surrender nor did she surrender her own share of the husband's estate that she separately held under the arrangement of the partition, the surrender is invalid and inoperative under Hindu law. [Para 18]

(e) Hindu law— Widow—Sale by widow of husband's estate without legal necessity is not binding on next reversioner.

A sale by a widow of property derived by her from her husband is not binding on the next reversioner if it is without legal necessity. [Para 20]

(f) Hindu law— Widow— One of two co-widows cannot prejudice rights of survivorship of other co-widow by alienations even though for legal necessity save with consent of other— Widows by agreement relinquishing right of survivorship in portion held by each other— It will not bind reversioner.

One of the two co-widows cannot prejudice the rights of survivorship of the other, by alienation, even though for legal necessity, save with the consent of the other. The mere fact that a partition has taken place between them does not imply a right to prejudice the claims of the survivor. Even in a case where the arrangement between the two widows may be of such a character that each relinquishes her right of survivorship in the portion of the estate held by the other and where an alienation (with or without legal necessity and without the consent of the other) cannot be questioned by the other, it will not bind the reversioner: Case law referred. [Para 20]

(g) Evidence Act (1872), S. 115— Deed of assignment by Hindu widow attested by next reversioner and receipt of consideration scribed by him— No evidence that next reversioner made representation to transferees nor that they acted on faith of it— Next reversioner is not estopped from challenging assignment.

The main question in determining whether estoppel has been occasioned, is whether the representation has caused the person to whom it has been made to act on the faith of it. The existence of estoppel does not depend on the motive, or on the knowledge of the matter on the part of the person making the representation. It is not essential that the intention of the person whose declaration, act or omission has induced another to act, or to abstain from acting, should have been fraudulent, or that he should not have been under a mistake or misapprehension. Hence, where a deed of assignment by a Hindu widow has been attested by the next reversioner and the receipt of consideration is scribed by him with knowledge of the previous transaction, these facts would not estop the next reversioner from challenging the assignment in absence of evidence that he made any representation to the assignee or that the assignee acted on the faith of it. [Para 22]

(h) Evidence Act (1872), S. 115— Alienation by Hindu widow—Failure of next reversioner to challenge it during her life time will not estop him from challenging it after death of widow.

Though a presumptive reversionary heir has a title to challenge an alienation at its inception he need not do so but is entitled to wait till the death of the widow has affirmed his character as the nearest reversionary heir. Hence the fact that a presumptive reversioner has not challenged an alienation by a widow at its inception during her life-time will not estop him from challenging it after the death of the widow. [Para 23]

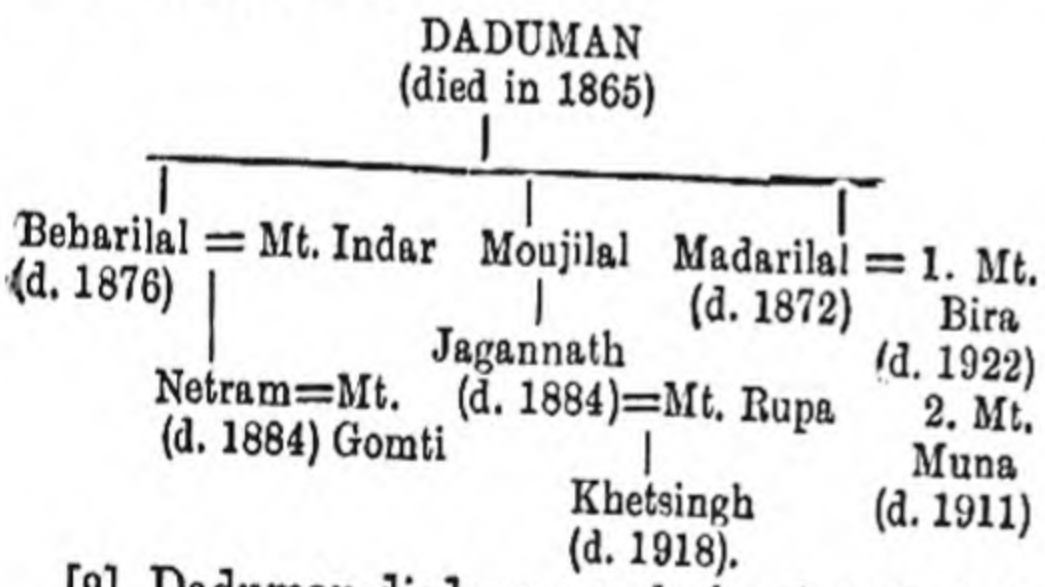
Judgment.—This appeal has been filed by defendants 1 to 4 and 6 to 11 against the judgment and decree of the lower Court for possession in favour of the plaintiffs. It is expedient to set out briefly the material facts of this case which are no longer in dispute, and the following family tree will explain the position of the persons to be mentioned :



DADUMAN
(died in 1865)
Beharilal (d. 1876) = Mt. Indar
Moujilal
Madarilal (d. 1872) = 1. Mt. Bira (d. 1922) 2. Mt. Muna (d. 1911)
Netram (d. 1884) = Mt. Gomti
Jagannath (d. 1884) = Mt. Rupa
Khetsingh (d. 1918).

[2] Daduman died possessed of certain landed property in 1865 leaving behind Beharilal, Moujilal and Madarilal, his three sons. These three brothers were members of a joint Hindu family and owned certain joint family property in four villages. They owned two entire villages, Kanthora and Bilthara, and Re. 0-5-4 share in two other villages, namely, Padariya and Piparia in the Patan tahsil of the Jubbulpore District. Shortly after the demise of their father Daduman, they separated and partitioned the property equally some time in 1866 and each of the brothers got a one-third share in each of the said four villages. This partition, though it was challenged by the defendants in the lower Court, is now admitted by their counsel who has further admitted that Madarilal, the last male holder of the suit property, was the separate owner of his shares of Re. 0-5-4 in Kanthora, Re. 0-5-4 in Bilthara, Re. 0-1-9⅓ in Padaria and Re. 0-1-9⅓ in Piparia. Madarilal died in 1872 leaving two widows, Mt. Bira and Mt. Muna, surviving him. Muna died in 1911 and Bira died in 1922.

[3] Moujilal died leaving a son by name Jagannath, who died in 1884, leaving behind his widow Mt. Rupa and son Khetsingh. This Khetsingh died early in 1918.

[4] Beharilal died in 1876 leaving behind his widow Mt. Indar and son Netram, who died in 1884 leaving behind his widow Mt. Gomti. Mt. Gomti, however, remarried and thus severed her connexion with the family.

[5] After the death of Madarilal his two co-widows lived together for a couple of years and as they could not pull on together on account of frequent squabbles they partitioned their husband's property in suit in equal shares some time in 1874. After this partition Bira went to live with Beharilal's widow and son Netram, and Muna went to live with Moujilal's son Jagannath (who was her son born from Moujilal her former husband). It seems that she was first married to Moujilal from whom Jagannath was born and that after the death of Moujilal she remarried his younger brother Madarilal. After the partition between the three brothers their respective shares in all the four villages were separately recorded in their names in the revenue registers. It appears that when Muna went to live with her son Jagannath her property was looked after by him, and when Bira went to live with Netram her estate was looked after by Netram. After the death of Jagannath in 1884 his mother Muna got the name of her grandson Khetsingh mutated in the revenue records in respect of her own share in all the four villages in 1884-85 and thus put Khetsingh in possession thereof as owner. Thereafter Muna dropped out of the picture altogether, and it was this Khetsingh who remained in possession of his grandmother's estate and dealt with it as owner all along. By a sale-deed dated 11-1-1905 (Exs. 2, D-2) Khetsingh parted with a four-anna share in Kanthora and a four-anna share in Bilthara in favour of Madho Patel and others. He also made a mortgage of his four-anna share in Kanthora in favour of this Madho Patel and others, who later on obtained a final decree for foreclosure in Civil Suit No. 17 of 1907 on 18th Sep. 1907 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Jubbulpore. After the death of Madho Patel his successors Hazarilal and others by a sale-deed dated 13th Jan. 1915 (Exs. 2, D-1) sold an eight anna share in Kanthora and four-anna share in Bilthara for Rs. 9100 to Kunwarman Malguzar (the father of defendants 1 to 3). After the death of Kunwarman his sons, the present defendants 1 to 3, came into possession of the said property.

[6] Khetsingh, who was the grandson of Moujilal, already owned shares of Re. 0 5-4 in Kanthora and Re. 0-5-4 in Bilthara in his own right, which two shares his grandfather Moujilal had obtained at the first partition in 1866. By virtue of the transfer and mutations effected in his favour (Khetsingh) by Muna, he got an additional share of Re. 0-2-8 in each of these two villages, with the result that he came to own an eight anna share in Kanthora and an eight-anna share in Bilthara. Subsequently Khetsingh transferred in 1906 the remaining four-anna share in Bilthara to one Purahlal, an infant son of Gotiram, who sold it to Babulal Guzar and others, who in their turn transferred it to Mohanlal Malguzar (defendant 4), who is now in possession of the said four-anna share in Bilthara. Khetsingh also owned a Re. 0-1-9⅓ share in Padariya and Piparia in his own right, as his share of the patrimony, and when he got the additional share of his grandmother Muna by virtue of the transfer and mutations, his share in each of these two villages became Re. 0-2-8. Both these shares were sold by Khetsingh and his mother Rupa by a sale-deed dated 17-3-1897 to Todar and Rupshah Kalars, who sold them to Dashadin Pande and others (predecessors-in-title of defendants 8 to 11) on 2-7-1921, and now defendants 8 to 11 are in possession thereof. Thus Khetsingh, by these various transactions, disposed of not only his own share of the patrimony, in the four villages, but also transferred his grandmother's shares (which he had obtained by the transfer and mutations in 1884-85).

[7] On 26-11-1897 Bira granted a mortgage of her Re. 0-2-8 share in Kanthora and Re. 0-2-8 share in Bilthara (which were allotted to her at the partition in 1874 with her co-widow Muna) for Rs. 1250 in favour of the two brothers Ramlal and Shamlal (predecessors of defendants 5 to 7), whose sons, on the strength of this mortgage, obtained a final decree for foreclosure against Bira, and are now in possession of the hypothecated estate.

[8] After the death of Netram his property was inherited by his widow Mt. Gomti, and in order to pay off the debts of her husband, she mortgaged her property with Patel Durag Singh and Thakurdas on 19-7-1886 (Ex. 8, D-27). By that time she had apparently remarried. In that instrument the name of Bira (Madarilal's widow) was included as a co-mortgagee. In order to pay off this mortgage of 1886 and certain other debts of Netram, a fresh mortgage-deed (Ex. 8, D-3) dated 27-1-1894, was executed by these two ladies and Mt. Indar widow of Beharilal, in favour of Bhawani, Todar and Rupshah, who later on assigned their mortgagee rights to defendant 8 and his father by a deed of transfer dated 19-6-1909 (Ex. 8, D-2). On 7-7-1920 Gomti and Bira sold a Re. 0-2-8 share in Piparia and a Re. 0-2-8 in Padaria by a sale-deed (Ex. 8, D-18) to defendants 8 to 11, who are now in possession thereof.

[9] The plaintiffs challenged all these alienations on the ground that they were the next immediate reversioners of Madarilal and that they were not bound by those alienations, which were effected by the two ladies Muna and Bira without any legal necessity. Mr. R. S. Dabir who appeared for the appellants did not dispute the relationship of the plaintiffs and also did not question their status as immediate next reversioners in this appeal. In fact his main ground of attack was that at the time when the two ladies effected a partition in 1874, they had entered into an agreement to relinquish their rights of survivorship so that after the partition they had had no concern with each other and that they could act and did act independently of each other in all their subsequent dealings, with reference to their respective shares. The material points on which the learned advocate on behalf of the appellants addressed his arguments may be summarised as under.

[10] In the first place it was said that the mutations of Muna's shares in the four villages, which were based upon a transfer, amounted to a valid surrender of a widow's estate by Muna in favour of the next reversioner Khetsingh, who consequently acquired the said shares as owner, under Hindu law. It is not disputed that in 1885 Khetsingh was the immediate next reversioner to Muna and her co-widow Bira, and it cannot also be disputed that the mutations were effected in respect of Muna's share in all the four villages. It is satisfactorily proved by the documents Exs. 1 D-3 and 2 D-3 (to be found typed at pp. 224 and 236 of Part II of the paper book) that mutations in respect of Muna's estate in Kanthora were made in the name of her grandson, on the basis of the transfer. It has, therefore, been rightly held by the learned Judge in the Court below that Muna had surrendered her half share in favour of her grandson, but he erred in holding that the act of surrender was confined only to two villages, namely, Kanthora and Bilthara. It is admitted by the plaintiffs in para. 4 of their plaint that Khetsingh got mutations effected in his name, in respect of Muna's entire property, and it was never suggested by them anywhere in their pleadings that the other two villages remained with her. Having regard to the clear admission of the plaintiffs and the documentary evidence on record, consisting of Exs. 1, D-1, 1 D-3 and 2 D-3, we have no hesitation to hold that the surrender, apart from its legal effect, by Muna in favour of Khetsingh, who was then admittedly the next reversioner, was in respect of all her half interest in all the four villages.

[11] The second line of argument advanced for the appellants was that the surrender was justified as a valid surrender of a widow's estate under Hindu law, on the ground that the two widows had, at the time of their partition in 1874, relinquished their rights of survivorship and there was no prejudice likely to be caused to Bira's right of survivorship, which she had already given up at the time of the partition. This surrender, even though it was made by Muna alone, was valid in law and that it did accelerate the reversionary interest of Khetsingh, at least to the extent of that part of the widow's estate that Muna possessed in her own right.

[12] The main point for determination, therefore, is, whether the two ladies had agreed to relinquish their rights of survivorship at the time of their partition in 1874. But before we consider this point we think it is desirable to examine the pleadings of the different sets of the defendants in this case.

[13] The main defence set out by the first three defendants and defendants 8 to 11 in the Court below was that there was no disruption of the coparcenary, that there was no partition between the propositus Madarilal and his two brothers in 1866, and that after the death of Madarilal, the two branches had succeeded to his share by survivorship; whereas the defence put forward by defendants 4 to 7 in the Court below was that there was a partition in 1866 and that Madarilal died as a separate owner of the suit property. It was only defendants 1 to 3, who put forward an alternative plea that when the two ladies Bira and Muna effected a partition of their spouse's estate in 1874, they agreed to relinquish the rights of survivorship. It is very significant to note that this alternative defence of defendants 1 to 3 was not adopted by the other defendants. In the appeal before us, however, the learned counsel for the appellants has accepted the findings of the lower Court about the partition of the three brothers and has also adopted the alternative defence of defendants 1 to 3, that there was relinquishment of the rights of survivorship between the two widows at the time of their partition. It is quite apparent that, barring defendants 1 to 3, this plea is a new plea on their part and that it is an after-thought. We think that in these circumstances this plea will have to be strictly scrutinized.

[14] It is admitted by Mr. Dabir, that there is no direct evidence, oral or documentary, to prove that there was an agreement between the two widows to relinquish their rights of survivorship at the time of their partition. It is, however, contended by the learned advocate that there was an agreement in that behalf, which can be inferred from their subsequent course of conduct and the manner in which each of the two ladies dealt with her own share as owner, independently of the other.

[15] It is contended by the learned counsel appearing on behalf of the respondents that the alleged agreement was not specifically pleaded by the first three defendants. We think that there is much force in this contention, inasmuch as the plea that was put forward by the first three defendants about the alleged agreement is vague. That plea is:

> "That assuming though not admitting that both Mt. Muna and Mt. Bira inherited widow's estate from their husband and partitioned the same half and half as admitted by the plaintiffs in para 3 of the plaint, they did so conferring full power on each other to deal with their shares as they liked."

It is argued by Mr. Dabir, appearing in support of this appeal, that the agreement about relinquishment of the right of survivorship is implicit in this plea, inasmuch as the two ladies under the partition had agreed to confer full power on each other to deal with their respective shares as they liked. The issue with which we are concerned is issue 12. It runs thus:

> "Whether the two widows inherited Madarilal's share separately held by him and later partitioned it half and half between themselves as alleged by the plaintiffs?"

It is obvious that the lower Court did not frame any specific issue on the alleged agreement, for the simple reason that the agreement was not specifically pleaded, but it is rather curious to notice that the finding that was recorded by it was that there was a partition between the two widows, but it was not a partition, conferring on each, full power to deal with her share as she liked, so as to affect the surviving co-widow's right of survivorship or the right of the reversionary heirs. In these circumstances we are not inclined to stress the structure of the pleadings in this suit too strictly, as we think that fair notice of the case to be made out by the first three defendants had been given to the plaintiffs: vide 9 Luck. 178[1] at p. 184.

[16] It has been held in 10 N. L. R. 51,[2] that two or more co-widows of a Hindu, governed by the Benares School of the Mitakshara, who have inherited the property of their husband, are entitled, by agreement among themselves, to make an absolute partition of their own joint estate, so as to extinguish the right of survivorship inter se. Therefore the question that falls for consideration is whether there was such an implied agreement between the two ladies at the time of their partition. Mr. Dabir has conceded, as we have already observed, that there is no direct evidence to prove any express agreement, and all that has been urged by him is that such an agreement should be inferred from the manner in which they effected various dealings, independently of each other. It is argued that when Muna surrendered her own estate in favour of her grandson Khetsingh, who was the next reversioner, in 1884-85, there was no protest from her co-widow Bira; nor did Bira take any steps to challenge it in a Court of law during her life-time. Even after the death of Muna in 1911, Bira did not repudiate the said surrender although she had prima facie succeeded to Muna's share by survivorship. It is argued that the whole course of conduct on the part of the two ladies amounts to a complete acquiescence in the separate dealings of each other and raises a strong inference that there was an agreement between the two widows at the time of their partition to relinquish their right of survivorship. The observations of the Chief Court of Oudh which have been quoted with approval by their Lordships of the Privy Council in A. I. R. 1923 P. C. 251[3] at P. 253 are a complete answer to the arguments of the learned counsel for the appellants. These observations are :

" The most that this evidence can establish is that Umrao Kunwar and Gaya Kunwar each acted independently of one another in making transfers. Each asserted a right, which was not possessed to deal absolutely with the property in her separate possession .... The circumstance that neither objected to a transfer made by the other cannot in our opinion be construed to mean more than that neither objected to the other making a transfer, provided that transfer did not affect her own interests in the event of her succeeding to the estate by survivorship ..... We find an absolute absence of evidence which would justify us in drawing a conclusion that Gaya Kunwar consented to the transfers in question."

The finding of the High Court that no consent on the part of one of the co-widows to the transaction of the other was given was consequently upheld by their Lordships of the Privy Council. We, therefore, hold that the defendants have failed to prove that there was any agreement, either express or implied, between Muna and Bira, at the time of their partition in 1874 to relinquish their right of survivorship.

[17] We also hold that Bira did not give her consent, either express or implied, to the act of surrender by Muna in favour of Khetsingh and that it did not accelerate his reversionary interest.

[18] Even assuming that the two widows had entered into an agreement to relinquish their rights of survivorship, at the time of their partition, it is beyond question that that fact cannot affect the rights of the plaintiffs. It has been laid down by their lordships of the Privy Council in 16 Mad. 1[4] that two or more widows cannot, by any agreement between them, affect the rights of the ultimate reversioners. It is contended by the learned counsel for the respondents that the alleged surrender by Muna in respect of her entire share of the widow's estate in favour of the next reversioner namely, Khetsing, was not a valid surrender, under Hindu law, inasmuch as it was not of the whole estate. It is argued that an alienation by a widow or other limited heir of the estate, inherited by her, may be validated, if it can be shown to be a surrender of her whole interest in the whole estate in favour of the nearest reversioner, if there be only one, or of the whole body of reversioners, if there be more than one at the time of the alienation, and that if there are two or more widows, the surrender must be by all of them: vide Mulla's Principles of Hindu Law, Edn. 10th, para. 197, pages 212 and 213. In this case the surrender was by only one of the co-widows, namely Muna, and Bira — the other co-widow — did not join in the act of surrender nor did she surrender her own share of the husband's estate that she separately held under the arrangement of the partition. Consequently, there being no surrender by the two widows, acting together, of the whole estate that they had inherited from their husband Madarilal, the surrender was invalid and inoperative under Hindu law and it could not accelerate the reversionary interest of Khetsingh and convey to him any title in respect of Muna's property.

[19] Mr. Dabir in support of the appeal tried to justify this surrender as valid, only on the ground that the two co-widows had agreed to relinquish their rights of survivorship, but as we have already held that the said agreement has not been proved in the case, we do not think that the question of the validity of the surrender directly arises in this case. The question of the validity of surrender by one of the two co-widows, in respect of her entire share of the widow's estate, that she has obtained at a partition between her and the other widow, coupled with an agreement relinquishing the right of survivorship, does not, therefore, fall to be considered in this case. It is a question of purely academic interest, and we therefore refrain from giving any decision on the point. We are not so much concerned with the transfers that were made from time to time by Khetsingh, in respect of his grandmother Muna's shares in the four villages, which he had acquired under the surrender in 1885, for the simple reason that according to the appellants, the validity of these transfers depends entirely upon the existence of an agreement to relinquish the rights of survivorship at the time of the partition between the two co-widows. In view of our finding that the said agreement is not proved, the contention of the appellants about the validity of the surrender falls to the ground. The surrender could not prejudice the rights of survivorship of Bira, as found by the learned Judge of the lower Court. We go a step further and hold that, even if there had been an agreement between the two co-widows to relinquish the rights of survivorship, that could not validate the surrender and make it binding upon the plaintiffs, as we have already observed that two or more widows cannot by any agreement between them affect the rights of the ultimate reversioners. We, therefore, agree with the lower Court in holding that Khetsingh had no right to transfer Muna's property, that the plaintiffs are not bound by his transfers, and that the decree of the learned 2nd Subordinate Judge, First Class in plaintiffs' favour for possession of Muna's property is correct.

[20] Next we turn to the alienations made by Bira in respect of her own share in the estate that she had obtained at the partition in 1874. She joined in the execution of two mortgages dated 19-7-1884 and 27-1-1894 respectively along with Indar (Beharilal's widow) and Gomti (ex-widow of Netram) for payment of debts which Netram owed to creditors. The mortgagee rights under the latter mortgage, viz., of 27-1-1894, were transferred by the mortgagees, Todar Kalar and others to defendant 8 and his father by a transfer dated 19-6-1909 (Ex. 8 D-2). Later on, the ex-widow Gomti and Bira executed a sale-deed on 7-7-1920 in favour of defendants 8 and 9 and others, in order to pay off Netram's debt (Ex. 8 D-18). The learned Judge in the Court below has found that the debts of Netram, for payment of which these alienations were made, were not binding on the estate of Madarilal, in the hands of his widow Bira and that there was no need for her to pay them. In our view the learned Judge in the Court below has rightly held that, in the absence of any legal necessity for Bira to sell her interest in the two villages, Padariya and Pipriya, the transaction of sale was not binding upon the plaintiffs and that they were entitled to recover possession of Bira's shares in the two villages from the defendants. The second alienation, which Bira made, was the mortgage of 26-11-1897, on the basis of which Ramlal Shamlal obtained the foreclosure decree against her. There is absolutely no evidence on record to show that Khetsingh, who was then the next reversioner, had consented to this mortgage, but it was found by the lower Court, on the evidence on record, that the said mortgage was executed by Bira for legal necessity. This finding has not been challenged by the learned counsel for the respondents on the facts, but it is contended by him that, although the mortgage was for legal necessity, still the mortgage, or the foreclosure decree based thereon, is not binding upon the plaintiffs, inasmuch as it was effected by Bira without the concurrence of her co-widow Muna. It is argued that the two ladies could partition the property so that each might separately enjoy the usufruct. It is not disputed that, if they had acted together, they could have alienated the corpus of the estate for debts contracted for legal necessity, but it is contended that one of them could not prejudice the rights of survivorship of the other, by alienations, even though for legal necessity, save with the consent of the other. The mere fact that a partition has taken place between them does not imply a right to prejudice the claims of the survivor: vide 16 Mad. 1[4] ; A. I. R. 1926 Mad. 6[5] and A. I. R. 1942 ALL. 365.[6] Even in a case where the arrangement between the two widows may be of such a character that each relinquishes her right of survivorship in the portion of the estate held by the other and where an alienation (with or without legal necessity and without the consent of the other) cannot be questioned by the other, it will not bind the reversioner: vide 14 Pat. 518,[7] 45 M. L. J. 1[8] and A. I. R. 1928 P. C. 251.[3] We, therefore, agree with the lower Court in holding that the plaintiffs are neither bound by the mortgage nor by the foreclosure decree thereon and that the lower Court was justified in decreeing the claim of the plaintiff for possession in respect of this property.

[21] The only point that now remains to be considered is whether plaintiff 1 is estopped from challenging the sale-deed dated 7-7-1920 (Ex. 8 D.18), executed by Bira and Gomti. This sale-deed was executed in favour of the predecessors of defendants 8 to 11, and so far as this transaction is concerned, there is absolutely nothing on record to show that plaintiff 1 had any concern with it. At the time of this transaction, Khetsingh was already dead, and the first two plaintiffs were admittedly the next reversioners. The transferees did approach plaintiff 2 and obtained his consent to the transaction in writing, and the lower Court has rightly held that so far as plaintiff 2 is concerned, he is estopped from challenging this transaction. In view of the fact that plaintiff 2's consent to the transaction was specifically asked for and obtained in writing, it is not improbable that the transferees approached plaintiff 1 also to obtain his consent, and it is, therefore, very significant that the transferees did not obtain his consent in writing, nor is there anything on record to show, as we have already observed, that plaintiff 1 assented to this transaction; but it is argued that the plaintiffs had had knowledge of the previous transaction, which ultimately led to the execution of the sale dated 7-7-1920. For the appellants it has been contended by Mr. Dabir that plaintiff 1 attested the deed of assignment (Ex. 8 D-2), dated 19-6-1909 and has expressly mentioned in his attestation clause that he attested the document after reading the deed. This deed of assignment comprises three mortgages, viz., (1) executed by plaintiff 1 and others dated 25-7-1892, (2) another mortgage by Gomti, Indar and Bira dated 27-1-1894 and (3) by plaintiff 1 and others dated 16-4-1897. The two mortgages executed by plaintiff 1 and others have no concern whatsoever with the mortgage executed jointly by the three ladies, viz., Gomti, Indar and Bira, all the three being distinctly separate transactions. It is argued that inamuch as this deed of assignment relates to the mortgage by Bira and others and inasmuch as the deed of assignment was attested by plaintiff 1 after reading the instrument, it should be presumed that he consented to the valid and binding nature of the mortgage by Bira in 1894. In any case this is not a case of mere attestation by plaintiff 1 but a case of attestation, coupled with knowledge of the previous alienation by Bira. We think that plaintiff 1 Halkulal must have been asked to attest this deed of assignment by Todar, in favour of Pandit Thakur Prasad, because it comprised two mortgages executed by him, and the only reasonable inference that we can draw from his attestation is that he did not want to challenge the deed of assignment, in respect of his own mortgages.

[22] The other circumstance on which Mr. Dabir has relied in support of his plea of estoppel is that plaintiff 1 scribed the receipt (Ex. 8 D-4), dated 26th June 1918, that was executed by Bira and Gomti in favour of Todar relating to a dispute about the payment of Rs. 150. Plaintiff 1 also scribed the signature clauses of Bira and the ex-widow. It is, therefore, argued that he was aware of the previous mortgage that was executed by Bira and Gomti in favour of Todar and others, to clear off the debts of Netram and inasmuch as the receipt related to a dispute about a part of the consideration of the said mortgage, plaintiff 1 should be presumed to have accepted the validity and the binding nature of the mortgage of 1894 (Ex. 8 D-3). In our opinion mere knowledge of a previous transaction is neither here nor there, in the absence of any evidence of representation by plaintiff 1 to the predecessors of defendants 8 to 11. It is conceded that there is no other evidence in the case to support the plea of estoppel, beyond the fact that plainitff 1 attested the deed of assignment and scribed the receipt. It is futile to contend that the plea of estoppel can be sustained on such flimsy grounds. Their Lordships of the Privy Council have laid down in 20 Cal. 296[9] that:

"the main question, in determining whether estoppel has been occasioned, is whether the representation has caused the person to whom it has been made to act on the faith of it. The existence of estoppel does not depend on the motive, or on the knowledge of the matter on the part of the person making the representation. It is not essential that the intention of the person whose declaration, act or omission has induced another to act, or to abstain from acting, should have been fraudulent, or that he should not have been under a mistake, or misapprehension."

In the absence of any evidence on record that plaintiff 1 had made any representation and that the transferees had acted on the faith of it, in buying the property, under the sale-deed dated 7th July 1920, it is ridiculous to contend that the plea of estoppel is tenable in law.

[23] It should be borne in mind that, neither in 1909 nor in 1918, plaintiff 1, though a presumptive reversionary heir, was not entitled to claim possession of the property, for the simple reason that Bira was then alive and no inheritance had opened out. In 42 Mad. 523[10] at p. 538 their Lordships of the Privy Council have observed thus:

"But it is well settled that though he who may be termed a presumptive reversionary heir has a title to challenge an alienation at its inception, he need not do so, but is entitled to wait till the death of the widow has affirmed his character, a character which up to that date might be defeated by birth or by adoption."

It cannot be disputed that either at the time of the date of assignment in 1909 or at the time of the receipt in 1918, plaintiff 1's character as the nearest reversionary heir was not affirmed, Bira being alive, and that he cannot be held to be estopped, merely because he did not challenge the alienation at its inception or merely because he attestsd the deed of assignment or scribed the receipt with knowledge of the previous transaction. The transaction was good and valid as long as Bira was alive and she was quite competent to enter into it in any manner she liked. In these circumstances, the grounds which have been urged before us by Mr. Dabir in support of the plea of estoppel are devoid of any substance.

[24] For the above reasons we affirm the decree of the lower Court and dismiss this appeal with costs.

Hittu Bansi—Complainant—Applicant v. Sheolal Dinaji and another—Accused—Non-applicants.

Criminal Revn. No. 571 of 1946, Decided on 12-3-1947, from order of Addl. Sessions Judge, Balaghat, D/-22-7-1946.

(a) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 161 — Answers to questions under S. 161 during investigation, whether absolutely privileged—Penal Code (1860), S. 500.

There is no absolute privilege in respect of the statements a witness is compelled to make from the witness-box and the rule of English law has not been incorporated in Indian Statute Law. The privilege is a qualified one : 24 A. I. R. 1937 Nag. 138, Foll. [Para 5]

Sub-section (2) of S. 161, Criminal P. C., allows a witness to refuse to answer questions which expose him to a criminal charge or to a penalty or forfeiture. It follows that a witness is not compelled to answer questions which would expose him to a charge of defamation. If he answers questions, the witness can only avoid a charge of defamation if he succeeds in bringing his answers under the exceptions mentioned in S. 499, Penal Code. There is no essential difference between S. 132, Evidence Act and S. 161 (2), Criminal P. C. If anything, the proviso to the former gives some privilege but the latter does not. Section 161 (2), Criminal P. C., does not go further than S. 132 of the Evidence Act. Answers given to questions under S. 161, Criminal P. C. during investigation are therefore not absolutely privileged. [Paras 5, 6]

Order.— This is an application for revision of the judgment of Mr. S. C. Rai, Additional Sessions Judge, Balaghat, in Criminal Appeal No. 125 of 1946 decided on 22-7-1946.

[2] The two non-applicants, Sheolal and Jagatrai were convicted under S. 500, Penal Code, and sentenced to pay fines of Rs. 100-0-0 and Rs. 50-0-0 respectively. It was alleged against them that during the investigation of an offence relating to a foetus found in a field the accused made a statement imputing illegitimate pregnancy and miscarriage or abortion to the applicant's unmarried sister Miss Kari.

[3] In the appeal before the lower Court, it was urged that the statement was not made and if it was it was privileged because S. 161 (2), Criminal P. C. compels a witness to answer all questions relating to an offence. The lower appellate Court held that there was such privilege and that the accused were entitled to an acquittal.

[4] In this revision it is urged that this is a wrong statement of the law and that there has been a miscarriage of justice and that the acquittal deserves to be set aside and the case remanded for a rehearing of the appeal.

[5] In connexion with S. 132, Evidence Act, it has been held by almost all the Courts in India that there is no absolute privilege in respect of the statements a witness is compelled to make from the witness-box and that the rule of English law has not been incorporated in Indian Statute Law. See I. L. R. (1937) Nag. 425[1] by which I am bound and also the rulings cited therein. The weight of authority is definitely in favour of a qualified privilege. In 16 Mad 235[2] and 11 Mad 477[3] this rule of English Law was extended to statements made to the police under S. 161, Criminal P. C. In my opinion sub-section (2) itself allows a witness to refuse to answer questions which expose him to a criminal charge or to a penalty or forfeiture. It follows that a witness is not compelled to answer questions which would expose him to a charge of defamation. If he answers questions the witness can only avoid a charge of defamation if he succeeds in bringing his answers under the exceptions mentioned in S. 499.

[6] The earlier Madras cases must be deemed to have been modified by the later cases of that Court in connexion with S. 132, Evidence Act, though 1938-1 M. L. J. 810[4] seem to follow the earlier decisions. There is no essential difference between S. 132, Evidence Act, and S. 161 (2), Criminal P. C. If anything the proviso to the former gives some privilege which the authorities cited above hold not to be absolute, but the latter does not. It is difficult to read S. 161 (2) as going further than S. 132, Evidence Act. In my opinion, therefore, the law was incorrectly stated by the lower appellate Court. The acquittal, therefore, deserves to be set aside and the appeal remanded to the lower appellate Court for disposal according to law. In ordering so I respectfully follow the precedent of Grille J. (now C. J.) in Cri. Revn. No. 1 of 1944.[5] I hold that this Court has the power to interfere in revision with acquittals in which by reason of a gross error of law or of procedure there has been a failure of justice. I accordingly set aside the acquittal and remand the appeal for a rehearing and disposal according to law.

Criminal Revn. No. 45 of 1947, Decided on 24-9-1947, from order of Addl. Sessions Judge, Buldana, D/-20-12-1946.

Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 195 (1) (b) — False complaint to police of offence under S. 392, Penal Code — Police officer reporting it to Magistrate under S. 173, Criminal P. C.— Subsequently under orders of superior police officer he filing complaint under S. 211, Penal Code— S. 195 (1) (b) is no bar to prosecution of case.

One B made a complaint to the Station House Officer of an offence under S. 392, Penal Code. The Station House Officer after investigation came to the conclusion that the information was false and reported this to the Additional District Magistrate under S. 173, Criminal P. C. Subsequently under the orders of a superior police officer he filed a complaint against B under S. 211, Penal Code. It was objected that the Court had no jurisdiction to try the case in the absence of a complaint by the Additional District Magistrate:

Held, that the mere fact that a report was made under S. 173, Criminal P. C. did not mean that there were any proceedings in a Court. As there were no proceedings in any Court, S. 195 (1) (b) was no bar to the prosecution of the case : Case law referred.

Order.—Birdichand made a complaint to the Station House Officer, Borakhedi, that two persons had taken Rs. 9 from him by putting him in fear, and the Station House Officer registered an offence under S. 392, Penal Code and investigated it. He came to the conclusion that the information was false and reported this to the Additional District Magistrate, Buldana, as required by S. 173, Criminal P. C. Subsequently under the orders of a superior police officer he filed a complaint against Birdichand under S. 211, Penal Code. It was objected that the Court had no jurisdiction to try the case in the absence of a complaint by the Additional District Magistrate, but that objection was overruled. The learned Additional Sessions Judge has reported the case with the recommendation that the proceedings should be quashed.

[2] Section 195 (1) (b), Criminal P. C. forbids a Court to take cognizance of an offence under S. 211, Penal Code when such offence is alleged to have been committed in or in relation to any proceeding in any Court except on the complaint in writing of such Court or of some other Court to which such Court is subordinate. Here there never were any proceedings in any Court, and S. 195 (1) (b), in my opinion, is no bar to the present case. The mere fact that a report was made under S. 173, Criminal P. C., does not mean that there were any proceedings in a Court.

[3] The learned Additional Sessions Judge has referred to several cases in support of his view that the proceedings should be quashed. The decision in A. I. R. 1936 Lah. 238 [1] does support him, though I cannot agree with the view there expressed that the words in S. 195 (1) (b) 'in relation to any proceedings in any Court' apply if there was merely an intention that there should in consequence of the report to the police be a trial in a criminal Court. That decision was referred to, apparently with approval, in A. I. R. 1941 Lah. 216,[2] but in that case a complaint was made to a Magistrate after the report had been made to the police; it was held that there could be no complaint under S. 182, Penal Code as the case fell within the purview of S. 211, Penal Code, and that a complaint by the Magistrate was required. That decision, however, was overruled in A. I. R. 1943 Lah. 31,[3] where it was held that a prosecution could be launched under S. 182, Penal Code in such circumstances, even if there was a subsequent false complaint to a Magistrate amounting to an offence under S. 211, Penal Code.

[4] In A. I. R. 1941 Bom. 294[4] the accused was discharged by a Magistrate, and in A. I. R. 1946 Bom. 7,[5] there was a complaint to a Court; so those decisions are not in point. In A. I. R. 1935 Nag. 69[6], the complaint was preferred by a Sub-Inspector of Police under S. 211, Penal Code against a person who had, it was said, falsely accused him of rape, and it was not apparently suggested there that the sanction of any Court was required. In 23 N. L. R. 136,[7] it was held that a person against whom a false charge has been made to the police can institute, a complaint for an offence under S. 211, Penal Code independently of the provisions of S. 195, Criminal P. C. In I. L. R. (1939) Kar. 388[8] it was held that where a Magistrate gives a 'B' summary of a case that is an administrative and not a judicial act and does not bring the offence within the provisions of S. 195 (1) (b). The meaning of S. 195 (1) (b) seems to me fairly clear, and it also seems clear in the present case that there have been no proceedings in any Court. Therefore the bar contained in that clause does not apply, and there is no reason why the present proceedings should be quashed. The reference is not accepted.

(a) Government of India Act (1935), S. 270 (1)—Public servant — Prosecution for illegal gratification—Consent of Governor-General not necessary —Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 197.

To attract the provisions of S. 270 (1), it is not sufficient merely to establish that the person proceeded against was a public servant and that while acting as a public servant, or taking advantage of his position as a public servant, he did certain acts ; it must be established that the act complained of was an official act. The act of receiving illegal gratification cannot be an act done or purporting to be done in the execution of duty. The prior sanction of the Governor-General is therefore not necessary for the prosecution of a public servant for an offence under S. 161, Penal Code : 26 A. I. R. 1939 F. A charge under S. 161 is one which is easily and may often be lightly made, but is in the very nature of things difficult to establish, as direct evidence must in most cases be meagre and of a tainted nature. These considerations cannot, however, be suffered to relieve the prosecution of any part of the burden which rests upon it to establish the charge beyond reasonable doubt. If, after everything that can legitimately be considered has been given its due weight, room still exists for taking the view that, however strong the suspicion raised against the accused, every reasonable possibility of innocence has not been excluded, he is entitled to an acquittal : 31 A. Dr. T. J. Kedar, N. M. Dharaskar and S. K. Deshpande — for Appellant.

Hidayatullah, Advocate-General—for the Crown.

Judgment. — Balkrishna Murlidhar Hadap was convicted under S. 161, Penal Code, and sentenced to one year's rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 500 by the Special Tribunal, Amraoti, in Criminal Case No. 11 of 1945 on 8-10-1945. Pending the filing of an appeal, he was released on bail on that date by the Tribunal under S. 426 (2a), Criminal P. C. He filed an appeal in this Court on 17-10-1945 to set aside his conviction and sentence and he was allowed to remain on bail by Hemeon J.

[2] The Special Tribunal, Amraoti, was constituted under the Criminal Law Amendment Ordinance, 1943 (29 [XXIX] of 1943), and the trial of the appellant was held in accordance with the provisions thereof. Under S. 7 of the Ordinance, as originally promulgated no appeal lay against any sentence of a Tribunal. The section was amended and a new section was substituted by the Criminal Law (1943-Amendment) Second Amending Ordinance, 1945 (22 [XXII] of 1945) which was published in the Gazette of India, Extraordinary, on 4-7-1945. The complaint against the appellant was filed on 30-7-1945. Under the section as amended an appeal to this Court was competent because the offence was alleged to have taken place at Tumsar Road within the local limits of the jurisdiction of this Court.

[3] Balkrishna Murlidhar Hadap was a goods clerk at the Tumsar Road Railway Station, B. N. Ry., in February 1945, and had put in 38 years service and was to retire after three months. Under S. 137 (1), Railways Act, 1890, every railway servant is deemed to be a public servant for the purposes of Chap. IX, Penal Code. The appellant was thus a public servant for the purposes mentioned in that chapter.

[4] The charge against the appellant was that on or about 23-2-1945, at Tumsar Road Goods Shed platform, he accepted Rs. 171 as a gratification other than legal remuneration from Ganpat Pandurang Teli as a reward for doing official acts and committed an offence punishable under S. 161, Penal Code.

[5] In Ground No. 1 of the memorandum of appeal the appellant urged that prior sanction of the Governor-General in Council was necessary for his prosecution, that for want of such sanction the trial was vitiated and that consequently his conviction was illegal. This contention was not pressed by Dr. Kedar, the learned counsel for the appellant. The contention has no force and is concluded by two decisions of the Federal Court in 1939 F. C. R. 159[1] and 1944 F. C. R. 262.[2] The observations in the latter case at pages 268 and 269 may be quoted as decisive of the contention raised :

"Section 270 (1) of the Constitution Act relates to proceedings instituted against a person 'in respect of any act done or purporting to be done in the execution of his duty as a servant of the Crown'."

In 1939 F. C. R. 159[1] this Court laid down that

"to attract the provisions of this section it was not sufficient merely to establish that the person proceeded against was a public servant and that while acting as a public servant, or taking advantage of his position as a public servant, he did certain act; it must be established that the act complained of was an official act. In this case the act complained of was the act of receiving illegal gratification. That surely could not be an act done or purporting to be done in the execution of duty."

On page 179, of (1939) F. C. R., Sulaiman J. observed:

"For instance, if a public servant accepts as a reward a bribe in his office while actually engaged in his official work, he is not accepting it even in his official capacity, much less in the execution of any official duty, although it is quite certain that he could never have been able to take the bribe unless he were the official in charge of some official work. He does not even pretend to the person who offers the bribe that he is acting in the discharge of his official duty, but merely uses his official position to obtain the illegal gratification."

[6] The sanction of the Governor-General under S. 270 (1) of the Government of India Act, 1935, was thus unnecessary for the prosecution of the appellant under S. 161, Penal Code. The trial of the appellant was not vitiated and his conviction cannot be challenged for want of sanction.

[7] In 1944 F. C. R. 262[2] at pp. 262, 271, Zafrulla Khan J, observed:

"A charge under S. 161, Penal Code is one which is easily and may often be lightly made, but is in the very nature of things difficult to establish, as direct evidence must in most cases be meagre and of a tainted nature. These considerations cannot however be suffered to relieve the prosecution of any part of the burden which rests upon it to establish the charge beyond reasonable doubt. If after everything that can legitimately be considered has been given its due weight, room still exists for taking the view that however strong the suspicion raised against the accused, every reasonable possibility of innocence has not been excluded, he is entitled to an acquittal."

[8] These observations are important and have to be borne in mind in deciding a case under the section.

[9] The prosecution case was briefly stated as follows : S. N. Ghose (P. W. 6) was formerly an Assistant Station Master in the Bengal Nagpur Railway. Since May 1943, he was employed as a Station Officer attached to the Special Police Establishment. One of his duties was to inform his superior officer, Inspector, Kuar Sen, about corruption among the staff on the Bengal Nagpur Railway. Some time in September or October 1944 he received information that there was corruption among the staff at the Tumsar Road Railway Station. Kuar Sen instructed him to lay a trap in this connection, if possible. Ghose got in touch with Ganpat Pandurang (P. W. 9) who had been working as a Dalal (broker) at the station for Satyanarayan (P. W. 7) and four other merchants. Ghose had promised Ganpat that he will personally verify the reports against the railway staff at the goods-shed; but he could not do so as he was engaged in other cases at Jubbulpore. Two days after he first met him, Ghose sent him a letter (Ex. D 1) by post from Nagpur on 27th October 1944 intimating him that they were busy and he should wait for some time more. Ghose met him a month later, but nothing was settled about the laying of a trap. Ghose again met him about 17th or 18th February 1945 and finding that he was willing to help him, requested Kuar Sen to depute Sadasheo Tiwari (P. W. 8) Sub-Inspector of Police to arrange for a trap. Ghose met Tiwari at Nagpur on 21st or 22nd February 1945 and instructed him to establish direct contact with Ganpat. Ghose did not go to Tumsar Road Station on the day the trap was laid.

[10] Sadashiv Tiwari (P. W. 8), Sub-Inspector of Police, was entrusted with the duty of laying a trap. He had sent a word to Ganpat through Ghose that he will be at Tumsar Road on 23rd February 1945 and that Ganpat should be ready with the money which he intended to pay as a bribe to the goods clerk and to pay it to him if he demanded it. On 22nd February 1945 Tiwari saw the District Magistrate, Bhandara, who empowered Mr. Janaswamy (P. W. 1), Extra Assistant Commissioner, to exercise first class magisterial powers in the Bhandara District by his order (Ex. P. 2) passed on that date and deputed him to witness the trap to be laid in this connection and directed Mr. T. N. Verma, Naib Tahsildar to proceed to Tumsar Road along with him.

[11] Tiwari reached Tumsar Road on 23rd February 1945 and saw Ganpat at his house in the city at about 11 A. M. and was with him for about an hour. Ganpat showed him the statement of account (Ex. P. 8) and the currency notes which he was going to offer as a bribe. They then went to the Dharamsala and on the arrival of Mr. Janaswamy at 2 P. M., Tiwari produced Ganpat before him. Mr. Janaswamy recorded his statement (Ex. P. 1).

[12] The substance of the statement of Ganpat recorded on 23rd February 1945 (Ex. P. 1) may now be stated : Hadap was a goods clerk and was charging 0 6-0 per tin as illegal gratification. Ganpat had despatched as a Dalal on behalf of Satyanarayan 856 tins of ghee, including 25 tins booked on that date. The total amount of illegal gratification for 856 tins worked out at Rs. 321. He stated that he had paid Rs. 150 to Hadap in three instalments on the following dates : Rs. 50 on 2nd February 1945; Rs. 50 on 5th February 1945; Rs. 50 on 12th February 1945; that he had still to pay Rs. 171, and that Hadap was dunning him for the payment of that amount and threatened him that he would not book further consignments unless the amount was paid. As Hadap was pressing him for payment he intended to pay him in the afternoon Rs. 171 in currency notes. He stated the numbers and the denominations of the notes, and showed a statement of account of the bribe.

[13] After recording the above statement, Mr. Janaswamy instructed Ganpat to give a signal by raising his cap after paying the money to the accused.

[14] Ganpat then went to the Tumsar Road Station which was at a distance of 3 miles from the Dharamshala. Tiwari proceeded to the Rest-House, Tumsar Road as directed by the Magistrate. Tiwari met Ganpat near the goods-shed between 3-30 and 4-30 P. M. and instructed him to keep a man near him so that he might overhear the conversation between him and the accused and witness the payment of the bribe to the accused.

[15] Mr. Janaswamy and Mr. Verma arrived at the Rest-House at about 3.55 P. M. Mr. Janaswamy was in the verandah of the Rest-House at the point marked '2' in the sketch map (Ex. P. 7) prepared by Ibrahim Khan Patwari (P. W. 2). Tiwari and Mr. Verma were in the bath-room which is marked '3' in the sketch. The point '4' is the goods-shed and '5' is the office of the goods-shed. '4' the goods-shed, is at a distance of 111 feet from the Rest-House. Point No. 6 on the open platform on the west of the goods-shed was the place where the money was stated to have been paid by Ganpat to the accused and was at a distance of 55 yards from point No. 5. In para. 2 of the complaint it was stated that from the bath-room of the Rest-House Mr. Verma and Tiwari could catch a signal from the broker. This was not however possible according to the evidence of Ibrahim Khan, who stated that between the goods-shed and the Rest-House, there is a hospital building and porters' quarter and near the hospital there is a fencing of mehdi plants and that if one were to see from room No. 3 in the sketch, one could not see any person standing on the west side of the goods-shed, but he could see from point No. 8. The evidence of the patwari was recorded on 19th September 1945. Mr. Verma was examined on 21st September and Tiwari on 2nd October 1945, and they stated that they saw Ganpat and the accused coming out of the goods-shed office at about 6 P. M., and that afterwards when they moved towards the western side of the goods-shed, these witnesses came out of the bath-room and watched them from the place marked '8' in the sketch, which was at a distance of 123 feet from point No. 6 where the money was alleged to have been given by Ganpat to the accused and the signal was raised. These witnesses further stated that they first saw Ganpat handing over a paper to the accused and thereafter a bundle to him. It is very doubtful whether they could have observed this from such a long distance at about 6-30 P. M. especially when both Ganpat and the accused were moving to and fro on the platform. This is however not material as the accused admitted that Ganpat had given him the money and a statement of account. The witnesses (P. Ws. 5 and 8) saw the signal given by Ganpat, sent a word to Mr. Janaswamy and they reached the goods-shed platform a few minutes later. They stated that the accused produced the currency notes for Rs. 171 and the statement of account (Ex. P-8) when he was asked to do so.

[16] Mr. Janaswamy compared the numbers of the notes produced by the accused with the numbers as recorded in the statement of Ganpat (Ex. P-1) and found that the numbers tallied. The currency notes were seized under seizure memo Ex. P. 3. The accused had with him other currency notes for Rs. 676 and small change for

Rs. 1-8-9, and they were seized under seizure memo, Ex. P-4 under which the statement of account (Ex. P-8) was also seized. Mr. Janaswamy then recorded the statement of Ganpat (Ex. P-1-A) and Bakaram (Ex. P-5) and placed the accused under arrest. He also recorded the statement of the accused which has not been filed in the case and which has not been used to support the conviction of the accused. The Magistrate wrote the order-sheet (Ex. P-6) at about 10 P. M. and released the accused on bail.

[17] In the order-sheet there is a reference to a confessional statement of the accused. The order-sheet is not signed by the accused and he was not asked about it in his examination as an accused under S. 342, Criminal P.C., The confessional statement in the order-sheet cannot be used as evidence in the case against the accused and has not been used by the Special Tribunal to support the conviction of the accused. The learned Advocate-General did not rely on that statement in his argument. The confession of the accused, if it was duly recorded by the Magistrate as required by S. 164, Criminal P. C., was admissible against the accused. The confession of the accused recorded by the Magistrate has not been filed and there is no proof that it was duly recorded. In the absence of such proof, no other evidence was admissible to prove the confession of the accused made to the Magistrate: see 17 Lah. 629[3] and I. L. R. (1937) Nag. 268[4] The statement of the accused recorded by the Magistrate in his order-sheet must therefore be ignored.

[18] Mr. Janaswamy exercised the magisterial powers in this case. He ordered Tiwari, Sub-Inspector of Police, under S. 155 (2) of the Criminal P. C. to investigate this case. He recorded the statements of Ganpat Pandurang and Bakaram. He arrested the accused and recorded his statement and subsequently released him on bail.

[19] Dr. Kedar, counsel for the appellant, contended that Mr. Janaswamy could not exercise the magisterial powers, while the learned Advocate-General contended that he could.

[20] Mr. Janaswamy was formerly a Tahsildar and he was subsquently appointed a temporary Extra-Assistant Commissioner, Balaghat, on the 25th March 1943. In exercise of the powers conferred by sub-section (1) of S. 12, Criminal P. C. the Provincial Government appointed him on 29th April 1943 to be a Magistrate of the first class in the Balaghat District. He went on leave for four months, but was permitted to return to duty before the expiry of the leave and was appointed a temporary Extra-Assistant Commissioner, Raipur. On 7th September 1944 he was transferred in the same capacity to the Bhandara district. On 12th December 1944 the Provincial Government issued the following notification:—

"In exercise of the powers conferred by sub-s. (1) of s. 12 read with s. 39, Criminal P. C. 1898 (V of 1898), the Provincial Government is pleased to direct that all Tahsildars exercising powers of a Magistrate of the second class shall, on their appointment as temporary Extra-Assistant Commissioners, stand invested with the powers of a Magistrate of the first class.

The Provincial Government is further pleased to direct that such Tahsildars shall, in the event of their reversion to the substantive post, continue to hold such powers unless such powers or any of them are expressly withdrawn."

The District Magistrate empowered Mr. Janaswamy to exercise the magisterial powers with which he had been invested. Mr. Janaswamy had been invested with the powers of a Magistrate first class in the Balaghat district and could exercise the same powers in the Bhandara district by virtue of S. 40, Criminal P. C., and by reason of the notification quoted above.

[21] After the accused was released, he made a report (Ex. D-9) to the Station Master about the incident to the effect that while he was busy in his work Ganpat Dalal handed over to him Rs. 271 (sic) and one sheet of paper and left the place stating that he was returning. While the accused was going to report to the Station-Master against Ganpat, he was arrested on the ground that Ganpat Dalal had given him baxis. The Station-Master sent a telegram (Ex. D-10) to the District Commercial Officer communicating the report made by the Goods-clerk to him.

[22] The accused admitted that he was a Goods-clerk at the Tumsar Road Railway-Station in February 1945, but denied that he had anything to do with the despatch of goods, or that there was any settlement of accepting mamul or illegal gratification at the rate of annas six per tin of ghee, or that Ganpat paid Rs. 100 in two instalments to him and Rs. 50 to Mone on account of illegal gratification. The accused admitted that Ganpat had handed over to him some notes rolled with paper, Ex. P-8, asking him to hand over the same to Mone, the shed-clerk, as reward. The accused asked Ganpat to accompany him to the Station-Master to whom he was going to make a report against him. While the accused was going to the Station-Master for making a report, he was accosted by Inspector Tiwari and on his asking him he handed over the notes and Ex. P-8 to Tiwari. The accused stated that Mone had detected smuggling of some goods by Ganpat of another merchant and had brought this to his notice. The accused had reported to the Station-Master and Ganpat had to apologise to the Station-Master. The suggestion was that Ganpat made a false charge against him out of revenge.

[23] The conviction of the accused is based on the evidence of Ganpat Pandurang and Bakaram and the fact that the notes for Rs. 171 and the statement of account (Ex. P-8) were produced by the accused immediately after the incident. The Special Tribunal considered that Ganpat was not technically an accomplice but that his evidence required to be considered carefully and corroborated. The Special Tribunal held that the evidence of Ganpat was corroborated by the evidence of Bakaram and the conduct of the accused and rejected the explanation of the accused as not true.

[24] Ganpat, on his own statement, was an associate in crime. He alleged that he had paid Rs. 150 in three instalments on different dates as bribe to the accused and Mone, shed-clerk; and that when he took the sum of Rs. 161-10 from Satyanarayan on 22-2-1945, he intended to give the sum as bribe to the accused. A person who offers bribe to a public officer is guilty of abetment of the offence under S. 161, Penal Code, read with S. 109 or S. 116, Penal Code, according as the act abetted is committed in consequence of the abetment or not : see 1942 N. L. J. 104.[5] The person who offers a bribe to a public officer is an accomplice; see 14 Bom. 331,[6] 26 Bom. 193,[7] A. I. R. 1929 Nag. 215[8] and A. I. R. 1945 Mad. 358.[9] In 1944 F. C. R. 262[2] at p. 271 the evidence of such a person was treated as that of an accomplice. In 38 Cal. 96[10] a distinction was drawn between a person who makes himself an agent for the prosecution with the purpose of discovering and disclosing the commission of an offence and a person who is associated with an offence with a criminal design. The former is not an accomplice and his evidence does not require corroboration but the weight to be attached to it depends on the character of the individual witness. But in the case of the latter, he is an accomplice, and his evidence requires corroboration. Ganpat was an accomplice and it is not safe to base a conviction upon his evidence unless it is corroborated in material particulars by independent evidence. The learned Advocate-General conceded that the evidence of Ganpat required corroboration. The question for decision in this appeal is whether the evidence of Ganpat was reliable, and whether it was corroborated in material particulars by independent evidence. (His Lordship discussed the evidence and held that the guilt of the accused had not been proved beyond reasonable doubt and set aside the conviction and the sentence passed on the appellant under S. 161, Penal Code.)

Order.—The non-applicant, Sitaram (P. W. 5.) lost a bullock which was worth about Rs. 150, in March 1947 while it was grazing and a report was duly made to the police. Sukhau, who was thereafter prosecuted, was convicted under S. 379, Penal Code, and bound over under S. 562 (1), Criminal P.C., by the First Class Magistrate, Drug, who directed the bullock to be returned to Mt. Fulwati (P. W. 3) who had bought it from Sukhau for Rs. 80.

[2] The District Magistrate, Drug, has now reported the case under S. 438, Criminal P. C., with a recommendation that the bullock should be returned to its owner Sitaram from the possession of Mt. Fulwati who was not entitled to it.

[3] Fulwati was not aware that the bullock was stolen property and her purchase of it was undoubtedly bona fide. Her learned counsel contended, therefore, that the trial Court's order was proper and in support of his proposition referred me to I. L. R. (1942) Nag 769[1] in which Niyogi J. held that a person who has come into possession in a lawful manner of articles subsequently recovered from him is entitled to get them back under S. 517, Criminal P. C. That was a case, however, which ended in an acquittal and in which, as Niyogi J. himself pointed out, it had to be presumed that the accused came in lawful possession of the property and that he transferred the custody of it to the applicant in a lawful manner.

[4] Here, the position is otherwise. Sukhau had stolen the bullock and could not, therefore, legally sell it to Fulwati. In 3 Luck 494[2] a Division Bench held that jewellery which had been dishonestly retained was rightly restored to the real owner of it, although the procedure might have been different if there had been a bona fide dispute as to title. In A. I. R. 1940 Cal 346[3] the facts were that currency notes which had been mis-appropriated by Bucha, the manager of a firm, were deposited by him with another firm to redeem bills of exchange which he had pledged on his own account with that firm. The notes, which had been handed over to that firm, were identified by their numbers and most of them were seized by the police. The Magistrate directed this firm to return the currency notes to the firm of which Bucha was manager, and Edgeley J. held that this was a proper order under S. 517, Criminal P. C.

[5] I am in respectful agreement with these views and accordingly accept the learned District Magistrate's recommendation that the bullock be returned to Sitaram by Mt. Fulwati.

Order.— On the complaint of the non-applicant Sonaji the applicant Ramnath was prosecuted and convicted under S. 447, Penal Code, of criminal trespass in a field and was fined Rs. 10. Within a week of the conviction the complainant applied to the learned Magistrate for an order under S. 522, Criminal P. C. restoring him to possession of the field from which he had been dispossessed. If the learned Magistrate had then read S. 522 a good deal of trouble would have been saved. Unfortunately he did not, and issued notice and eventually passed the order asked for after the lapse of more than one month, although sub-section (1) of S. 522 clearly states that the order may be passed at any time within one month from the date of the conviction. The learned Additional Sessions Judge held that he himself had jurisdiction to pass the order, apparently as a Court of revision, and therefore considered that there was no ground for interference with the order passed by the learned Magistrate. Against that decision the present application for revision has been filed.

[2] In view of the clear words of sub-section (1) of S. 522 that the Court may pass such an order within one month from the date of the conviction I do not think that it had any jurisdiction to pass such an order after the lapse of more than one month, and on that point there seems to be no difference of opinion. No appeal lay against the learned Magistrate's decision, as he was a Magistrate of the first class, and the learned Additional Sessions Judge was not a Court of revision and had no power to interfere in revision. He therefore had no jurisdiction to make such an order himself.

[3] Under sub-section (3) of S. 522 an order under this section may be made by any Court of appeal, confirmation, reference or revision. No limitation is laid down for such an order, and it appears to me that it was not intended to prescribe any period of limitation. It obviously could not be one month from the date of conviction as an appellate or revisional Court seldom deals with a case within such period. On this point also there is fairly general agreement.

[4] The point on which there is considerable difference of opinion is whether the High Court has power under sub-section (3) to make such an order if the High Court is hearing not an appeal or a revision application against the conviction but merely an application against the order restoring or refusing to restore possession. The view taken by Beaumont C. J. in I. L. R. (1912) Bom. 249,[1] was that a High Court hearing a revision application against an order restoring or refusing to restore possession is a Court of revision within the meaning of S. 522 (3) and therefore has jurisdiction to make an order under S. 522 (1). The same view has been taken in 4 Pat. 438,[2] 12 Pat. 787[3] and I. L. R. (1939) All. 863.[4] A contrary view has been taken in 59 Cal. 1153,[5] A. I. R. 1932 Lah. 210[6] and A. I. R. 1937 Peah 7.[7] I prefer the view taken by Beaumont C. J. and do not think that S. 522 (3) should be construed too narrowly. This Court is a Court of revision when hearing the present application and has therefore, in my opinion, jurisdiction to make an order under S. 522 (1).

[5] It has been suggested that criminal force or intimidation was not used and that the complainant was not dispossessed or at least that there is no express finding to that effect. There is a clear finding by the learned Magistrate in his order under S. 522 that the complainant was dispossessed by force and criminal intimidation, and there is also a finding to that effect by the learned Additional Sessions Judge. The order placing the complainant in possession was passed on 22-7-1946 and I should ordinarily be reluctant to reverse that order at this stage. The complainant himself was in no way to blame for the delay. The result is that the order placing the complainant in possession will stand and the application for revision is dismissed.

Sahebrao Bajirao — Applicant v. Suryabhan Ziblaji and another — Non-applicants.

Criminal Revn. No. 385 of 1947, Decided on 21-10-1947, from order of Sessions Judge, Wardha, D/- 15-7-1947.

Criminal Procedure Code (1898), S. 188—"Found" means "found" by Court— How accused got there, is immaterial.

"Found" in S. 188 means found by the Court at the time when the matter comes up for trial, that is to say, any Court which is otherwise competent to try the offence can take seisin the moment the accused appears in its presence. How the accused gets there is immaterial. It does not matter whether he comes voluntarily or in answer to a summons or under illegal arrest. It is enough that the Court should find him present when it comes to take up the matter. The authority which has to do the finding is the Court and not any other authority. This may give several Courts jurisdiction. There is no harm in this. It is common for different Courts to have concurrent jurisdiction in certain matters. Any conflict which arises can always be resolved by some higher tribunal which can decide where the accused should be tried. If Court A "finds" an accused present and enters upon the trial, it is evident that Court B would not entertain the same matter. But if it did, a reference to a higher tribunal, such as the High Court, would at once set the matter right. [Paras 8, 12]

Offence under Marriage Restraint Act was committed in Bhopal State. Accused resided at Amraoti. He attended the Court at Wardha upon the summons served on him by the police at Amraoti. The question was whether the accused was "found" at Amraoti or at Wardha:

Held that the accused was "found" at Wardha which Court therefore had jurisdiction to try him; and not at Amraoti where the summons was served: 23 A. I. R. 1936 Nag. 152; 35 Bom. 225; 6 Bom. 622; (1858) 27 L. J. M. C. 48; 13 Bom. 147 and (1850) 19 L, J. M. C. 31, Rel. on. [Para 8, 12, 17]

R. S. Dabir and H. V. Kulkarni — for Applicant.

G. J. Ghate — for Non-applicant 1.

Order.— The question here is whether the Wardha Court has jurisdiction to try the applicant under the Child Marriage Restraint Act.

[2] The marriage was celebrated at Bhopal and three persons are being proceeded against in respect of it. The applicant Sahebrao is the guardian and custodian of the minor girl who is said to have been married in contravention of the Act. The prosecution seek to implead him also as an accused. It is admitted that this can only be done if his case falls under S. 188, Criminal P. C.

[3] The relevant portion of the section is contained in the words I have underlined in the following extract:

"he may be dealt with in respect of such offence as if it had been committed at any place within British India at which he may be found (here italicised)."

It is admitted that the offence, if any, was committed in the "territory of a Native Prince." It is also admitted that the applicant resides in Amraoti beyond the normal jurisdiction of the Wardha Court. What the prosecution allege is that he was "found" in Wardha when he attended the Court in response to the summons served on him. The applicant, on the other hand, states that he was "found" at Amraoti when the police served the summons on him there and states that he cannot be "found" a second time. It will be seen that the matter turns on the meaning of the word "found" in S. 188.

[4] In my opinion, the whole question here is who is to do the "finding." It is evident that no person or object can be said to be "found" unless somebody "finds" him or it. The whole question, therefore, is who is the person or authority contemplated by the section.

[5] It was argued that Ss. 68 and 70 furnish the necessary clue. The former deals with the issue and serving of a summons, and the latter states that:

"where the person summoned cannot with the exercise of due diligence be found etc."

It was said that it is obvious that this means "found" by the police because S. 68 (2) prescribes that the summons shall in the normal course be served by a police officer. It was argued that when a word is used in a statute it must be given the same meaning throughout unless there is something to indicate the contrary in the statute itself.

[6] I do not deny that the expression "found" as used in S. 188 can be interpreted in different ways, but in view of the fact that it has been judicially interpreted in a certain sense over many years, I do not feel I will be justified in taking a different view, particularly as it accords with my own ideas as to what will best carry out the intent of the section.

[7] I do not feel that the argument relating to Ss. 68 and 70 is conclusive because there is material in these sections to indicate that the "finding" is to be by a police officer or other person specially designated for the purpose. Section 188 contains no such limitation and as Ss. 68 (2) and 70 are expressly confined to police officers or their substitutes, while S. 188 is not. I do not feel it incumbent on me to impose limitations in S. 188 where none exists simply because a special limitation appears in the other two.

[8] In my opinion, "found" in S. 188 means found by the Court at the time when the matter comes up for trial, that is to say, any Court which is otherwise competent to try the offence can take seisin the moment the accused appears in its presence. How the accused gets there is immaterial. It does not matter whether he comes voluntarily or in answer to a summons or under illegal arrest. It is enough that the Court should find him present when it comes to take up the matter.

[9] In A. I. R. 1936 Nag. 152[1] the offence was committed at a place in the Bhopal State, the accused resided at Itarsi in the Hoshangabad District and was tried by a Hoshangabad Court. It is not clear how he got to Hoshangabad but it was held that he must be taken to have been found where he was actually present and so the Hoshangabad Court had jurisdiction. By this I understand the learned Judge to mean that as he was found to be present in the Hoshangabad Court at the relevant time that Court had jurisdiction. I do not think anything turned upon his residence at Itarsi because the section does not deal with residence, nor do I think it mattered how he reached the Hoshangabad Court. The only relevant point was that he was found to be present in Court at the proper time and that gave the Court jurisdiction.

[10] This follows the view taken in 35 Bom. 225[2] and 6 Bom. 622[3] as also in the English case reported in (1858) 27 L. J. M. C. 48.[4] There is also a case in 13 Bom. 147.[5] In all these cases the principle applied has been that it does not matter how the accused reaches the Court: he must be taken to have been "found" wherever he is actually present and by that I take it is meant found by the Court. I cannot see how the fact of illegal arrest outside jurisdiction and a forcible and wrongful bringing into Court can make him to be "found" within jurisdiction and not a voluntary appearance or one in answer to a summons.

[11] In all these cases the finding was, in my opinion, done by the Court and not by the police or any other body or person. So far as the police are concerned, they "found" their man at the place where they arrested him and that was outside jurisdiction. They could not be said to have re-found him the moment they entered jurisdiction or at any of the places through which they passed; therefore, the matter could not have turned upon their finding. The only authority left was the Court and, in my opinion, the decisions mean and lay down the broad general proposition that an accused is "found" for the purposes of S. 188 at any Court with jurisdiction otherwise in which he happens to be present irrespective of how he got there.

[12] It is objected as to this that this would give several Courts jurisdiction. I can see no harm in this. It is common for different Courts to have concurrent jurisdiction in certain matters. Any conflict which arises can always be resolved by some higher tribunal which can decide where the accused should be tried. But I do not think the question would be likely to arise. If Court A "finds" an accused present and enters upon a trial, it is evident that Court B would not entertain the same matter. But if it did, a reference to a higher tribunal, such as the High Court, would at once set the matter right.

[13] So far as England is concerned, the question has been resolved in this sense through various statutes for many years. Thus in cases of forgery, an old Statute of George IV required the trial to be either in the place in which the prisoner was apprehended or where he shall "be in custody". In (1850) 19 L. J. M. C. 31[6] Parke, B. held and the other Judges concurred that:

"the prisoner falls within the words of the statute 'be in custody' here."

This was in 1849. The learned Judge also pointed out that the report of an earlier case in the year (1840) 2 Moo. P. C. 186,[7] was wrong. The report suggests that the conviction had been quashed, whereas Parke, B., who was a member of the tribunal, pointed out that it had been upheld by nine of the eleven Judges who considered the matter.

[14] In (1840) 2 Moo. P. C. 186[7] it was argued for the Crown that the words "being in custody" were added :

"to provide for a man being apprehended in one county and brought in custody to another."

The later English cases in (1858) 27 L. J. M. C. 48[4] and Queen v. Sattler, decided in 1858 took the same view of the expression "found" in 19 and 20 Vict. C. 91, S. 21. That section corresponds to S. 188 and also uses the word "found". Welsby arguing for the Crown contended that

"the expression in the above-named Act, where the foreigner shall be 'found', does not mean where the man is discovered, but where he shall be at the time of trial."

I gather this construction was accepted. Lord Campbell said at p. 51 :

"It is clear the prisoner was found within the jurisdiction of the Central Criminal Court. Ballantyne, Serj. has contended that a man brought into a place against his will cannot be said to be found there. But we are of a different opinion. We think the Act of Parliament is framed for the purpose of providing against any such questions being raised. A man is found wherever he is actually present."

[15] As regards the Indian cases, 6 Bom. 622[3] was under the Foreign Jurisdiction and Extradition Act, XXI of 1879, while the other cases I have cited were under S. 188, Criminal P. C.

[16] Turning to the dictionary-meaning of the word, it is defined in the Oxford English Dictionary as meaning not only a discovery but also "to come upon in the course of events" and "to perceive or recognise the presence of."

[17] I am clear that the authority which has to do the "finding" is the Court and if a person is present in Court, the Court either "comes upon him in the course of events" or "perceives or recognises his presence." The application fails and is dismissed.

D. T. Mangalmurti and M. R. Indurkar — for Appellants.

M. R. Bobde, R. G. Siras and P. R. Padhye — for Respondent 1.

Judgment.—The property in dispute, which consists of a 16-anna proprietary share in mauza Bodegaon with 43.24 acres of sir, 2.58 acres of khudkasht and 16.71 acres of occupancy land, and a house therein, 47.19 acres of malik-makbuza land and a house in mauza Dighori, and 22.18 acres of malik-makbuza land in mauza Arher-Nawergaon in the Brahmapuri tahsil of the Chanda District, belonged at one time to Jairam, the natural son of Vinayak Bhat and the adopted son of Ganesh Bhai, whose family trees are as below :

GANESH BHAI
Jairam = Gangabai
(adopted son, died on 10-11-1910)
|
Janardan = Maltibai (Plaintiff)
(adopted on 21-3-1910, died on 27-7-1921)

VINAYAK BHAT

Jairam (adopted by Ganesh Bhai)	Sheoram
	Waman (defendant 1)
	Janardan (adopted by Jairam.)

[2] Jairam admittedly adopted Janardan, the natural son of Sheoram, on 21-3-1910 and died on 10-11-1910. On his death, his entire estate devolved on Janardan by survivorship. It is alleged and has been held by the lower Court that Jairam made a will (Ex. 1 D-39) on 20-3-1910 by which he devised the property in dispute to Waman (defendant 1), the son of his natural brother Sheoram, 167.39 acres of malik-makbuza land in mauza Mangli to his wife Gangabai for her lifetime, and the rest of his considerable estate to Janardan, whom he had decided to adopt. On the death of Jairam, Waman obtained mutation of the proprietary share of mauza Bodegaon and of the malik-makbuza lands in mauzas Dighori and Arher-Nawergaon in his name, and he was appointed lambardar of Bodegaon. Janardan was then a minor. It is immaterial for the purposes of this case whether Janardan came of age in 1913, as alleged by the defendants, or in 1918, as alleged by the plaintiff, and the lower Court's finding that he came of age in 1913 has not been challenged in this Court. Janardan died in 1921, and his estate then devolved on his widow Maltibai, the plaintiff. At the settlement in 1921 the property in dispute was recorded in the name of Waman, shortly after the death of Janardan. Maltibai came of age in 1926, and she brought this suit in December 1936 to recover possession of the property in dispute. The other defendants are transferees of small portions of the property in dispute from Waman.

[3] The plaintiff contended that the will was a forgery. It was apparently attested by five respectable witnesses, and there is ample evidence, as the learned Subordinate Judge has pointed out, to prove their signatures. The will was produced by Waman before the revenue authorities when he applied for mutation of the property in dispute in his name after the death of Jairam in 1910, and a certified copy of the will was retained with the revenue records. The will was mentioned in a mortgage executed by Gangabai and Waman in favour of Sir Gangadhar Chitnavis in 1911 (Ex. 1 D-17). Purshottam (P. W. 1), who said that he had never heard of any will, was obviously aware that the land in Mangli had been given to Gangabai for her maintenance, as will appear from his letter (Ex. 1 D-31) written in 1928. There is direct evidence, as the lower Court has shown, to prove that Janardan was aware of this will after he came of age, and the authenticity of it was never challenged until 1933 when Maltibai sued the transferees of Gangabai for possession of the Mangli malik-makbuza land. All the evidence one way or the other has been carefully considered by the lower Court, and we agree with it that there is no reason to doubt the authenticity of this will.

[4] The will was admittedly invalid in the sense that it could not defeat Janardan's right by survivorship to the entire estate, but it has been contended by the defendants that Janardan after attaining majority ratified this will and thereby validated it. We have no doubt that Janardan was aware of the existence of this will and that he tacitly acquiesced in it, either because he was ignorant of his rights or because he was willing to allow his natural brother Waman a share, which we are told was about a quarter, in a very considerable estate. On the death of Jairam the entire estate vested in Janardan, and nothing occurred during Janardan's minority to divest him of it. The question is whether he could subsequently divest himself of it by tacitly acquiescing in the will. The dispositions in an invalid will of this sort may be treated as valid, not by virtue of the will but by virtue of a subsequent family settlement, if there is such a settlement. Whether a subsequent tacit acquiescence in the will can be said to amount to an effective family settlement is a point which we do not propose to decide, as we consider that the plaintiff's suit must fail on the ground of adverse possession.

[5] The will directed that if Janardan were a minor at the time of Jairam's death, Waman should manage the whole of Janardan's property in accordance with the opinions and directions of Gangabai, who was of course the legal guardian of Janardan. Gangabai appointed Waman as one of her agents. Waman applied to the revenue authorities to have the estate mutated according to the dispositions of the will, and that was done. The proprietary share of Bodegaon and the malik-makbuza land in Dighori and Arher-Nawergaon were recorded in his name and he was appointed lambardar of Bodegaon. Janardan was appointed lambardar of mauza Minthur and presumably of any other villages in the estate, and Waman was appointed lambardar-gumashta. At the settlement of 1921, as we have said, Waman was recorded as the proprietor of Bodegaon and the malik-makbuza land in Dighori and Arher-Nawergaon, and he has ever since 1910 been in open and undisputed possession of this property. The plaintiff and Purshottam (P. W. 1), her agent and apparently her principal adviser, admittedy assumed until 1934 that this was Waman's property. The suit was not brought until December 1936.

[6] The plaintiff's contention that the suit is not barred by limitation rests almost entirely on the contention that there can be no adverse possession against a minor. That question was considered at length in 45 Mad. 361,[1] and the conclusion of the learned Judges was that it cannot be stated as a general proposition that there can be no adverse possession of property which belongs to a lunatic or minor during the continuance of the lunacy or minority of the owner, and that the question has in each case to be decided with reference to the anterior relationship between the person taking possession and the minor or lunatic and to whether any circumstances exist which would entitle the Court to hold that the person who entered into possession did so under circumstances which would in law make him only an agent or bailiff of the minor or lunatic. That decision has been followed or cited with approval in A. I. R. 1932 Bom. 23,[2] 57 Bom. 488,[3] A. I. R. 1945 Bom. 63[4] and A. I. R. 1928 Oudh 481.[5] Mr. Mangalmurti for the plaintiff-appellant referred us to certain remarks in A.I.R. 1940 Cal. 589[6] and 57 Bom. 488[3] where it was said that adverse possession would not run against the plaintiffs during their minority; but those statements must be read in relation to the facts of those cases, and we do not think that there was any intention to lay down any general proposition. In I. L. R. (1940) Kar. 534[7] Lobo J., after an analysis of the case-law deduced the proposition that minority is no bar to the acquisition of title by adverse possession if the person claiming such adverse possession does not bear to the person against whom he claims it any anterior relationship such as that of agent, bailee, trustee, etc. Subsequently, however, he went on to say that he could not see how title by adverse possession could originate during the minority of the owner as no knowledge of the assertion of a hostile title could be attributed to him. It is not necessary that ouster should be brought to the notice of the competitor, and it is sufficient if the possession is overt and without concealment so that the competitor, if he exercised due diligence, ought to be aware of the ouster; and in 48 Bom. 411,[8] Lord Phillimore remarked that to assume that you cannot impute knowledge to a minor is a view which is certainly not in accordance with the facts of human nature. We, therefore, respectfully agree with the view taken in 45 Mad. 361[1] that there may be adverse possession against a minor.

[7] After Jairam's death, Waman, Janardan and Gangabai all lived and messed together, and Waman managed all the family property. The accounts for the various villages were kept separately, but all the income was treated as common. The lower Court has held that Janardan after he left school in 1917 took part in the management of his estate and made entries in his diary showing that the will was apparently taken to Sayagata on 28-1-1921, that Rs. 150 was entered in the account of Waman on 4-2-1921 on account of the establishment of the Arber-Nawergaon fields, and that Waman was the owner of the fields in Dighori: see Exs. 1 D-35, 40, 41, 42, 43 and 44. The small items of 0-3-0 and 0-1-6 shown in the diary (Ex. 1-D-35), as expenditure incurred when the will was taken to Sayagata, appear also in the account books produced by the plaintiff, but a small portion has been eaten or cut out so that the purpose for which this money was spent is not shown there. The plaintiff contends that this portion was eaten by white ants. It is a curious coincidence that just this portion should be missing, and it does not look to us as if white ants were responsible for this. There is the evidence of Prabhakar (D. W. 8) and Vishwanath (D. W. 18), as well as that of Waman himself (D. W. 1), to show that these entries in the diary of Janardan were made by Janardan, and we see no reason to suspect otherwise. There is considerable evidence, as the lower Court has pointed out, to show that Janardan took part in the management of his property, and it was natural enough that he should show Waman as the owner of the Dighori land.

[8] Janardan as a lambardar would naturally have been summoned before the Settlement or Assistant Settlement Officer, and there is the evidence of a very respectable witness, Wamanrao (D. W. 2), a Tahsildar and landlord, that he and Janardan both appeared before the Assistant Settlement Officer of Brahmapuri in the beginning of 1921. Janardan must also have been well aware that he was not the lambardar of Bodegaon. It has been argued that possession can never be adverse if it can be referred to a lawful title, and that Waman was in a fiduciary position in regard to Janardan, as he was the agent of Janardan's guardian. In accordance with the terms of the will Waman looked after the property left to Janardan by that will, and in so far as that property was concerned it may be said that he stood in a fiduciary relationship to Janardan. Waman was the natural brother of Janardan, but Janardan had passed into another family, and Waman was not his guardian, and as regards the property left by the will to Waman, Waman was under no obligation to Janardan. Waman clearly entered into possession on his own account, and the possession cannot be referred to a lawful title. It is said that because the income from all the family property was thrown into the hotchpot Waman's possession is not adverse; the mere fact, however, that they happened to live together and treated the income as common property as a matter of convenience while they lived together would not show that Waman's possession was permissive and not adverse to Janardan. In 1922, after Janardan's death Waman left the house and had no further connexion with Gangabai and Maltibai and thereafter his possession was adverse beyond all dispute because he was recorded at the settlement of 1921 as the owner of the property in suit. Once it is held that there can be adverse possession against a minor, it follows that, whatever the position was before 1922, the possession was adverse from 1922 onwards and that any suit would be barred after 1934. Therefore, whether Art. 142 or Art. 144 applies, the position is the same and the suit must fail as barred by limitation.

Second Appeal No. 145 of 1943, Decided on 22-10-1946, from appellate decree of Addl. Dist. Judge, Amraoti, D/-16-11-1942.

(a) Limitation Act (1908), Art. 132 — Suit for contribution by person acquiring right of subrogation — Starting point of limitation.

Subogation being a mere substitution, does not create any fresh right but puts the claimant in the shoes of the creditors. Consequently, the acquired rights are capable of being enforced only within the statutory period within which they could be enforced by the original creditor. Hence, under Art. 132 time for a suit for contribution, by a person who has paid off the mortgage, begins to run from the date of the mortgage paid off and not from the date of payment: 29 A. I. One A mortgaged fields X and Y with M and then again mortgaged fields X, Y and Z with R. A subsequantly sold field Y to P. M brought a suit against A, R and P and obtained a decree for foreclosure. P then deposited the full decretal amount and a final decree for full satisfaction was passed. R brought a suit against A and P on his mortgage and got a decree and took possession of the fields. In this suit P not only entered appearance but claimed that he had no knowledge of the mortgage or its consideration and expressed willingness to pay the amount in proportion to his share. He did not however plead his right of subrogation. P subsequently brought a suit in order to enforce the encumbrance under M's mortgage-deed on the ground that he was, by his payment of the full amount of that deed, subrogated to the mortgagee's position and had a right to foreclose:

Where one of several mortgagors alone redeems the mortgaged property, he is not prima facie entitled under S. 95, T. P. P. K. Tare — for Appellant.

Y. S. Tambe — for Respondents.

Judgment. — Raoji (deceased) and his son Krishna (defendant 1) mortgaged fields, Survey Nos. 140/2 and 69/1 on 14th July 1923, with Raghunath Gulji Marwari, and, on 23rd May 1925, Krishna and his brother Motiram (defendant 2) mortgaged the same two fields and third field Survey No. 111/1 with Ramkisan (defendant 3). On 22nd December 1925, they sold field No. 69/1 to the plaintiff-appellant Radhakisan (now deceased). Raghunath Gulji Marwari thereafter instituted Civil Suit No. 37 of 1928 against the mortgagors, Ramkisan and Radhakisan and on 18th September 1928, obtained a decree for foreclosure. He assigned this decree to Narayan who was substituted as plaintiff in lieu of him in that suit. On 28th September 1929, Radhakisan deposited the full amount of the decree and a final decree for full satisfaction was drawn up.

[2] Ramkisan then instituted Civil Suit No. 29 of 1930 to enforce his mortgage against the mortgagors and Radhakisan and, having secured a preliminary and final decree, took possession of the fields on 5th March 1932. On 29th August 1941, Radhakisan filed the present suit in order to enforce the encumbrance under Raghunath Gulji Marwari's mortgage deed on the ground that he was by his payment of the full amount of that deed subrogated to the mortgagee's position and had a right to foreclose. Pandurang (respondent 4) was joined as a defendant as Ramkisan had sold field Survey No. 140/2 to him.

[3] The defendants Krishna and Motiram were proceeded against ex parte and the defendant Pandurang, who admitted his purchase of field Survey No. 140/2, claimed that the suit was time-barred in respect of him. The most active contestant was the defendant Ramkisan who admitted the two mortgages and the subsequent sale in the plaintiff's favour but denied that the plaintiff by making payment was substituted for the original mortgagee and asserted that he had no right to recover the amount paid or to foreclose the property. He also contended that he was estopped from pleading subrogation as he had not raised that plea in the mortgage suit filed by him (Ramkisan), that under the sale deed of 22nd December 1925, the right of subrogation was expressly excluded and that the plaintiff had paid the consideration as the mortgagors' agent and acquired the property for less than its value with the burden of the prior mortgages. Ramkisan also claimed that the suit was liable to be dismissed because the plaintiff had not brought a proper suit for contribution and because it was barred by limitation.

[4] The trial Court in dismissing the suit found as follows :

(i) The plaintiff was subrogated in place of the decree-holder in Civil Suit No. 37 of 1928.

(ii) The present suit was not maintainable without a suit for contribution.

(iii) The plaintiff was estopped from claiming the amount in question as he had not claimed it in Civil Suit No. 29 of 1930.

(iv) The present suit was not tenable without redemption of the decree in Civil Suit No. 29 of 1930.

(v) The suit was barred by limitation against the defendant Pandurang.

(vi) The plaintiff was not entitled to the amount including interest claimed by him.

[5] In appeal the Additional District Judge, Amraoti, held that the plaintiff should have set up his claim for being redeemed in respect of the mortgagee's rights in Civil Suit No. 37 of 1928 and was now estopped from doing so by record and by the principle of res judicata as against Ramkisan. It was also decided that the present suit for foreclosure was not tenable without a suit for contribution and that the plaintiff was not entitled to any relief from the defendant Pandurang. The appeal was accordingly dismissed.

[6] In second appeal the plaintiff-appellant's learned counsel frankly conceded that the plaintiff's claim against Pandurang was rightly held to be time-barred.

[7] In Civil Suit No. 29 of 1930 instituted by Ramkisan to enforce his mortgage against the mortgagors and Radhakisan, the latter not only entered an appearance but, as his written statement Ex. 3-D-6 shows, claimed that he had no information of any kind regarding the mortgage deed in the suit or its consideration, admitted that he had purchased field Survey No. 69/1 from Raoji and expressed his willingness to pay the amount that "would be calculated in proportion to his share in case the sale deed in the dispute would be proved". He had not then pleaded subrogation although that is the stand now taken by him in the present suit. In the circumstances, he is entitled only to enforce the mortgage dated 14-7-1923.

[8] In I. L. R. (1942) Nag. 393[1] there is the following passage at page 397 :

> " Subrogation, being a mere substitution, does not create any fresh rights but puts the claimant in the shoes of the creditors. It would therefore be evident that the rights which a person acquires by subrogation and is entitled to enforce are the very rights which the original creditor was entitled to do. Consequently, the acquired rights are capable of being enforced only within the statutory period within which they could be enforced by the original creditor.. It is on this principle that it was held in 13 N. L. R. 217 [2] that under Art. 132, Limitation Act, 1908, time began to run from the date of the prior mortgage and not from the date of payment."

It follows that although a suit for contribution would have been within time by reason of the fact the present suit was filed within 12 years from 28-9-1929, the date on which the plaintiff deposited the decretal amount in C. S. No. 37 of 1928, the present suit was time-barred as it had been filed on a date subsequent to the expiry of a period of 12 years from 14-7-1923, the date of the mortgage in suit.

[9] I am also of the view that the claim was barred by res judicata in virtue of Expln. IV to S. 11, Civil P. C. In A.I.R. 1945 Mad. 151[3] reliance was placed on the case in 39 Cal. 527,[4] in which a subsequent mortgagee had a right by subrogation to priority to another mortgage, but when he was impleaded in the suit filed by the prior mortgagee, he failed to prefer his right by subrogation to the priority. The Division Bench of the Madras High Court which had, as stated, relied on that decision, also was of the view that if a subsequent mortgagee has priority by reason of a right to subrogation, he was obliged to put forward that right. Their Lordships of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council had also held in 24 ALL. 429 [5] that where, to a suit by a mortgagee on a mortgage bond of certain property, a prior mortgagee of the same property is made a party and omits to set up his prior charge and claims to have it redeemed, a suit subsequently brought by him for that purpose is barred by Expln. II to S. 13, Civil P. C. (present Expln. IV to S. 11).

[10] In 2 Pat. 435 [6] it was held that where a person who is impleaded in a suit on a mortgage on the allegation that he is a puisne mortgagee files a written statement alleging that he is a prior mortgagee, but does not otherwise contest the suit, and the judgment in that suit proceeds on the assumption that he is a puisne mortgagee, he is not entitled subsequently to allege in a suit on his own bond that he is a prior mortgagee. So also in 9 Pat. 816[7] at p. 828 the view taken was that when the party impleaded is a puisne mortgagee and, therefore, a necessary party, but claims priority, he must assert and prove his priority, otherwise he is barred. In 8 Luck. 103[8] it was decided that where it is the duty of a person to set up a prior charge in defence to a claim for the recovery of a certain sum of money by sale of a certain property, but no priority is set up, a subsequent suit for a declaration that he has a prior charge is barred by Expln. IV to S. 11, Civil P. C.

[11] The appellant's learned counsel relied on the Full Bench case in 15 N. L. R. 114[9] in which there was the following decision:

"Where a decree for foreclosure is passed ex parte against a person joined as defendant on the sole ground that he is in possession of the mortgaged property, but no express adjudication upon the question of title is given, though the final decree orders delivery of possession and possession is accordingly delivered, the aforesaid defendant is not barred by the rule of res judicata from setting up a paramount title in the subsequent suit."

In that case, however, the decree for foreclosure was passed ex parte against a person joined as defendant on the sole ground that he was in possession of the mortgaged property, whereas Radhakisan had not only entered an appearance in the present suit but had strenuously contested in the manner adumbrated above.

[12] I am also of the view that the plaintiff was rightly held by the two Courts below not to be entitled to interest. The suit was by way of subrogation and in 49 Bom. 591 [10] a Division Bench held that where one of several mortgagors alone redeems the mortgaged property, he is not prima facie entitled under S. 95, T. P. Act, to claim interest against his co-mortgagors on the amount of their proportion of the expenses so incurred; and his claim, if any, to interest must be based on some ground outside the section, as for instance, on notice given to his co-mortgagors that he would claim interest against them on the expenses so incurred if they wished to redeem their shares. In the case before me such notice was not given and there was great delay in filing the suit. In other words, there were no equities in the plaintiff's favour and he was not entitled to interest by way of damages or otherwise. In the result the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

POLLOCK, HEMEON AND PADHYE JJ.

Narayan Sonaji Sagne — Applicant v. Sheshrao Vithoba and others — Non-Applicants.

Civil Revn. No. 275 of 1947, Decided on 30-10-1947.

(a) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 115 — Order amending or refusing to amend plaint or other pleading is open to revision.

(Per Full Bench) : 33 A. I. R. 1946 Nag. 5 was rightly decided in so far as it holds that an order amending or refusing to amend a plaint or other pleading is open to revision. [Para 95]

Annotation :— (44-Com.) Civil P. C., S. 115, N. 5.

(b) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 115 — Revision can be entertained touching proper interpretation by lower Court of remand order, question of amendment of pleading and question relating to framing of issue.

(Per Full Bench) High Court has jurisdiction to entertain revisions touching (i) the proper interpretation by a lower Court of a remand order, (ii) a question of amendment of a pleading and (iii) a question relating to the framing of an issue. [Para 95]

As to whether the High Court as a matter of discretion ought to entertain revision applications on such questions, no hard and fast rule can be laid down. Each case should depend on its own facts and circumstances and the discretion should be exercised judicially and according to correct and well established principles. [Para 95]

Annotation : — ('44 Com.) Civil P. C., S. 115, N. 5.

(c) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 115—Revisional jurisdiction in civil cases is derived from Civil P. C.

(Per Padhye J.) The revisional jurisdiction of the High Court in civil cases is derived from the Civil Porcedure Code (S. 115) and not from Letters Patent. [Para 67]

Annotation :—('44 Com.) Civil P. C., S. 115, N. 1.

(d) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 115 — Order not by itself appealable to High Court—Revision lies even if appeal would lie from decree which may be ultimately passed in suit.

The jurisdiction to entertain a revision does not depend on the order sought to be revised being interlocutory or final. Nor does it depend upon the particular matter disposed of by that order. The High Court has jurisdiction to entertain revision against orders deciding a particular matter provided the three conditions mentioned in the first part of S. 115 are satisfied. According to one of those conditions the order sought to be revised must not by itself be appealable to the High Court. It is immaterial that an appeal would lie to the High Court from the decree which may ultimately be passed in the suit : 29 A. I. R. 1942 Mad. 247, Rel. on. [Para 77]

Annotation : — ('44-Com.) Civil P. C., S. 115, N. 7.

(e) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 115 — Issue of jurisdiction is always open for revision.

Though the subordinate Court decides that a certain matter lies within its jurisdiction that order is not a nullity but where such an order results in the usurpation of jurisdiction which that Court does not possess, to that extent that order is open to revision. In other words, where the issue is an issue of jurisdiction it is always open for revision. [Para 81]

Annotation :—('44-Com.) Civil P. C., S. 115, N. 10, 11 & 12.

(f) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 115—Revisional jurisdiction should not be so liberally exercised as to convert revision into appeal.

The revisional jurisdiction of the High Court under S. 115 should not be so liberally exercised as to convert a revision into an appeal and further every order of the subordinate Court should not be interfered with only because it was wrong either in law or on facts. [Para 94]

Annotation : — ('44-Com.) Civil P. C., S. 115, N. 3.

(g) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 115 (c)—There must be error of procedure and not merely of law.

There must be an error of procedure and not merely of law to justify interference under cl. (c), It must be something independent of the decision itself ; an irregularity or illegality in the manner of arriving at it, not in the conclusion reached. [Para 99]

ORDER OF REFERENCE.

Bose J. — The question here is whether the High Court has jurisdiction to entertain a revision under S. 115, Civil P. C., against an order of trial Court dealing with an amendment of a pleading and the framing of certain issues consequent on the amendment.

[2] This is the sort of question which arises frequently and as Judges of this Court hold such widely divergent views on the subject, I feel the matter should be settled, at any rate in principle, by a Full Bench, particularly as it is one of great practical importance and seriously affects the conduct of trials, in the first Court, as also the length and costs of litigations.

[3] The immediate cause of the reference is a recent decision of Sen J. in I. L. R. (1945) Nag. 634[1] at p. 640 with which with the utmost respect, I disagree, particularly as I have taken the contrary view in a series of cases. This conflict requires to be resolved.

[4] The facts are as follows. The suit as originally framed was for possession, the plaintiff basing his title on a document which purported to be a sale-deed. The defence to the action was that it was not a sale but a mortgage, and that accordingly the suit did not lie.

[5] This issue was fought through three Courts and eventually a Division Bench of this Court held in a Letters Patent appeal (revising a decision of mine) that the document was a mortgage and not a sale. As a corollary to this the Division Bench permitted the plaintiff to amend his plaint and sue for foreclosure on the basis of the same document now held to be a mortgage. In a foot-note to its judgment the Division Bench said,

"Liberty to defendants to amend Written Statement if desired to contest new matter introduced but not otherwise."

[6] The defendants availed themselves of this permission and were permitted to amend by the first Court, that is, the Court to which the case had been remanded for a fresh trial on the basis of the amended plaint. Having permitted the amendment, the first Court struck certain issues —numbers 3 to 7 inclusive—on the basis of the amended written statement. These issues raise questions which had been raised, but not tried before the remand and which were repeated in the amended written statement. Plaintiff 1 objected, but the lower Court overruled his objections in the order now under revision, and the question now is whether the High Court has jurisdiction to entertain this revision.

[7] I have long refused to entertain revisions of this interlocutory nature and very strongly hold the view, first, that the High Court has no jurisdiction in cases of this kind, and secondly that if it has, then, revision being a matter of discretion, it ought not to interfere.

[8] Touching first the question of jurisdiction I will repeat what I have endeavoured to expound at length in a number of cases including the Full Bench case in I.L.R. (1943) Nag. 176[2] and a Full Bench in a criminal case reported in Crown v. Dattatraya Sadashiv Kharve[3] where the view I took regarding the extent of a jury's jurisdiction has now been taken by the Privy Council in A. I. R. 1946 P. C. 151[3] at pp. 153, 154; also when sitting as a single Judge in I.L.R. (1936) Nag. 73,[5] and again in I. L. R. (1941) Nag. 543[6] at pp. 548, 550.

[9] To begin with I think it is elementary that no appeal can be claimed as of right on grounds of justice or as inherent in the very nature of things. Unless a right of appeal is expressly conferred by statute there can be no remedy by way of appeal against an order of a Court made with jurisdiction however erroneous the order may seem to be. The Privy Council has so decided in 40 Mad. 793[7] at p. 801, 11 Mad. 26,[8] 40 Cal 21,[9] 9 Lah. 284[10] and in (1905) 74 L.J. P. C. 77[11] and so has this Court on many occasions, as for example, in I.L.R. (1941) Nag. 588[12] at p. 592. If this basic principle is accepted then it must follow that there is some fundamental distinction between a revision and an appeal. It is idle for the Privy Council to lay down this principle again and again if Courts are going to entertain an appeal in the guise of a revision whenever an appeal is not allowed by law. And that is what must happen, and in fact does happen, when a clear cut distinction is not drawn between an appeal and a revision, and not merely drawn in theory but rigidly adhered to in practice.

[10] Now, it is indubitable that the High Court has been vested with jurisdiction to entertain revisions in certain cases, but it is not an unlimited jurisdiction any more than its jurisdiction in second appeal is unlimited. As long ago as 1855, their Lordships of the Privy Council observed in 6 M. I. A. 134[13] at p. 155, that :

"Wherever jurisdiction is given to a Court by an Act of Parliament, or by a Regulation in India (which has the same effect as an Act of Parliament), and such jurisdiction is only given upon certain specified terms contained in the Regulation itself, it is a universal principle that these terms must be complied with, in order to create and raise the jurisdiction, for if they be not complied with the jurisdiction does not arise."

[11] I fully agree that the existence of jurisdiction usually involves the decision of some question of fact collateral to the main issue, and when that is the case

"The general rule is that where the jurisdiction of any tribunal depends upon facts, it has power to determine those facts. (Halsbury's Laws of England, Hailsham Edn., Vol. 26, page 279)."

Therefore, when the High Court decides that a certain matter lies within its revisional jurisdiction its order is not a nullity however wrong it may be. (See 2 Cal. 131[14] at p. 141). But that, in my opinion, is no justification for usurping a jurisdiction which this Court does not possess if that is in fact the case, and to that extent the observations of the Privy Council which I have just cited stand.

[12] It will perhaps be advisable to explain this at greater length, for, on the face of it, the matter seems anomalous. The truth is that term jurisdiction is used in two senses, one absolute and the other limited. In its absolute sense there is a complete lack of jurisdiction. Thus if the station master of some railway station purports to write a judgment and pass a decree there is complete absence of jurisdiction, and his so-called order is a complete nullity. The same applies if a Civil Court attempts to encroach upon a province exclusively reserved by the legislature for a revenue tribunal and vice versa.

[13] But in its second sense, though the matter touches jurisdiction, the order of a properly constituted Court vested with authority to decide the facts on which its jurisdiction rests is not necessarily a nullity. I will give two illustrations.

[14] It is well known that the jurisdiction of the lower Courts is limited as to value. If a lower Court is invested with jurisdiction to entertain claims up to Rs. 5,000 it cannot proceed to decide cases in which the value of the subject-matter is say Rs. 7,000/- or even Rs. 5001/-. But it is obvious that some authority must be vested with jurisdiction to determine what the correct value of the claim is. That tribunal is the Court in which the suit is launched. If it holds that the value of the subject matter is below Rs. 5000/- then prima facie it is invested with jurisdiction to try the case, and if its order is not challenged or reversed either in appeal or by revision no objection on that score can be taken at a later stage. The decree cannot, for instance, be challenged in execution or in a subsequent suit. But as the question of valuation touches jurisdiction as it is one of the basic elements which go to build up the fabric of jurisdiction, the matter is revisable, because, however much the Court has authority in the first instance to decide whether it has jurisdiction nevertheless the fact which it is determining is not an issue on the merits but an issue of jurisdiction, and such an issue is always revisable. It is something which touches the Court itself.

[15] The second illustration is taken from the Privy Council decision reported in 25 Bom. 332.[15] One of the ingredients as to jurisdiction is as regards the person. A Court has no jurisdiction (except in certain cases which do not arise here, as for example, in matters which operate in rem) to decide matters for or against persons who are not before it, that is to say, against persons who have not been joined to the action and who have not been noticed. Thus, if X wants a decree against A he cannot get it by joining B to the action and omitting A. But if a question arises regarding the identity of A and B appears before the Court and contends that he is B and not A, and the Court holds that he is A in spite of the fact that he is B then B is bound by the decree even if it is passed in A's name however grievous the Court's error may be, unless B has the matter set right by an appropriate tribunal.

[16] Here again, the matter would be revisable. The Court is invested with jurisdiction to determine, in the first place, whether it has jurisdiction, that is to say, whether the person who appears before it is B or A. But the question it is determining is not one on the merits but whether it has jurisdiction. It is someting which touches itself, and if it decides that B is A and not B (that was what happened in the Privy Council case) and if B does not have the error set right by the proper tribunal (which is also what happened in the Privy Council case) then B is bound by the decision and cannot challenge it either in execution or in a subsequent suit. That was what the Privy Council decided.

[17] But that sort of situation can only arise in matters touching jurisdiction. It does not arise when the matter touches not jurisdiction, that is to say the right to entertain a claim at all, but the merits, that is to say, a decision by a competent Court, by which I mean a Court competent to entertain that sort of claim and to decide that sort of issue. Exactly what those matters include and embrace may sometimes give rise to difficulty, but in general there is no doubt. However, I will deal with this later.

[18] This explains what is sometimes puzzling on the surface and explains what their Lordships of the Privy Council mean by saying that the Court has no jurisdiction to entertain second appeals on facts or revisions on the merits but nevertheless uphold their decrees and orders in subsequent proceedings despite that fact. It also explains the passage from Halsbury which I have just quoted.

[19] The High Court is not invested with revisional jurisdiction in civil cases by the Letters Patent. Therefore, its sole authority to act in such cases is derived from the Civil Procedure Code.

[20] Now, the Code is clear regarding appeals. It provides for appeals from original decrees under S. 96 and for appeals from appellate decrees in S. 100. It also provides for appeals from certain orders under S. 104. Then Ss. 101, 102 and 104 say that there shall be no other appeals apart from those expressly provided. I take it that that is intended to have some meaning.

[21] Then as regards revisions, S. 115 expressly limits them to the three cases mentioned therein. All three relate to jurisdiction. It will, therefore, be necessary to examine the meaning of jurisdiction.

[22] It is defined in Halsbury's Laws of England (Hailsham Edn.) vol. 8. p. 531), to mean :

"By jurisdiction is meant the authority which a Court has to decide matters that are litigated before it or to take cognisance of matters presented in a formal way for its decision. The limits of this authority are imposed by the statute, charter or commission under which the Court is constituted."

[23] One of the tests given by Halsbury in an earlier passage regarding the superior Courts is, "An objection to the jurisdiction of one of the superior Courts of general jurisdiction must show what other Court has jurisdiction, so as to make it clear that the exercise by the superior Court of its general jurisdiction is unnecessary."

That does not apply in its entirety to a lower Court, but the test is nevertheless of value. If the lower Court had no jurisdiction to decide the matter in hand then what other Court had?

[24] Now, we are concerned here with the amendment of a pleading and the framing of an issue. We are also concerned with the interpretation of a remand order by this Court. Let us consider the last of these first. When this Court makes a remand order and issues directions to a lower Court, which is the proper Court to read that order and interpret it? Surely, the only Court which can do that is the Court to which the matter is remanded. It may err in its interpretation but that is something quite different from its jurisdiction to entertain the remand and read and construe the order. The only Court which can do that is the Court to which the remand is made. If therefore the Court entertains the matter after remand, considers and construes the order of remand and reaches a judicial conclusion therein then, whether the conclusion is right or wrong, no question of jurisdiction is involved. It had jurisdiction and it exercised it.

[25] Next consider the question of amendment. Has a trial Court, whether before or after remand, jurisdiction to allow or to disallow an amendment of a pleading? The answer is obvious. Order 6, R. 17, Civil P. C., specifically provides for amendment and states that "The Court may at any stage of the proceedings etc. . . ."

[26] Now, which Court is referred to? Surely, not the High Court. It is patent on the face of it that the application for amendment must be made to the Court which is at the moment of the application seised of the proceedings. It is equally patent that an application for amendment cannot be allowed automatically any more than it can be disallowed without consideration. There are rules which govern these matters and so some authority has to decide whether the application in question falls within the purview of those rules or not, and the only possible authority is the Court to which the application has to be made. In that event it is patent that that is the Court which is vested with jurisdiction to determine this matter, and if that Court entertains the application and considers it in accordance with the prescribed forms of law, that is to say, after hearing the parties and so forth, and reaches a conclusion judicially, that is to say, after formally setting out reasons in writing, I find it impossible to say either that that Court has not exercised a jurisdiction vested in it by law or that it has refused to exercise such a jurisdiction. What else is it doing when it decides the matter and either allows or disallows the amendment? What other Court has the authority and the power to entertain the application and decide it?

[27] The same reasoning applies to the framing of issues. O. 14, R. 1 of the Code deals with the matter and lays down a set of rules. It is clearly for the Court which is seised of the proceeding to decide whether a particular issue arises or not and to decide the form in which it should be couched. As I say apply the test given in Halsbury. If that is not the Court to do this then what other is there? If the Code provides for a certain matter it is obvious that some Court must have the jurisdiction to deal with it, and if it is not the Court trying the case then what other Court is there?

[28] It is perfectly true that after the case has been finally decided the appellate Court becomes seised of the matter if an appeal is preferred, and then it can, under S. 107, exercise all the powers of the first Court. But if the Code expressly prohibits an appeal till the appropriate stage surely it equally prohibits the exercise of those interlocutory powers except in the narrow circumstances prescribed by S. 115. In any case it is obvious, to my mind, that the Court vested with jurisdiction to frame issues is the Court which is at the moment seised of the proceedings. Therefore, when it either frames an issue or refuses to frame one I find it impossible to say that it is not exercising jurisdiction, and even more impossible to hold that it is failing to exercise jurisdiction.

[29] The distinction between an error of fact or law committed in the exercise of jurisdiction and an inherent lack of jurisdiction is brought out by the Privy Council in 2 Cal. 131[14] at p. 141.

"In the first case "(that is, when a Court of appeal is correcting an error of law made by a lower Court)" the Appellate Court reverses the order, because the Judge has erred in the mode in which he has exercised a judicial discretion; in the latter case "(that is, when the order is made without jurisdiction)", it quashes the order, because there was no discretion at all to be exercised."

[30] This analysis reveals, to my mind, that cases like the present can in no event fall within clauses (a) and (b) of S. 115. I turn now to clause (c):

"To have acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity".

[31] I am clear that the words "illegally" and "material irregularity" do not cover either errors of fact or of law. They do not refer to the decision arrived at but to the manner in which it is reached. The errors contemplated relate to material defects of procedure and not to errors of either law or fact after the formalities which the law prescribes have been duly complied with both in letter and in spirit. As I have said in I. L. R. (1936) Nag. 73[5] at p. 77.

"It must be something independent of the decision itself; an irregularity or illegality in the manner of arriving at it, not in the conclusion reached."

[32] I do not wish to be precise regarding this in fact that is impossible as well as undesirable. But, generally speaking, certain matters are now regarded as essential for a fair and proper trial. For example, both sides must be given an opportunity of appearing and of being heard. If they appear they must be heard. They must be given a chance of presenting their cases. The Judge must reach his conclusion judicially and not arbitrarily, and so forth. Therefore, if a Judge refuses to hear the parties or one of them, or if he flips a coin instead of applying his mind to the case and giving a judicial decision, or if he acts arbitrarily such as deciding on the colour of a man's eyes or that of his hair, or if he gives no reasons in cases where the law requires reasons to be recorded, then he is not complying with the procedure which the law prescribes for a fair and proper trial. In that event interference is called for under clause (c). But if he does all that and acts fairly and judicially the matter cannot, in my judgment, fall within clause (c).

[33] I am in good company in so thinking. Sir Lawrence Jenkins C. J. so held in 41 Cal. 323[16] and so did Woodroffe J. Sir Lawrence Jenkins said at page 338.

"It appears to me that S. 115 can only be called in aid when the failure of justice (if any) has been due to one or other of the faults of procedure indicated in that section. If there was an error committed by Mr. Dobbin, it was an error of law and not of procedure."

And at page 337 the learned Chief Justice placed in a nutshell the exact position which applies in all these cases. He said:

"But how can it be fairly said that the Court failed to exercise a jurisdiction vested in it by law? It dealt with the matter; it was prepared to exercise its jurisdiction, but the learned Judge considered as a matter of law that there was no relationship of landlord and tenant. The Court was entitled to come to that conclusion even if it was erroneous, and if it did come to that conclusion it cannot be said that the Court has failed to exercise a jurisdiction vested in it by law."

So also Woodroffe J. said at page 339,

"Then as regards the alleged irregularity, this according to the general trend of the cases applies to the commission of an error of procedure."

I followed this in. I L. R. (1936) Nag. 73[5] at p. 77 and again in principle in I. L. R. (1943) Nag. 176,[2] and in the latter case the Full Bench agreed with me; also in I. L. R. (1938) Nag. 106[17] at p. 112 that was actually the decision of another Full Bench regarding the construction of S. 115 (c). and still later of a Division Bench in I. L. R. (1941) Nag. 543[6] at pp. 556, 557. I cannot see how any other conclusion is possible in view of a series of Privy Council decisions quite apart from the intrinsic logic of the position.

[34] In 40 Mad. 793[7] at p. 799 the Privy Council in dealing with S. 115 said:

"It will be observed that the section applies to jurisdiction alone, the irregular exercise, or non-exercise of it, or the illegal assumption of it. One section is not directed against conclusion of law or fact in which the question of jurisdiction is not involved".

[35] Those words appear to me to be emphatic and to be free from any sort of ambiguity. But even if there is difficulty it is resolved by the illustrations given by their Lordships. One is (p. 799):

"If the civil Court should absolutely and whimsically decline to exercise its jurisdiction and to make any orders etc . . . .".

Another at p. 800:

"Any order made . . . . . in disregard of the requirements of natural justice, such, for instance, as proceeding without giving the member sought to be removed notice, or affording him an opportunity of defending himself".

[36] Other attributes of jurisdiction will be found set out in Halsbury's Laws of England (Hailsham Edn) Vol. 8, pp. 531 to 537. They are as to area (territorial), as to value (pecuniary), as to subject-matter, and as to person. The question was elaborately discussed by Mookerji Ag. C. J. in a Calcutta Full Bench, 48 Cal. 138[18] at pp. 148, 150, and that decision was followed by me in I. L. R. (1936) Nag. 73[5] at p. 76.

[37] This was the view of the Privy Council as early as 1884 under the old Code of Civil Procedure. Their Lordships said, construing S. 622 which corresponded to S. 115:

"The question then is, did the Judges of the lower Courts in this case, in the exercise of their jurisdiction act illegally or with material irregularity. It appears that they had perfect jurisdiction to decide the question which was before them, and they did decide it. Whether they decided it rightly or wrongly, they had jurisdiction to decide the case and even if they decided wrongly, they did not exercise their jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity".

[38] The questions which the lower Courts had to decide in that case were of res judicata and of what is now O. 2, R. 2 under the present Code of Civil Procedure. The lower Courts there held that the suit was not barred for either reason and proceeded with the trial. The Court of the Judicial Commissioner entertained a revision and set aside the orders of the lower Courts on the ground they were wrong. The Privy Council held :

"The Judicial Commissioner had no jurisdiction in the case".

And this not because the lower Courts were right but because whether they were right or wrong they had jurisdiction and accordingly the Judicial Commissioner had no jurisdiction to sit in judgment over them in revision.

[39] I fail to see how anything can be stronger and more emphatic than this. I equally fail to see how an issue of res judicata or of O. 2, R. 2, is less fundamental or goes less to the root of a case than a question of amendment or the framing of an issue. After all the issues were framed by the lower Courts in that case and the Privy Council held that whether they were rightly framed or wrongly, whether the decision was right or wrong, the Judicial Commissioner had no jurisdiction to interfere in revision.

[40] This decision was followed by the Privy Council 5 years later. The head-note in 16 Cal. 749[19] runs:

"A decision by judgment of a competent Court whether right or wrong which by law is final and without appeal, were the Court has not acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally, or with material irregularity, cannot be set aside under S. 622, Civil P. C.".

[41] This was reiterated for a third time in 37 ALL. 485[20] at pp. 494, 495:

"Their Lordships think it is very trite and very familiar that a challenge of the method of the exercise of the jurisdiction of a Court can never in law justify a denial of the existence of such jurisdiction. The former has reference to the merits of the case".

[42] Now, it is pertinent to observe that with these three decisions before it the legislature did not see fit to alter S. 622 in any material respect when it enacted S. 115. I take it that that was done with deliberate intent and I think it is elementary that Courts in India are expected faithfully to carry out the intention of the Legislature and to obey the decisions of the Privy Council also to follow their own Full Bench rulings. This is particularly so when their Lordships have continued to construe the section as before in clear and emphatic terms. I have already referred to their decision in 40 Mad. 793[7] at p. 799. I have also referred to the Nagpur Full Bench in I. L. R. (1938) Nag. 106[17] at p. 112.

[43] In 25 Bom. 337[21] at p. 347 the Privy Council again stressed the distinction between an error of law and an order made without jurisdiction. Their Lordships said :

"In doing so the Court was exercising its jurisdiction. It made a sad mistake, it is true; but a Court has jurisdiction to decide wrong as well as right. If it decides wrong, the wronged party can only take the course prescribed by law for setting matters right; and if that course is not taken "[and I would add, if that course is not open under the law]," the decision, however wrong, cannot be disturbed."

[44] I might mention here that in cases where the High Court has wrongly interfered in second appeal on questions of fact the Judicial Committee have made the matter one of jurisdiction : See, for example, 18 Cal. 23[22] at p. 30 :

"It is enough in the present case to say .... that there is no jurisdiction to entertain a second appeal on the ground of an erroneous finding of fact, however gross or inexcusable the error may seem to be."

[45] That, to me, seems obvious. If the law is that no appeal shall lie except where a statute expressly provides for one and if a statute permits an appeal only under circumscribed conditions it seems obvious that if a Court entertains an appeal in circumstances which the law does not warrant it travels beyond its jurisdiction; and what applies to appeals appears to me to apply with even greater force to revisions. However, as revisions are so often entertained on discretionary grounds on matters touching the merits and having nothing to do with jurisdiction I will deal with that aspect also in case my views on the other matter do not meet with the approval of the Full Bench but before doing so I wish to repeat what I said as a member of the Full Bench in I. L. R. (1943) Nag. 176[2] at p. 197. As I said there :

"I am not enamoured of the view that the High Court has the right to interfere on questions of law but that it need not do so unless it thinks fit and that it will not think fit unless there has been 'substantial injustice' and the like."

I will not repeat here the reasons I gave there. All I will say is that :

"If the matter falls squarely within the ambit of its powers it cannot shirk a decision and it must act and decide according to the principles and laws which are administered in Courts of justice. It cannot pick and choose."

[46] Now, the usual ground given for interference at an interlocutory stage is that it cuts short litigation and saves the time of the Courts and the money of the parties. But is that really so? And in any event is it a valid consideration? I do not think so.

[47] In one sense, of course, a decision by the High Court saves time and money except the time and money of the State. But if that is a valid consideration every preliminary issue of law ought to be sent up to the High Court immediately. It will save time, the time of the first Court spent in hearing the arguments and in writing an order. Why bother about the decision of the first Court? And so also preliminary issues of fact. Let the first Court record the evidence and send the records to the High Court direct. Also, if it is legitimate for the High Court to cut short litigation by entertaining preliminary issues regarding limitation and res judicata and on questions of amendment in cases where an appeal from the decree would go to a lower appellate Court (as it would in the normal course in this case) then why is it not legitimate to skip a lower Court of appeal, come straight up to the High Court in revision and be done with it? Regarded from that angle the matter is obvious, but if so, where is the logic or the consistency in advancing the particular reason as a ground for interference in revision? The usual rule undoubtedly is that questions of limitation and res judicata and the like should be decided by the lower appellate Court in cases open to second appeal. A remedy by appeal is provided and so no revision lies; and that, with all due respect, is what S. 115 says. Apart from the limitations regarding jurisdiction the section lays down a second limitation, namely, 'and in which no appeal lies.'

[48] Now, of course, it is perfectly obvious that no appeal lies from an interlocutory decision of the nature we have here but an appeal does lie regarding the subject-matter of the decision and express provision for this is made in S. 105 of the Code. It states in substance that no appeal shall lie from interlocutory orders of the nature we are considering here but

"where a decree is appealed from any error, defect or irregularity in any order affecting the decision of the case, may be set forth as a ground of objection in the memorandum of appeal."

Therefore, an appeal is directly provided, and as such questions do not touch jurisdiction S. 115 expressly bars their entertainment in revision. I do not see how Courts can ignore such express provisions on grounds of convenience.

[49] Next, consider the absurdly illogical conclusions which flow from such a practice. Consider first a question of limitation or res judicata. If a Court proceeds to decide either or both of these questions as a preliminary issue and reaches the conclusion that the suit is not barred, according to the view under consideration, a revision lies to the High Court. But if the Court reaches the other conclusion and dismisses the suit then an appeal lies to the lower appellate Court, and the matter cannot reach the High Court except by way of second appeal. In other words, if one side fails it has direct access to the High Court whereas if its opponent fails on the same issue he has to go to a lower Court. The same sort of situation can arise on a question of amendment.

[50] Then consider another anomaly. Revisions are heard by single Judges whereas second appeals above a certain value are entertained by a bench of two Judges. In this very case I am asked to decide questions, sitting singly, which, in the normal course, would have been decided by a Division Bench. The anomaly is even greater in suits above the value of Rs. 10,000. The same point in the same litigation is decided by one Judge if one side loses and by two if the other side loses. Surely, any practice which leads to such absurdities is not only undesirable but must be radically wrong.

[51] Next consider the sheet anchor on which this practice is usually defended, namely the shortening of litigation and the saving of costs and doing 'justice.'

[52] Now statistics show that a large percentage of cases which reach this Court are in the end dismissed. I do not know the exact figure but I am told it is in the neighbourhood of 75 to 80 per cent. The exact figure does not matter but the percentage is large. I refer here to cases which are dismissed after being set down for hearing parties. I do not include in this those which are dismissed summarily. Therefore, what does this argument amount to in the end? In the majority of such cases the litigation is not shortened, on the contrary it is unduly prolonged and everybody's time and money are wasted. The result is that cases are admitted on this basis not in the hope of shortening litigation as a whole but in the sure knowledge that 75 per cent of litigants in this class of cases must be penalised in the hope that 25 per cent will benefit, and that their litigation must be lengthened and not shortened. That hardly seems fair or just.

[53] I am strongly of opinion that justice delayed is justice denied and hold the view that anything which can reasonably be done to shorten litigation as a whole should be done. I am clear that it was never the intention of the legislature that cases should be tried piecemeal—bits by this Court, bits by another and the rest by a third. The whole scheme is to vest certain Courts with jurisdiction to try certain classes of cases and to leave them to try it, and leave them to decide the matter right or wrong. After the matter is finally concluded by a decree then and only then, save in special cases expressly provided for, can a higher Court entertain the question, and not even then if no appeal is allowed.

[54] The High Court is given judicial superintendence over Courts subordinate to it but only for determining whether they are in fact vested with jurisdiction to try the issue in question and if so, to see whether the trial is proceeding in accordance with the usual and recognised forms of procedure. The revisional jurisdiction of the High Court does not, in my opinion, extend beyond that.

[55] If it is legitimate to interfere on a question of amendment then why is it not proper to interfere when a Judge allows or disallows a question during the examination of a witness, or when he rejects a document? Once the principle which I am contesting is conceded it will be almost impossible to draw the line and the High Court will be flooded with applications as is being attempted now, and, if logic is to have any place, the High Court will be bound virtually to try the bulk of the cases in the Province.

[56] I refer the following questions for decision by a Full Bench:

(1) Was I. L. R. (1945) Nag. 634[1] rightly decided in so far as it holds that an order amending or refusing to amend a plaint or other pleading is open tc revision?

(2) Has the High Court jurisdiction to entertain revisions touching

(i) the proper interpretation by a lower Court of a remand order,

(ii) a question of amendment of a pleading and

(iii) a question relating to the framing of an issue; and

(3) If there is jurisdiction ought the High Court, as a matter of discretion, to entertain such applications on such questions?

OPINION

[57] Padhye J.—The following questions have been referred to us for decision:

(1) Was I. L. R. (1945) Nag. 634[1] rightly decided in so far as it holds that an order amending or refusing to amend a plaint or other pleading is open to revision?

(2) Has the High Court jurisdiction to entertain revisions touching

(i) the proper interpretation by a lower Court of a remand order,

(ii) a question of amendment of a pleading, and

(iii) a question relating to the framing of an issue; and

(3) If there is jurisdiction ought the High Court, as a matter of discretion, to entertain such applications on such questions?

[58] Civil Revision No. 275 of 1945 which came for hearing before Bose J. gave rise to this reference by the learned Judge. This revision was against an order passed by the trial Court in Civil Suit No. 37 of 1933 allowing an amendment of the defendants' written statement and framing additional issues on the basis of the amended statement.

[59] Civil Suit No. 37 of 1933, as originally instituted, was for possession of a field on the strength of a deed dated 24th April 1923 which, according to the plaintiffs, was a deed of sale with a condition for reconveyance, but according to the defendants was a mortgage by conditional sale. The plaintiffs succeeded in the trial Court and in the first and a second appeal and a decree for possession was passed in their favour. In the Letters Patent appeal by the defendants, a Divisional Bench of this Court held that the deed dated 24th April 1923 on which the suit was based was a mortgage with a condition of foreclosure and the plaintiffs' remedy was not to sue for possession as purchasers but to enforce and to foreclose the mortgage. The plaintiffs were permitted by the appellate Court to amend the plaint so as to convert it into a plaint for the enforcement of the mortgage. The defendants were also given liberty to amend their written statement, if desired, and to contest such new matter as might be introduced by the plaintiffs by way of amendment of the plaint but not otherwise.

[60] The defendants' application for amendment of the written statement was opposed by the plaintiffs mainly on the ground that the amendment sought was not necessary to contest any new matter introduced by the plaintiffs. The trial Court overruled the plaintiffs' objection and allowed the amendment and further struck additional issues (issues 3 to 7). This order was challenged in Civil Revision No. 275 of 1945 before Bose J. and the question before the learned Judge was whether the order could and should be interfered with by the High Court in its revisional jurisdiction.

[61] In para 7 of the order of reference Bose J. had made it clear that in his view the High Court has no jurisdiction to entertain revisions of this interlocutory nature and even if it has, then a revision being a matter of discretion it ought not to interfere. In his view the decision of Sen J. in I. L. R. (1945) Nag 634[1] in which the learned Judge in his revisional jurisdiction set aside the order of the subordinate Court disallowing amendment was not correctly decided. The learned Judge being however aware that other Judges of this Court held widely divergent views on the subject decided to refer the questions stated above for decision by a Full Bench so that the matter could be settled at least in principle.

[62] In Halsbury's Laws of England (Hailsham Edition) vol. 8, p. 532 the learned author observed:

"By jurisdiction is meant the authority which a Court has to decide matters that are litigated before it or to take cognisance of matters presented in a formal way for its decision. The limits of this authority are imposed by the statute, charter or commission under which the Court is constituted."

[63] In 48 Cal. 138[18] the Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court observed:

"The authority to decide a cause at all and not the decision rendered therein is what makes up jurisdiction; and when there is jurisdiction of the person and the subject-matter the decision of all other questions arising in the case is but an exercise of that jurisdiction."

[64] These observations are noted with approval by Bose J. in I. L. R. (1936) Nag. 73[5] at p. 76.

[65] In the present reference, as I understand it, Boes J. has raised questions both regarding the jurisdiction to entertain revisions of an interlocutory nature and to the exercise of that jurisdiction in a particular way only, i. e., by refusing to interfere with the order of the lower Court. Though the words used are not quite unambiguous, I understand Bose J.'s view to be that the High Court has no jurisdiction to entertain revisions against interlocutory orders, i. e, against orders not disposing of the suit one way or the other but such orders as are passed from time to time in a pending suit deciding matters necessary for the further progress and the final disposal of a suit and that the High Court should never interfere with such orders of the subordinate Courts, even assuming that it has power in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction to interfere.

[66] The material points which need consideration in this reference are, in my opinion, as follows: (i) Whether the High Court has jurisdiction to entertain revisions against interlocutory orders particularly the orders mentioned in question (2) and (ii) If the High Court has jurisdiction, then revision being a matter of discretion, can the High Court lay down and should it lay down a positive rule that it should always exercise its jurisdiction in refusing to interfere in such revisions? I have not been able to find any principle on which the particular interlocutory orders which are specifically mentioned in question (2) are distinguished from other interlocutory orders.

[67] It is pointed out correctly in para 19 of the order of reference that the revisional jurisdiction of the High Court in civil cases is derived from the Civil Procedure Code (S. 115), and the proper analysis of that section is of great help in answering the points noted in para 8 above and in fact in deciding the questions referred to the Full Bench. In this respect I find the observations of the Divisional Bench of the Allahabad High Court in 57 ALL. 810[23] at p. 821 very instructive and they are reproduced below with approval:

"A preliminary objection is one that challenges the competence of a Court to hear and decide a particular case before it ... ... All that is necessary to bring into play the revisional jurisdiction of this Court under S. 115 is that (i) there be a case decided, (ii) the decision be of a Court subordinate to this Court, and (iii) the decision be not appealable.'

The question whether or not the Court below exercised its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity is tantamount to the consideration of the revision on merits. It is one thing to say that the High Court has no jurisdiction to entertain an application in revision against a particular order passed by a particular Court, and it is quite another thing to say that, though this Court can entertain the revision application, it ought to reject it as in passing the order the lower Court did not assume jurisdiction that it did not possess or fail to exercise jurisdiction that it did possess or act in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity.

[68] It is thus clear that the first part of S. 115, Civil P. C., deals with the jurisdiction of the High Court to entertain revisions; that jurisdiction is made dependent on three conditions set out therein, and the power to exercise that jurisdiction is dealt with in the second part of the section and is dependent on the subordinate Courts being guilty of what is stated in cls. (a), (b) and (c) of the section. It is not disputed that the revisional powers are discretionary both in the matter of entertaining revisions and interfering with the order of the subordinate Court.

[69] Out of the three conditions necessary for the exercise of jurisdiction to entertain revisions there is in the present case no dispute regarding two conditions, viz. that the order sought to be revised is passed by a Court subordinate to High Court and that no appeal from that order lies to the High Court. The question is whether the third condition on which the jurisdiction depends, namely whether it is a 'case decided' is satisfied.

[70] For a long time the exact meaning and scope of the word 'case' was a subject of keen difference of opinion between different High Courts in India. The word 'case' is not defined in the Civil Procedure Code or in the General Clauses Act or in any other Act. The dictionary meaning of the word is "the state of facts juridically considered." It is not clear whether it means the state of facts of the whole case or a branch of a case, and whether the word 'case' is synonymous in its scope with the word 'suit' or it is wider. This gave rise to two interpretations of the word 'case'. According to one interpretation which was favoured by a group of High Courts, the word was wide enough to include not only the order finally disposing of the 'lis' but also an interlocutory order, while according to the other and a narrower interpretation favoured by another group of the High Courts the words 'case decided' do not include a part of the case decided; in other words, the words do not include interlocutory orders.

[71] The Calcutta High Court always favourd the wider interpretation, as is clear from 14 Cal. 768[24] and 62 Cal. 616.[25] This is the view approved and followed by the High Courts of Madras and Bombay. The view of the Patna High Court appears by no means consistent, as is clear from the different views taken in 3 Pat. 930[26] and 15 Pat. 340.[27] This inconsistency is however now removed and a wider interpretation of the word 'case' is accepted in a Full Bench decision in A. I. R. 1938 Pat. 22.[28] The view of the Calcutta High Court was always accepted as correct by the Nagpur Judicial Commissioner's Court and also by the Nagpur High Court. These cases have been noted by Sen J. in I. L. R. (1945) Nag. 634[1] and need not be repeated fully here. In 13 N. L. R. 203[30] at p. 208 Stanyon A. J. C. observed:

"I am not in favour of using S. 115, Civil P. C., in a narrow and technical way. I regard it as a section which gives plenary powers of interference by this Court."

[72] In 27 N. L. R. 251[30] Niyogi A. J. C. laid down quite unequivocally that the word 'case' in S. 115, Civil P. C., is wide enough to cover an interlocutory order.

[73] These dicta have been followed by the Nagpur High Court in several cases.

[74] In A. I. R. 1938 Nag, 210[31] Bose J. held that the word 'case' used in S. 115 is wide enough to include an interlocutory order and the High Court has power to interfere with such orders provided they otherwise fulfil the requirements of S. 115, Civil P. C. In another decision reported in A.I.R. 1938 Nag. 358[32] Bose J. observed that the High Court would not ordinarily exercise its revisional jurisdiction in a purely interlocutory matter, namely, about the admission of a certain piece of evidence, but it may do so in certain circumstances involving the question of jurisdiction or inflicting irreparable injury on the party. In I.L.R. (1942) Nag. 258[33] Bose J. interfered in revision in a case where the party on whom interrogatories were served filed a reply but the affidavit was sworn to not by the party personally but by his agent and therefore the lower Court asked that party to file answers again in a proper form.

[75] The other group of High Courts which at a time favoured the narrow view and held that no revision could be entertained against interlocutory orders consisted of the Allahabad, Lahore and Lucknow High Courts. Even these Courts have however changed their views and are now in line with other High Courts in adopting liberal interpretation of the word 'case.' So far as the Allahabad High Court is concerned this change is apparent from the decision in 48 ALL. 175.[34] In I. L. R. (1940) ALL. 564[35] the Allahabad High Court held that an order refusing an amendment of the plaint is a case decided within the meaning of S. 115, Civil P, C., and a revision lies against it. In 57 ALL. 678[36] it was held that where an application to join a party to a suit was disposed of without proper consideration and on a misapprehension of its nature a revision lies against that order under S. 115, Civil P. C.

[76] In 3 Luck. 650[37] an order of stay in a pending suit was held to be within the purview of S. 115, Civil P. C. In 5 Lah. 288[38] consisting of five judges it was held by majority that the word 'case' should be read in a restricted sense so as not to include interlocutory orders. That High Court in a later Full Bench decision in I. L. R. (1943) Lah. 257[39] reconsidered its earlier Full Bench decision and after considering the entire case law on the subject held that the word 'case' in S. 115, Civil P. C., is wide enough to include interlocutory orders. In that case the order of the subordinate Court staying the suit on receipt of a robkar from the Debt Conciliation Board was held to be a case within the meaning of S. 115 of the Code. The divergence of view can now be said to have been resolved in favour of the liberal interpretation of the word according to which the word 'case' includes interlocutory orders.

[77] It is thus clear that the jurisdiction to entertain a revision does not depend on the order sought to be revised being interlocutory or final. Nor does it depend upon the particular matter disposed of by that order. The High Court has jurisdiction to entertain revision against orders deciding a particular matter provided the three conditions mentioned in the first part of S. 115 are satisfied. It may be noted that according to one of those conditions the order sought to be revised must not by itself be appealable to the High Court. It is immaterial that an appeal would lie to the High Court from the decree which may ultimately be passed in the suit. In this connection the following observations of the Madras High Court in I. L. R. (1942) Mad. 459.[10] are worth noting :

"The fact that a finding on a question of jurisdiction could be challenged in an appeal from the decree passed in the suit does not preclude the High Court from interfering in revision on a question of jurisdiction when it arises at a preliminary stage in a suit."

[78] It does not however follow that the High Court will interfere with every order against which a revision is entertainable. The interference will depend firstly upon whether the requirements of clauses (a), (b) and (c) of S. 115 Civil P. C., are satisfied and secondly on the Court's regarding it a proper case where the discretionary power of revision should be exercised.

[79] It was pointed out by Woodrooffe J. in 41 Cal. 323[16] that S. 115 could only be called in aid when the failure of justice, if any, has been done due to one or other fault of procedure mentioned in clauses (a), (b), and (c) of S. 115, Civil P. C. The High Court would not exercise its revisional jurisdiction only because the subordinate Court has gone wrong on facts or on law. Their Lordships of the Privy Council very aptly pointed out in 11 Cal. 6[41] that when a Court decides a suit with jurisdiction that decision cannot, merely on account of the fact that it was wrong, be said to be without jurisdiction as a Court acting with jurisdiction has jurisdiction to decide rightly or wrongly.

[80] In 40 Mad. 793[7] their Lordships again pointed out:

" It will be observed that the section applies to jurisdiction alone, the irregular exercise, or non-exercise of it, or the illegal assumption of it. The section is not directed against conclusions of law or fact in which the question of jurisdiction is not involved."

[81] Clauses (a) and (b) of S. 115 which deal with usurpation of jurisdiction and the non-exercise of jurisdiction are simple enough, and Bose J. has correctly pointed out that though the subordinate Court decides that a certain matter lies within its jurisdiction that order is not a nullity; but where such an order results in the usurpation of jurisdiction which that Court does not possess to that extent that order is open to revision. In other words, where the issue is an issue of jurisdiction it is always open for revision. The real difficulty is experienced in the application of clause (c) of S. 115 where the subordinate Court is accused of having acted within its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity.

[82] It is difficult to lay down exhaustively what constitutes acting illegally or with material irregularity and also to narrate the circumstances when the High Court should and when it should not exercise its discretionary power of revision. These matters have to be decided on the facts and circumstances of the individual case judged in the light of the rules of procedure and the principles which can be gathered from the several reported decisions, a few of which are noted below :

[83] In I.L.R. (1937) ALL. 805[42] it was held that where the Court failed to consider a material question and did not apply its mind at all to the mandatory provisions of the law relevant on the question it acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction with material irregularity.

[84] In 57 ALL. 668[36] it was observed that where an application to join a party was disposed of without proper consideration and on a misapprehension of its nature it is a material irregularity.

[85] In 56 Bom. 585[43] at p. 589 it is observed that a wilful disregard or apparent violation of any provision of law amounted to acting with material irregularity.

[86] In 58 Mad. 936[44] it was held that there the previous order of the Court was misinterpreted or misconstrued and as a result the Court did not go into the application under O. 21 R. 97. Civil P.C. it amounted either to a failure to exercise jurisdiction or to the exercising of the jurisdiction with material irregularity.

[87] In 15 Luck 641[45] it was held that where a Judge proceeds with a suit as a result of misinterpretation of law, for example, S. 10, Civil P. C., he acts with material irregularity.

[88] A wrong interpretation of the provision of law renders the orders of the subordinate Court open to revision as held in I. L. R. (1945) ALL. 604.[46] In 25 Pat. 58[47] it was held that where the Court misinterprets the statutory provision and commits a mistake with regard to the ambit of its jurisdiction its order is open to revision. In I. L. R. (1946) Mad. 640[48] it was held that an abuse of the powers of the executing Court is a ground for revision. In 21 Luck. 167[49] it was held that the High Court should interfere if non-interference would result in multiplicity of suits, delay and unnecessary expenses to the parties. Many more cases can be collected, and in fact some of them were cited at the Bar in which the High Court either interfered or refused to interfere in revision. I however think it needless to refer to them. The aforesaid citation is sufficient to show that no hard and fast rule can be laid down for the application or otherwise of clause (c) of S. 115, Civil P. C. or for the exercise of the revisional jurisdiction which is after all discretionary and each case must be considered on the facts and circumstances of that case.

[89] Before the High Court entertains a revision it shall have in every case to decide (i) whether it has jurisdiction to entertain a revision, i. e., whether the conditions mentioned in Part 1 of S. 115 are satisfied, (ii) whether it has power to interfere with the order of the lower Court, i. e.

whether the subordinate Court has committed an error which fell under clauses (a), (b) and (c) of S. 115, (iii) and whether in the circumstances of the case it should in its discretion exercise the revisional power and interfere with the order of the subordinate Court and pass any suitable order in the case. It would indeed be trenching on the province of legislature to lay down that particular order or an order dealing with a particular subject should not be interfered with or that the High Court should, as a rule, exercise its jurisdiction in not interfering with the interlocutory orders of the subordinate Court because they deal with particular subjects or only because they are interlocutory.

[90] The trial Court has no doubt a jurisdiction to interpret the order of remand. It does not however follow that the High Court has no jurisdiction to entertain a revision and to interfere with the lower Court's order passed as a result of its interpretation and that such a revision should always be rejected. A patent mistake in interpreting the remand order and the violation of well-established principles of interpretation would amount to acting with material irregularity specially when the interpretation is so unjustified or patently wrong that the lower Court could not be deemed to have applied its mind in interpreting the remand order. Where, moreover as in this case, the interpretation of the remand order is linked with the question of jurisdiction of the subordinate Court after remand it would be open to revision if by putting a wrong interpretation the subordinate Court either enlarges its own jurisdiction or narrows it down.

[91] In 58 Mad. 936[44] the executing Court passed an order in a claim petition under O. 21, R. 58, Civil P. C. It was dismissed subject to note that whatever interest the defendant has in the lands be put to auction and the petitioner's rights are not prejudiced thereby. This order was misinterpreted by the Court and it consequently declined to go into the merits of the case when an application was filed by the claimant for enquiry into his claim that he had permanent occupancy rights. It was held that the order of the Court was liable to be revised. In the present case, the jurisdiction of the trial Court in the matter of allowing or refusing amendment of the defendants' written statement was limited by the remand order and the interpretation of that order was therefore linked up with the question of jurisdiction.

[92] It is true that under O. 6, R. 17, Civil P. C., the power to allow or refuse amendment is in the discretion of the trial Court. It has, however, to exercise that discretion according to judicial principles which are well recognised and according to the rules laid down for the guidance of the subordinate Courts, as will be found in the reported cases e. g., 48 Cal. 110[50] and 48 Cal. 832,[51] I. L. R. (1939) Nag. 194[52] and others. The High Court before refusing to interfere with the order of the subordinate Court has to satisfy itself that the subordinate Court did judicially exercise its discretion and did not merely make a show of doing so. It has further to satisfy itself that the subordinate Court has not passed its order by violating the well-established principles of law and relevant rules on the subject. Where a subordinate Court is however found to have acted illegally or with material irregularity, in either not allowing or allowing amendment, such an order, even though discretionary, would be open to revision. According to O. 6, R. 17, 'all such amendments shall be made as may be necessary for the purpose of determining the real questions in controversy between the parties.' In a case reported in I.L.R. (1945) Nag. 634[1] Sen J. found that the order of the subordinate Court refusing to allow amendment sought to be revised in that case deprived the party of the opportunity of placing his case before the Court so as to enable it to determine the real question in controversy between the parties. This was contrary to O. 6, R. 17, Civil P. C., and the subordinate Court was guilty of either not exercising jurisdiction vested in it by law or of exercising it with material irregularity. It is on this ground that Sen J. interfered with the order of the subordinate Court and allowed the amendment which fell within the ambit of O. 6, R. 17 of the Code. I do not find anything wrong with this decision.

[93] The subject of settlement of issues is dealt with in O. 14, Civil P. C. and Rule 1 (3) of the Order provided that each material proposition affirmed by one party and denied by the other shall form the subject of a distinct issue. The material propositions as defined by R. 1 (2) of O. 14 are those propositions of law or fact which a plaintiff must allege in order to show a right to sue or a defendant must allege in order to constitute his defence. If a Court refused to frame an issue on a material proposition affirmed by one party and denied by the other, it would be guilty of not exercising jurisdiction vested in it by law requiring it at the first hearing of the suit to record issues on which the right decision of the case depends. If, on the other hand, it framed issues which do not arise out of the material propositions of law or fact affirmed by one party and denied by the other, it would be acting either in excess of its jurisdiction or with material irregularity, and in either case the order of the subordinate Court may be open to revision. In fact, by refusing to frame an issue which actually does arise in the case, the Court shuts out a trial of a part of his case. In such a case it would be necessary for the High Court to interfere in revision and to set the matter right so as to avoid waste of time and costs: 21 Luck. 167.[49]

[94] I am however in agreement with Bose J. that the revisional jurisdiction of the High Court under S. 115, Civil P. C., should not be so liberally exercised as to convert a revision into an appeal and further that every order of the subordinate Court should not be interfered with only because it was wrong either in law or on facts. I also agree that the revision against an interlocutory order should not be encouraged unless it was necessary to interfere with the order at that stage in order to shorten litigation and to avoid waste of time and money. It is however necessary, on the other hand, that S. 115, Civil P. C., should not be too narrowly and too technically construed as it provides a salutary check on the careful discharge of functions by the subordinate Court. It is necessary in the interests of justice that there should be a tribunal where patent injustice can be removed, and removed in due time. Section 115, if properly construed, affords sufficient guarantee against unwarranted use of the revisional powers of the High Court. It is neither proper nor permissible that new terms and conditions should be introduced by Courts into S. 115 and on which either the entertaining of a revision or the exercise of the power of interference should be made dependent. It is equally not proper and not permissible that a rigid rule should be laid down by the High Court that particular revisions should either be not entertained or that those revisions should always be dismissed.

[95] In the light of what has been said above, my answers to the questions referred are: Question 1: In the affirmative. Question 2: In the affirmative. Question 3: No hard and fast rule can be laid down; each case should depend on its own facts and circumstances and the discretion should be exercised judicially and according to correct and well-established principles.

[96] Pollock J. — I agree in the answers proposed by Padhye J. but I wish to add a few words.

[97] I am not quite sure what Bose J. means by "entertain revisions" in the second question that he has posed. If there has been a case decided by a civil Court and no appeal lies, then it is clear from S. 115, Civil P. C., that the High Court has power to send for the record. If Bose J. meant more than that by "entertain revisions" and was asking whether the High Court has power to interfere in revision, then that depends on whether in such a case the subordinate Court has acted in a way hit by cl. (a) or (b) or (c) of Section 115.

[98] I agree with Bose J. that, if the lower Court has jurisdiction to decide a point and has decided it, then neither cl. (a) nor cl. (b) can ordinarily apply, but I think there may be cases in which, as Bose J. has put it, the fact which the Court is determining is not an issue on the merits but an issue of jurisdiction, in which case the finding may be revisable. When a case has been remanded to the lower Court for decision of a particular issue I do not think that the Court has jurisdiction to decide any other issue, nor has it jurisdiction to misinterpret the order of remand so as to get jurisdiction to decide some other issue, and therefore there may be cases in which it is permissible to interfere under cl. (a). So also it may be permissible to interfere under cl. (b) if the Court refuses to decide the issue sent down for trial. These difficulties however could be avoided if remand orders were more clearly worded.

[99] In most cases, however, there is no question of exercising a jurisdiction that is not vested in the Court or refusing to exercise a jurisdiction that is vested, and the question turns on whether the Court has acted illegally or with material irregularity. I agree with the dictum of Sir Lawrence Jenkins C. J. in 41 Cal. 323[16] that there must be an error of procedure and not merely of law to justify interference under cl. (c). I also agree with what Bose J. said in I. L. R. (1936) Nag. 73[5] that "It must be something independent of the decision itself; an irregularity or illegality in the manner of arriving at it, not in the conclusion reached," though I find some difficulty in reconciling that dictum with his decision in I. L. R. (1938) Nag. 106[17] where he held in effect at p. 112 that a wrong decision by a Court that the court-fee paid is inadequate is a material irregularity, however correct the procedure may have been because it shuts the plaintiff out from all hope of redress in the suit itself, assuming of course that he refuses to pay the additional court-fee demanded, with the result that the application for revision is treated as if it were an appeal. It is, however, I think impossible to define what is meant by "illegally or with material irregularity," as Bose J. himself has recognized[4]; but I think that there may be an illegality or material irregularity if the Court acts in obvious disregard of some statutory enactment or some well-established principle. That, in my opinion, might amount to an error of procedure and not merely an error of law.

[100] I would therefore say that there may be cases in which the High Court has power to interfere in revision with the lower Court's interpretation of a remand order or on a question of amendment of a pleading or on a question relating to the framing of an issue, and I would say that I. L. R. (1945) Nag. 634[1] was rightly decided in so far as it held that such an order may be open to revision. On the question whether the Court rightly interfered in revision in that particular case I think it unnecessary to express any opinion.

[101] Finally, I agree with Bose J. that the less interference by this Court in interlocutory matters the better, and that, while interference in some cases may do good, interference on the whole probably does more harm than good. The harm is done when notice is issued. If, after the issue of notice and the lapse of perhaps two or three years, the parties appear before the Court and the case is argued, then the Court might as well interfere and put the matter right. Ordinarily, however, I would say that the interests of justice are better served by allowing the lower Court to proceed in its own way and that it is undesirable to delay the decision in many cases in order to do good in a few. I do not, however, think it possible to lay down any hard and fast rule about how this jurisdiction to interfere should be exercised.

[102] Hemeon J.—I concur in the answers given by Padhye J. and in the observations of Pollock J. and have nothing to add.

The word 'fraud' in connection with S. 48 (2) has to be given a more liberal meaning. In cases arising under S. 48 (2), Courts do allow a plea of fraud to be taken even at a late stage. Ordinarily, a plea of fraud cannot be added by way of amendment at such a late stage as in second appeal, but in connection with executions where property is prevented from being brought before the executing Court due to the fraud of the judgment-debtor, Courts have permitted the plea of fraud to be taken at a late stage : 12 A. Judgment. — This is a miscellaneous second appeal against the order of Mr. B. S. Divekar, Additional District Judge, Ellichpur, in Miscellaneous Civil Appeal No. 4 of 1941, decided on 24-10-1941.

[2] The matter arises in execution proceedings of a decree dated 6-8-1928. According to S. 48, Civil P. C., the last date by which execution application could be made was 6-8-1940. Accordingly on 29-1-40 the decree-holder applied for execution. At first the application was for transfer of the decree to Akola so that he could proceed against the immovable property, but by an application dated 10-2-40 the decree-holder asked for execution against the movable property in the hands of the judgment-debtor. This property was attached and made over to a supratdar, but it could not be sold as the judgment-debtor prevented the supratdar from bringing the property into Court. Several attempts were made by the decree-holder to get at the movable property. Ultimately he compromised by accepting Rs. 100 from the supratdar in lieu of the property entrusted to him. On 22-1-1941 the decree-holder applied for amendment of his application and asked for permission to proceed against the immovable property of the judgment-debtor. This application was made more than 12 years after the date of the decree but the executing Court allowed the application for amendment and ordered the attachment of the fields. Against this order, an appeal was filed and the lower appellate Court reversed the decision of the executing Court and ordered that the execution having become time-barred, the application be dismissed. The reasons given by the lower appellate Court were that the application dated 22-1-1941 involved a change in the mode of execution and the amendment could have been sought much earlier than 22-1-1941. The application for amendment was treated as a fresh application for execution and was held not to comply with O. 21, Rr. 13 and 14, Civil P. C. The lower appellate Court, therefore, ordered the executing Court to recall the C form which, it appears, had been issued in the meantime.

[3] This appeal raises three grounds. The first contention is that the application for amendment was not a fresh application within the meaning of S. 48 (1), Civil P. C., and that it did not involve any change in the mode of execution. In deciding whether an application is an application for amendment of an earlier application or a fresh application the Court must see the substance rather than the form : See 14 Luck 192.[1] In the present case the first application was for execution against the movables and that application was substantially exhausted because the decree-holder accepted Rs. 100-0-0 in lieu of the movables left with the supratdar.

[4] The present application for amendment seeks to proceed against the immovable property and therefore the mode of execution is certainly different. In I. L. R. (1945) Nag. 555,[2] a C form had been sent and sale had taken place of some property mentioned in the C form. On ratable distribution the decree of the decree-holder in that case was not satisfied. He applied for amendment of the first application by inclusion of some other items of property. It was held on the authority of the cases cited in this ruling that this was a fresh application for execution and not an application for amendment. It has been held in some other High Courts that amendment can be allowed in suitable cases and the Courts are not limited by O. 21, R. 17, Civil P. C., if it does not alter the execution proceedings. This has been laid down in I. L. R. (1941) 2 Cal. 251[3] and A. I. R. 1940 Mad. 19.[4] The view of this Court, however, has been to treat applications for execution against new items of property as fresh applications. Another case in point is Miscellaneous Appeal No. 165 of 1943, decided on 29-3-45. I am bound by these two cases of this Court, especially I. L. R. (1945) Nag. 555[2] which is a Division Bench case. Even if I disagreed with the view propounded therein, I do not consider this case suitable for reference because the present appeal can be decided on other grounds. I accordingly treat the application for amendment as a fresh application for execution filed beyond the statutory limit of 12 years.

[5] This brings me to the second contention of the decree-holder and it is that by a subsequent order the executing Court granted time for payment to the judgment-debtor from 18-3-32 to 15-1-33. He claims, therefore, to exclude this period from calculation and as this is more than sufficient to cover the delay in the making of the fresh application, he claims that he is within time. There is no doubt that the judgment-debtor was granted time to make payment by the executing Court. It was, however, contended by the respondent that the "subsequent order" mentioned in S. 48, Civil P. C. refers to an order made by the original Court and not the executing Court. This was no doubt the view of the Allahabad High Court in 40 ALL. 198,[5] and certain other Allahabad cases which followed the authority cited by me. The Allahabad case was, however, dissented from in 49 Bom. 695[6] and has recently been overruled in I. L. R. (1939) ALL. 647.[7] In this Court the view has been taken that a subsequent order can be passed by both the original Court as well as the executing Court: see 27 N. L. R. 150.[8] for the respondent that the time which was granted was by way of an adjustment, but he ignores that 27 N. L. R. 150[8] was also a case of adjustment. I therefore hold that in computing the period of 12 years the decree-holder is entitled to exclude the period from 18-3-32 to 15-1-33. This is more than sufficient to bring his second application within the time prescribed by the Civil Procedure Code. In this connection I may also refer to I. L. R. (1944) Nag. 250[9] where it has been held that S. 48, Civil P. C., is controlled by S. 15, Limitation Act, and the decree-holder in suitable cases can exclude period during which he was prohibited from executing his decree. This brings his application for amendment within the period of 12 years. It is true that the application did not comply with O. 21, R. 11, Civil P. C., but an amendment under O. 21, R. 17 is within the competence of the Court and the executing Court could have allowed the decree-holder to put in a proper application with all the details required by R. 11. In my opinion, therefore, the decision of the lower appellate Court is wrong.

[7] There was yet a third contention of the decree-holder appellant and it is that under S. 48 (2), Civil P. C., he is entitled to bring his application for execution even after the statutory period of 12 years if the judgment-debtor was guilty of fraud. There is no doubt in my mind that if it was necessary the decree-holder could have fallen back upon S. 48, sub-s. (2), Civil P. C. A mere perusal of the order-sheets shows that the judgment-debtor prevented the supratdar from bringing the movable property into Court so that it could be sold. 'Fraud' in connection with S. 48 (2) has to be given a more liberal meaning: see 22 N. L. R. 67[10] at pp. 78 and 79. It was contended that no such plea was taken before the executing Court and the fraud which is now pleaded was never pleaded before. In cases arising under S. 48(2), Civil P.C., Courts do allow a plea of fraud to be taken even at a late stage. Ordinarily, a plea of fraud cannot be added by way of amendment at such a late stage, but in connection with executions where property is prevented from being brought before the executing Court due to the fraud of the judgment-debtor, Courts have permitted the plea of fraud to be taken at a late stage: see A. I. R. 1946 Mad. 172.[11] I respectfully agree with the observations of Bell J. in that case where he says:

"In my opinion, however, different considerations arise when applying the provisions of sub-s. (2) of S. 48. Section 48 sets a time limit on executions. In order to prevent a dishonest and fraudulent debtor from preventing the execution of the decree for the period of 12 years it says that if fraud can be shown then the time limit may be extended. It is not a question of making specific allegations in a plaint or written statement against the reputation or character of the opposite side. It is a case of being able to show even at the eleventh hour and afterwards that the time limit laid down by S. 48 should not prevail where the conduct of the judgment-debtor is such as to have prevented the execution of the decree within twelve years. It is said that 'Judges ought to take a broad view of conduct deliberately adopted by judgment-debtors with a view to defeating and delaying the just payment of their debts by frivolous and futile objections which are dishonest upon the face of them.'

See 44 ALL. 319.[12]

[8] Since it is not necessary to decide this case on this ground of fraud, I say nothing more about it except to indicate that if it was necessary I would have accepted the plea of fraud urged by the decree-holder against the judgment-debtor and allowed him to plead it even at this late stage. As it is, his application is within time but does not strictly comply with O. 21, R. 11. That of course is a matter for amendment. I therefore set aside the order of the lower appellate Court and order execution to proceed on the basis of the application dated 22-1-1941 which, the executing Court will give the decree-holder an opportunity to amend so as to bring it in line with the requirements of law.

[9] The appeal is allowed with costs throughout.

Shyamrao Krishnarao—Accused — Applicant v. Emperor.

Criminal Revn. No. 465 of 1946, Decided on 9-1-1947, from order of Addl. Sessions Judge, Raipur, D/- 28-5-1946.

Government of India Act (1935), S. 270 (1) — Telegraph messenger riding bicycle while on duty rashly and negligently—Prosecution under S. 337, Penal Code — Consent of Governor-General, if necessary.

The accused who was a telegraph messenger, while on duty, was riding a bicycle belonging to his department. The bicycle was defective by reason of brake deficiencies and absence of bell. In spite of this the accused failed to ride at a safe speed and to be vigilant and knocked down a small girl. He was prosecuted and sentenced under S. 337, Penal Code. No consent of the Governor-General was obtained for the prosecution under S. 270 (1), Government of India Act.

Held that the act of the accused was an act purporting to be done in the execution of his duty and the proceedings against him were ultra vires, as the consent of the Governor-General had not been obtained to their institution under S. 270 (1), Government of India Act: 31 A.I.R. 1944 Nag. 337 and 24 A.I.R. 1937 P. P. Lobo—for Applicant.

W. B. Pendharkar Addl. Govt. Pleader —for the Crown.

Order. — The applicant Shamrao, telegraph messenger, was convicted and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 51 under S. 279, Penal Code, by the Honorary Magistrate, First Class, Raipur, and in appeal the sentence was upheld but the conviction was altered to one under S. 337 ibid by the Additional Sessions Judge, Raipur. He has now come up in revision.

[2] The prosecution case was briefly stated as follows. On the afternoon of 13-11-1945 Hari (P. W. 2) saw the applicant, who was riding his bicycle quickly, knocked down a three years old girl without having sounded his bell or reduced his speed. As a result of the collision he also fell down and Hari took the bicycle to the Court of Mr. S. N. Hadole (P. W. 1), father of the child, and reported to him that it was the machine by which the child had been hurt. Mr. Hadole inspected the bicycle and found that it had no bell or front brake and that the back wheel brake was out of order. Mr. Hadole then went to his house where he found his daughter weeping and noticed that she had injuries on the left foot and a swelling on the left leg. He accordingly took her to Dr. T. M. Dabke (P. W. 4) who examined her injuries and dressed them. The matter was in due course reported to the police and the bicycle seized.

[3] The applicant in examination claimed that at the relevant time he had been cycling at an ordinary speed to the post office for returning telegrams, that he was travelling on the left side of the road and that the small girl who was playing in the middle of the road dashed against the wheel of the bicycle in spite of his shouts to her. He admitted that the machine had no bell but claimed that the hind brake was in order. This connoted that the front brake was out of order and it was shown from the evidence of Hari and Rajabali (P. W. 5), a respectable witness, that there was no front brake and that the hind brake was out of order. In spite of these defects in the machine, the applicant had not ridden it with caution but, as the evidence showed, swiftly and so rashly or negligently that he knocked down and injured the little girl who was playing on the side of the road.

[6] The applicant was on duty at the time and the only contention pressed before me was that the proceedings against him were ultra vires, as the consent of the Governor-General had not been obtained to their institution under S. 270 (1), Government of India Act, 1935. The proceedings referred to in that sub-section are those contemplated in respect of any act done or purporting to be done in the execution of a person's duty as a servant of the Crown in India or Burma, and the learned Additional Sessions Judge held that the act of the applicant did not take place in the execution of his duties. In so finding, he relied on the following observations of Sulaiman J. in A. I. R. 1939 F. C. 43.[1]

"It (i. e. the act) must have been ostensibly done by him (i. e. a public servant) in his official capacity in execution of his duty, which would not necessarily be the case merely because it was done at a time when he held such office, nor even necessarily because he was engaged in his official business at the time."

[5] In A. I. R. 1944 F. C. 66,[2] and in A. I. R. 1946 F. C. 25[3] that rule was applied. The case in A. I. R. 1946 F. C. 25[3], was one in which the facts were as follows. The complainant with his wife and others had proceeded to a steamer station and as he was unable to purchase tickets he wanted to go on the steamer in order to bring back his wife and other people who had boarded it in the interim. In this he was resisted by the accused, station master, who abused him; and when the complainant protested, the station master called out certain people and ordered them to beat him. The complainant was then attacked by them and also by the station-master. Their Lordships of the Federal Court held that the station master's act could not be regarded as one "purporting to be done" by him in the execution of his duty.

[6] The applicant's learned counsel contended however, that in A. I. R. 1939 F. C. 43,[1] Varadachariar J. had pointed out that an act is not less one done or purporting to be done in execution of a duty because the officer concerned does it negligently. In I. L. R. (1944) Nag. 650[4] Digby J. referred to that observation and also to the case in I. L. R. (1938) 1 Cal. 440,[5] in which their Lordships of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council had made it clear that leaving a portion of a railway unrepaired was an act done or purporting or professing to be done in pursuance of the Calcutta Port Act. That finding of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee showed clearly, Digby J. observed, that negligent performance can purport to be performance of duty. He was then discussing the case of a driver of a mail train who had failed to have a proper light on the engine and to keep a proper look-out, and this he considered to fall under the heading "negligent performance." The proceedings against the driver were accordingly quashed as the consent of the Governor-

General to their institution had not been obtained.

[7] The case before me is largely on all fours with the Gotting (driver) case[1]. Both he and the applicant were on duty at the relevant times the one driving a mail train and the other riding a bicycle belonging to his Department. The bicycle was defective by reason of brake deficiencies and Gotting's engine was without a proper headlamp. The applicant and he were both negligent in that in spite of these factors they failed to travel at a safe speed and to be vigilant. Gotting's act has been held to be an act purporting to be done in the execution of his duty and the same conclusion must be reached regarding the applicant's act.

[8] The proceedings against the applicant are, therefore, quashed. As the case involves a substantial question of law as to the interpretation of the Government of India Act, 1935, a certificate under S. 205 (1) of that Act shall issue to the Crown.

Criminal Revn. No. 765 of 1946, Decided on 8th July 1947, from order of Magistrate, First Class, Nagpur, D/- 31st August 1946.

Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 439—Order of acquittal —Revision against, by private complainant, when maintainable.

The High Court is competent to entertain an application for revision against an order of acquittal at the instance of a private complainant but this is subject to the limitation imposed by S. 439 (4). But the High Court will not set aside an order of acquittal unless there are exceptional circumstances that would justify a second trial. *Case law reviewed. Order. — Suleman and Shankar were prosecuted under S. 420, Penal Code, in the Court of the First Class Magistrate, Nagpur, for having cheated Krishna Namdeo Chimurkar of Rs. 1660 on 17th February 1945, Baliram of Rs. 915 and Tukaram of Rs. 1815 on the following day in Nagpur on the misrepresentation that yarn would be supplied to them without delay at a specified rate in lieu of the advances received by Suleman and Shankar. Suleman absconded with the money on 18th February 1945 and was apprehended at Balagat where a sum of Rs. 3778-2-0 was recovered from his wife. Costly presents given by him to friends were also seized. Shankar was acquitted on all counts on the ground that he was duped by Suleman, but the latter while acquitted on the charge of cheating Krishna Namdeo Chimurkar was convicted on the other two counts and sentenced to two concurrent terms, each of one year's rigorous imprisonment, and to pay by way of fine two sums, each of Rs. 1000.

[2] Krishna Namdeo Chimurkar thereafter filed on 7th November 1946 the present application to have Suleman's acquittal set aside and to have him duly punished according to law. Suleman had meanwhile appealed against his convictions and sentences and they were set aside on 16th December 1946 by the third Additional Sessions Judge, Nagpur.

[3] As there was an impression from the order dated 31st October 1946 of Grille C. J. and Hidayatullah J., in Criminal Appeal No. 292 of 1946[1] that revision did not lie at the instance of a private complainant, special notice was issued to the Provincial Government to appear and to have the question argued prior, if necessary, to a reference to a Full Bench.

[4] In 5 N. L. R. 4[2] it was held that the High Court has power, under S. 439, Criminal P. C., to revise an order of acquittal. In 2 N. L. J. 153[3] Drake-Brockman A. J. C., held that S. 439, Criminal P. C., confers on the High Court power to set aside an order of acquittal at the instance of a private prosecutor; and he ordered a retrial. In 23 N. L. R. 40[4] Kinkhede A. J. C., was of the same view; and at p. 99 ibid Wadegaonkar A.J.C., entertained an application in revision by a private complainant against the acquittal of an accused.

[5] In 28 N. L. R. 298[5] Macnair J. C., followed the rule in 23 N. L. R. 40,[4] set aside the acquittals of the two non-applicants and remanded the case. Gruer J. (then A. J. C.) in 31 N. L. R. 261[6] in dealing with a preliminary objection to the effect that this Court is not competent to interfere with an order of acquittal except when moved to do so by the Local Government, made the following observations:

"In none of these cases do I find it laid down that the High Court is precluded from interfering at the instance of a private prosecutor. In ..... it was pointed out that S. 439 (4) does not allow the High Court to convert a finding of acquittal into one of conviction. But that is not the same thing as saying that the High Court may not set aside an acquittal and remand the case. In 50 All. 722,[7] S. 439 (4) directly applied."

The orders of acquittal were set aside and the applicants were directed to be retried.

[6] In I. L. R. (1938) Nag. 157,[8] a Division Bench held that under S. 439 read with S. 423 (1), Criminal P. C., the High Court can entertain an application for revision against an order of acquittal at the instance of a private complainant subject to the limitation imposed by S. 439 (4) of the Code. That limitation was stressed in 50 ALL. 722[7] to which Gruer J., as shown referred. The appellant in that case had been tried by the Sessions Judge under S. 302 and was convicted under S. 304, Penal Code. The Local Government failed to appeal against the acquittal of an offence under S. 302 but applied in revision and the High Court accepting the application convicted the appellant of murder and sentenced him to death. Thereafter, their Lordships of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council pointed out that the finding at the trial amounted to an acquittal in respect of the offence of murder and that the High Court had acted without jurisdiction against the rule laid down in S. 439 (4), Criminal P. C.

[7] In Cri. Appeal No. 292 of 1946[1] the respondent who was tried under S. 302, Penal Code, was convicted under S. 326 ibid and an appeal was filed to this Court to have the conviction altered from S. 326 to S. 302. Grille C. J. and Hidayatullah J., dismissed the appeal in limine as an appeal against an acquittal can only be filed by the Provincial Government under S. 417, Criminal P. C. The party concerned had, however, also requested the Division Bench to treat the appeal as an application for revision, but that Bench rejected it on the authority in 50 ALL. 722.[7] The application was clearly not one for a remand or a retrial but for the conversion of a finding of acquittal into one of conviction and it was, therefore, untenable. The Division Bench had not held that they were incompetent to interfere in revision with an order of acquittal at the instance of a private prosecutor; and in Misc. Cri. Case No. 85 of 1946, Decided on 26-11-1946, the same Bench rejected another application in which a private party had specifically sought the setting aside of an order of acquittal and the convictions of three accused by the Bench.

[8] It follows, therefore, that there is no necessity to have the matter referred to a Full Bench. There is no conflict between the rule laid by the Division Bench in I. L. R (1938) Nag. 157[8] and that laid down in Cri. Appeal No. 292 of 1946.[1] In short, the High Court is competent to entertain an application for revision against an order of acquittal at the instance of a private complainant but this is subject to the limitation imposed by S. 439 (4), Criminal P. C. The question as to the circumstances in which such an application should be entertained is another matter which will be discussed hereinafter.

[9] In I. L. R. (1944) Nag. 176,[9] Pollock J. (now C. J.) held, as he had also held in Cri. Revn. No. 333 of 1943,[10] that this Court will not set aside an order of acquittal uuless there are exceptional circumstances that would justify a second trial. He also held that even on the assumption that the acquittal is wrong, that would not in itself constitute a sufficient ground for him to interfere in revision, set aside the order of acquittal and direct a retrial. In the case before me which is also one in which the Provincial Government did not file an appeal against the acquittal, I am clear that there are no such exceptional requirements that would justify the ordering of a retrial. The trial was a very full trial and the learned Magistrate, was, as he has done fully, entitled to give the benefit of the doubt to Suleman. The latter, it is relevant to note, had been convicted on two counts but he was acquitted in appeal. The application is dismissed.

HIDAYATULLAH J.

Gajadhar Lakshiram — Applicant v. Emperor.

Criminal Revn. No. 137 of 1947, Decided on 2nd January 1948, from order of Sessions Judge, Wardha, D/- 8th January 1947.

(a) Factories Act (1934), S. 10 (4)—District Magistrate acting under S. 10 (4) acts not in judicial capacity but in executive capacity — Sanction by him, under rules, to prosecute manager is not a judicial function.

The action of the District Magistrate who acts under S. 10 (4) of the Act as an Inspector is not a judicial function. [Para 4]

Thus, sanction by the District Magistrate to prosecute the manager of a factory for offences under the Act is not a judicial but an executive function. It is true that the rules give the manager of the factory concerned an opportunity to represent his case but that is entirely with a view to avoiding unnecessary prosecutions. Indeed there is no warrant for such a hearing in the Act itself : 27 Mad. 54, Ref. [Para 4]

(b) Factories Act (1934), S. 10 (4) — Rules under Act, requiring sanction of District Magistrate for prosecution of manager—Sanction once refused can again be given by him or his successor.

There is no question of any autrefois acquit whenever the District Magistrate refuses to sanction the prosecution of the manager of a factory for offence under the Act. Indeed the District Magistrate can and must sanction a prosecution if on a review of the case he finds that his, or his predecessor's earlier decision refusing sanction is erroneous: 13 A. I. R. 1926 Cal. 691, Ref. [Para 5]

Order. — This is an application for revision of an order passed by Mr. R. K. Kher Sessions Judge, Wardha, in Criminal Revision No. 72 of 1946 on 8th January 1947.

[2] The facts are that the Inspector of Factories Central Provinces and Berar made a complaint in writing against the applicant of some offences under the Factories Act. Previous to this R. B. F. C. Gangrade, District Magistrate Wardha, had refused to sanction the prosecution of the applicant but on 6th August 1946 his successor R. S. R. K. Mishra sanctioned the prosecution. The case of the applicant is that the complaint is time-barred and that R. S. R. K. Mishra could not review the order of his predecessor and hence the complaint is invalid.

[3] The complaint was received by the Magistrate concerned on 6th August 1946 though the offence was registered on 16th August 1946. Since the alleged offence was committed on 12th February 1946, the complaint was duly made within six months of the alleged offence. That it was received by the clerk of the Court and not the Magistrate matters little. In my opinion the complaint is not time-barred. Indeed this part of the case was not seriously pressed by the learned counsel for the applicant.

[4] It was contended that the according of a sanction to prosecute is more a judicial act than an administrative one. Reference is made in this connection to part 1-D of the Central Provinces and Berar Factories Manual (1938) which contains the Circular Instructions and General Orders regarding the working of the Factories. Instruction No. 5 deals with prosecutions and it is there stated how prosecutions should be launched. These rules do not appear to be anything more than instructions of an executive and administrative character. Under these rules the full-time Inspectors of factories are required to take the sanction of the District Magistrate of the District for every prosecution. While forwarding his recommendations, the full-time Inspector is required to furnish a copy together with his reasons to the factory manager, so as to enable the latter to represent the matter to the District Magistrate before sanction to prosecute is given. But the action of the District Magistrate who acts under S. 10 (4) of the Act as an Inspector is not a judical function. There is a difference between administrative and judicial functions which has been pointed out by Bhashyam Ayyangar J., in 27 Mad. 54[1] in the following words :

"There is a marked distinction between the classes of offences dealt with in S. 195, Cl. 1 (b) and (c), and those dealt with in S. 197. A Court granting sanction under S. 195, Cls. (b) and (c), does so in connection with offences committed in or in relation to any proceeding in such Court and the Court therefore acts in its judicial capacity in granting the sanction upon legal evidence. But the Government in according or withholding sanction under S. 197—for the prosecution of a public servant in respect of an offence alleged to have been committed by him as such public servant—acts purely in its executive capacity and the sanction need not be based upon legal evidence. The Government is certainly not acting in a judicial capacity nor exercising a judicial function in authorising or sanctioning a prosecution under Ss. 196 and 197, Criminal P. C., and there is nothing in the signification of the word 'sanction' to 'import' as the Sessions Judge supposes "a judicial element into the act of the executive, ' and the ruling of the Full Bench in 10 Mad 232[2] referred to by the Sessions Judge has no application whatever to the present case."

In the present case also the sanction by the District Magistrate was not a judicial but an executive function. It is true that the instructions give the manager of the factory concerned an opportunity to represent his case but that is entirely with a view to avoiding unnecessary prosecutions and no argument can be grounded upon this practice. Indeed there is no warrant for such a hearing in the Act itself. In my opinion the action of the District Magistrate was in his executive capacity.

[5] It was argued that the District Magistrate having once refused sanction was functus officio and he (and more so his successor) could not reopen the case and review his earlier decision. This is an entirely fallacious argument. There is no question of any autrefois acquit whenever the District Magistrate refuses to sanction the prosecution. Indeed the District Magistrate can and must sanction a prosecution if on a review of the case he finds that his earlier decision is erroneous. In A. I. R. 1926 Cal. 691[3] a prosecution without any sanction had proceeded to the stage of judgment and even this did not bar a subsequent prosecution. It is true that in that case there was no refusal to sanction in the first instance but in so far as the Court is concerned want of sanction and refusal to sanction are on the same footing. All that the criminal Courts are required under S. 74 (1) of the Act is to see that there is a legal sanction. They are not required to inquire anything further and unless the accused can plead an autrefois acquit or convict or any other bar of law, the case must go on. To hold otherwise would constitute the criminal Courts into an appellate Tribunal which may well question the propriety or correctness of the District Magistrate's opinon. That clearly is not the province of a criminal Court which cannot go behind the sanction.

[6] The learned Government pleader drew my attention to S. 14 of the General Clauses Act. I do not propose to base my decision upon that section though prima facie I do not see any reason why the principle involved in that section should not be applicable to the present case.

[7] I would further say that there is considerable force in the argument of the learned counsel for the Crown that the present complaint has been filed by an Inspector as required by S. 74 (1) and that the word 'or' is disjunctively used. Though under the instructions above referred to a full-time Inspector has been told to take the sanction of the District Magistrate and not to take action himself, there is nothing in the Act to prevent an Inspector from filing a complaint. Indeed S. 74 (1) specifically authorises an Inspector to start a prosecution himself without the sanction of any superior officer. In view however of what I have held in paras 4 and 5 above I do not express any final opinion on this aspect of the case. The application for revision fails and is dismissed.

POLLOCK AND SEN JJ.

Mahadeosingh Hirasingh and another — Defendants—Appellants v. Balmukund Jayanarain and others—Plaintiffs—Respondents.

First Appeal No. 35 of 1939, Decided on 16-10-1946, from decree of Addl. Dist. Judge, Nagpur, D/-13-12-1938.

(a) Contract Act (1872), Ss. 42, 44 and 45 — Joint creditors and debtors — Rights and liabilities of — Principles of English Common Law if applies.

Under the English Common Law, the rule of survivorship applies to the case of joint creditors as well as to the case of joint debtors, but under S. 42 and S. 45, Contract Act, the rule of survivorship is not recognised and the devolution of joint liabilities and rights is governed by the provisions of Ss. 42 and 45 respectively. Under the English Common Law, the release of one debtor operates to release his co-debtors, but that is not so in India, as under S. 44 a release of one of joint promisors by the promisee does not discharge the other joint promisor or joint promisors; neither does it free the joint promisors so released from responsibility to the other joint promisor or joint promisors. The principles underlying the English Common Law regarding the rights of creditors and debtors are, therefore, not applicable in view of the provisions of the Indian Contract Act which are different from the English rule. [Para 17]

(b) Contract Act (1872), S. 38—Scope.

Section 38 deals with consequences which flow from an offer of performance which has been refused but does not deal with the legal consequences of the offer which has been accepted. The section is therefore not helpful in deciding the question whether payment to one of joint creditors is binding on the other creditors. Opinion of White C. J. in 36 Mad. 544, Foll. [Para 18]

(c) Transfer of Property Act (1882), S. 60— Payment to one of several co-mortgagees if operates as valid discharge of debt.

In the case of co mortgagees, the presumption of equity that creditors are tenants-in-common is applicable in India in the absence of any contract to the contrary. Accordingly a payment of the mortgage debt by the mortgagor to one of several co-mortgagees who has no authority to receive payments on behalf of others will not bind the other co-mortgagees and will not affect their right to recover the amount due to them notwithstanding the discharge given by the co-mortgagor receiving payment. Dissenting view of White C. J., in 36 Mad. 544, Foll.; Case law discussed. [Para 22]

D. T. Mangalmoorti and R. N. Padhye— for Appellants.

M. R. Bobde, M. D. Khandekar (for Nos. 1 and 2) and P. P. Deo (for No. 3)—for Respondents.

Judgment.—This is an appeal which arises out of a suit on a mortgage. Appellant 1, Mahadeosingh is the father of appellant 2, Mohansingh. Mahadeosingh was indebted to respondents 1 to 3 and executed a simple mortgage in their favour on 22-8-1927 for Rs. 7,999 and agreed to pay the sum with compound interest at Rs. 0-13-0 per cent per mensem with annual rests. The amount was payable in 11 instalments on Baisakh Sudi 15 of every year commencing from Fasli year 1337 (1928 A.D.). The amount and the date of payment of the several instalments are as given below:

Amount of instalment.	Date fixed for payment.
(1) Rs. 500 plus interest due on the entire amount ...	4-5-1928
(2) Rs. 500 plus interest due on the balance ...	23-5-1929
(3) Rs. 600 " " ...	12-5-1930
(4) Rs. 600 " " ...	2-5-1931
(5) Rs. 650 " " ...	2-5-1932
(6) Rs. 650 " " ...	9-5-1933
(7) Rs. 800 " " ...	29-4-1934
(8) Rs. 850 " " ...	18-5-1935
(9) Rs. 900 " " ...	6-5-1936
(10) Rs. 950 " " ...	25-5-1937
(11) Rs. 999 " " ...	14-5-1938
Total Rs. 7,999

In default of payment of any instalment on the due date, the defaulted instalment was to carry compound interest at the rate of Rs. 1-4-0 per cent per mensem from the date of default till payment. In default in the payment of three instalments the entire amount was to carry compound interest at Rs. 1-4-0 per cent per mensem with annual rests till realisation. The property mortgaged was 16 anna malguzari share of mahal No. 2 of mauza Tandulwani with cultivating rights in sir.

[2] Govindrao Sheoram Kedar Patil, respondent No. 3, gave a notice (Ex. P.-10) on 20-11-1934 to Mahadeosingh in which he stated that the mortgagees had received Rs. 1,000 and Rs. 125 towards a part payment of the mortgage debt and that he had further received Rs. 1,500 in three instalments towards his debt and called on him to pay the balance of the debt due within 8 days of the receipt of the notice. Mahadeosingh in his reply dated 26-11-1934 (Ex. P.-12) stated that in addition to Rs. 1,000 paid to the three mortgagees on 4-1-1928 he had paid Rs. 7,730 to Govindrao who had written a letter on 19-1-1930 recording full satisfaction of the mortgage and had agreed to return the mortgage-deed to Mahadeosingh after getting it from Balmukund. Govindrao in his reply dated 25-12-1934 (Ex. P.-13) repudiated the allegations of Mahadeosingh as false and stated that he did not receive the payments as alleged by him (Mahadeosingh) and not write a letter recording full satisfaction of the mortgage and suggested that blank papers bearing his signature might have been utilised to prepare false receipts and a false letter recording full satisfaction of the mortgage.

[3] Balmukund, appellant No. 1, gave a notice to Mahadeosingh on 2-1-1935. A copy of the notice has not been filed in the case. Mahadeosingh in his reply dated 10-1-1935 (Ex. 1-D-4) stated that he had made payment to Govindrao according to the agreement and that he had informed Balmukund about these payments after they had been made to Govindrao.

[4] The respondents filed Civil Suit No. 15-A of 1936 on 8-2-1936 in the Court of the 2nd Additional District Judge, Nagpur, against the appellants to recover Rs. 14,171 on the basis of the mortgage deed dated 22-8-1927 (Ex. P-1) and in default of payment prayed for a decree for sale of the mortgaged property. The plaintiffs filed with the plaint two schedules, Sch. A showed Rs. 10,595 as the amount due to plaintiffs 1 and 2 and Sch. B Rs. 3,576 as the amount due to plaintiff 3. Plaintiffs 1 and 2 gave credit for repayments of Rs. 593-12-0 and Rs. 74-4-0 on 4-1-1928 and 12-5-1928 respectively. Plaintiff 3 gave credit for the repayment of Rs. 406 4-0 and Rs. 50-12-0 on 4-1-1928 and 12-5-1928. Thus the plaintiffs gave credit for repayment of Rs. 1,000 on 4-1-1928 and Rs. 125 on 12-5 1928. Plaintiff 3 gave credit for the repayments of Rs. 200, Rs. 1,000 and Rs. 300 made to him in his Sch. B but did not state the dates of these repayments. The plaintiffs allowed a credit for Rs. 65 on account of the interest which they had deducted in advance at the time of the execution of the mortgage, Rs. 38-9-9 in Sch. A and Rs. 26-6-6 in Sch. B. (After stating the pleadings of the parties and the evidence adduced in the trial Court their Lordships proceeded as follows:)

[5] The trial Court found that the mortgage was duly executed by Mahadeosingh and was for consideration and was also binding on his son Mohan, defendant 2, as it was for the payment of antecedent debts and for meeting expenses for agriculture and for family purposes. The Court held that the agreements set up by defendant 1 had not been proved, that the repayments alleged by defendant 1 had not been made, and that the receipt dated 28-4-1928 (Ex. 1-D-22) and the letter dated 19-1-1930 (Ex. 1-D 41) were not executed by Govindrao in favour of Mahadeosingh. The Court allowed compound interest at the rate of 0-13-0 per cent. per mensem from the date of the mortgage till the date when the entire amount became exigible and simple interest at the rate of 1 per cent. per mensem on the defaulted instalments till 1-1-1932 and thereafter simple interest at 7 per cent. per annum from that date till the date of suit. The Court determined Rs. 7,341-5-0 as the amount due to plaintiffs 1 and 2, Rs. 2,810-9-0 as the amount due to plaintiff 3 on the date of suit. The Court thus determined Rs. 10,151-14-0 as the amount due on the date of the suit and allowed further interest at 7 per cent. per annum from the date of suit till 13-6-1939, the date fixed for payment, and costs. It accordingly passed a joint preliminary decree for sale on 13-12-1938. The date fixed for payment was 13-6-1939 and the amount payable was Rs. 13,130-6-9; Rs. 10,151-14-0 for principal, Rs. 1 446-2-9 for interest till 13-6-1939, and Rs. 1,532-6-0 for costs. The amount of Rs. 13,130-6-9 was to carry interest at 6 per cent. per annum from 13-6-1939 till realisation.

[6] It is against this decree that the defendants have filed the present appeal. (After stating the arguments and further facts in the case the judgment proceeded as follows:)

[7] The questions for decision in this appeal are :

(1) whether there was an agreement between the parties at the time of the execution of the mortgage in suit that interest at 12 per cent per mensem was payable in case the entire amount was paid by the mortgagor before 4-5-1928, the date fixed for payment of the first instalment;

(2) whether oral evidence was admissible to prove the agreement ;

(3) whether there was an agreement between the parties that Mahadeosingh, the mortgagor, was entitled to pay the instalments or the amount due under the mortgage to any of the mortgagees and the repayments made by him to one of them were to be binding on the other mortgagees;

(4) (a) whether the repayments made by Mahadeosingh to Govindrao were binding on plaintiffs 1 and 2 and whether they were entitled to recover the entire sum due to them notwithstanding the said repayments; (b) whether the discharge, if any, of the mortgage by Govindrao was binding on plaintiffs 1 and 2;

(5) whether Mahadeosingh paid to Govindrao the following items :

(i) Rs. 4105, on 28th April 1928.

(ii) Rs. 300, on 28th October 1928.

(iii) Rs. 900, on 20th December 1928.

(iv) Rs. 1300, on 13th January 1930.

(6) whether the mortgage in suit was satisfied by a repayment of Rs. 1300, on 13-1-1930;

(7) whether Govindrao executed the receipt exhibit 1-D-22 for Rs. 4105, on 28-4-1928;

(8) whether Govindrao executed the letter Ex. 1-D-41 on 19-1-1930.

(9) whether the signatures on the documents Ex. 1-D-22 and 1-D-41 are those of Govindrao;

(10) to what relief are the plaintiffs entitled,

[8] On a careful consideration of the evidence in the case tested in the light of probabilites we have reached the conclusion that Mahadeosingh has failed to prove that there was an agreement to charge interest at 12 per cent per mensem in case the entire amount was paid on or before 4-5-1928, or that there was an agreement between the parties that Mahadeosingh was entitled to pay the instalments or the amount due under the mortgage to any one of the mortgagees and the repayments made by him were to be binding on the other mortgagees. In our opinion oral evidence was not admissible under S. 92, Evidence Act, to contradict or vary the terms of the mortgage.

[9] The next question for decision is whether the repayments made by Mahadeosingh to Govindrao were binding on plaintiffs 1 and 2 and whether they were entitled to recover the sum due to them notwithstanding the repayments made to Govindrao, and whether the discharge, if any, of the mortgage by Govindrao was binding on plaintiffs 1 and 2.

[10] Whether a payment made to one of several persons jointly entitled according to the terms of the deed to the money secured by a mortgage, would be a good discharge, is a question which is not perhaps entirely free from doubt. In England, payment to one of several joint creditors will discharge the debtor at law, but a different rule has always been followed in equity, as the money is presumed to have been advanced by the lenders as tenants in common and not as joint tenants: (Ghose, Law of Mortgage, 5th Edition, p. 479.)

[11] The mortgage in suit was for a consideration of Rs. 7999. Out of this consideration plaintiffs 1 and 2 advanced Rs. 4750, and Govindrao, plaintiff 3 advanced Rs. 3249. Plaintiffs 1 and 2 and plaintiff 3 were respectively entitled to an interest in the mortgaged property in proportion to the shares of the consideration which they respectively advanced: (see S. 45, Transfer of Property Act. In a series of cases it has been held that in the absence of a contract to the contrary a presumption of equity arises and that the mortgagees are tenants-in-common both of the debt as well as of the mortgage security.

(12) Balmukund and Bhikulal (plaintiffs 1 and 2) are members of the same family with Balmukund as the manager. Govindrao is of a different caste and does not belong to the family of plaintiffs 1 and 2. We have found that there was no agreement authorising Mahadeosingh to pay instalments or the amount due under the mortgage to Govindrao and that Govindrao had no authority to receive payments on behalf of the plaintiffs. The question for decision therefore is whether in the absence of any authority payments made by Mahadeosingh to Govindrao, one of the creditors, were binding on plaintiffs 1 and 2 and whether the discharge, if any, of the mortgage given by Govindrao to Mahadeosingh was binding on plaintiffs 1 and 2.

[13] In (1840) 56 R. R. 707[1] in an action by three plaintiffs for a joint demand, the defendant's plea of accord and satisfaction with one of the plaintiffs, by a part payment in cash and set-off of a debt due from that one to the defendant, was held good even without any authority from the other two plaintiffs to make the settlement.

[14] In (1889) 22 Q B. D. 537[2] it was held that according to equity joint creditors must, prima facie, be taken to be interested as tenants in common and not as joint tenants and that the plea of the defendant of accord and satisfaction was good only as concerned the claim of the plaintiff who was party to the accord and satisfaction but was defective as regards the plaintiffs who were not parties to it. At p. 541 Wills J., stated the distinction between the rule which obtained at law and in equity in these terms:

"The reason why the defence is a good one at law is that the two creditors are treated as having a joint interest in the debt, with its incident of survivorship, and the satisfaction to one of the parties of a joint demand due to himself and others puts an end to the joint demand, and he cannot afterwards, by joining the other parties with him as plaintiffs, recover the debt; nor can a right of action be supposed to exist which, if it existed, might survive to the very person who had already received full value: (1840) 7 M. & W. 264.[1]

In equity, however, it would appear as if the general rule with regard to money lent by two persons to a third was that they will prima facie be regarded as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants, both of the debt and of any security held for it: (1631) 1 Eq. Ca. Abr. 290,[3] (1751) 2 Ves. Sen. 253[4] cited in (1732) 1 White & Tudor, Edn. 5, 208.[5] 'Though they take a joint security,' says Lord Alvanley, M. R., 'each means to lend his own money and to take back his own': (1798) 3 Ves. 628.[6] Where a mortgage debt has been paid to one of the mortgagees accordingly it was held that the loan was not discharged, and that the concurrence of the other mortgagees was necessary to make a good title: (1864) 12 W R 926.[7] This is on the ground that the debt is held by the two in common and not jointly, and the principle seems to us equally applicable whether the debt is secured by a mortgage or is merely the subject of a personal contract."

[15] In (1901) 2 Ch. 160[8] it was held that payment to one of the mortgagees during the lifetime of the other mortgagees, though a good discharge of the debt at law, only discharges the security to the extent of the payee's beneficial interest (if any), even though the payee ultimately becomes the survivor in the joint account. At p. 167 Farwell J., observed:

"If a mortgagor chooses to pay otherwise than in strict accordance with the terms of his contract he does so at his own risk. The proviso for redemption in a mortgage to several is never expressed to take effect on payment to the mortgagees or either of them, but to the mortgagees or the survivor of them, and if a mortgagor pays to one, although such payment may be a good discharge at law, yet the matter is at large when he comes into equity, and the Court takes into consideration all the facts of the case, and ascertains whether the payee was beneficially entitled to the whole or to a part only, or whether he was a trustee with the other mortgagee, and treats the payment as good in whole, or in part, or altogether bad accordingly."

[16] In 20 Mad. 461[9] it was held that a discharge of a mortgage by one of joint mortgagees is valid and binding on the other co-mortgagees in the absence of any proof that it was fraudulent. The learned Judges of the Madras High Court followed the decision in (1840) 7 M. & W. 264[1] and doubted the correctness of the decision in (1889) 22 Q. B. D. 537.[2] As pointed out by Sir Bhashyam Ayyangar in 25 Mad. 26[10] at pp. 28, 39 the authority of (1840) 7 M. & W. 264[1] is considerably shaken by the decision of the Court of Chancery in (1901) 2 Ch. 160.[8]

[17] Under the English Common Law the rule of survivorship applies to the case of joint creditors as well as to the case of joint debtors, but under S. 42 and S 45, Contract Act, the rule of survivorship is not recognised and the devolution of joint liabilities and rights is governed by the provisions of Ss. 42 and 45, Contract Act, respectively. Under the English Common Law the release of one debtor operates to release his co-debtors, but that is not so in India, as under S. 44 a release of one of joint promisors by the promisee does not discharge the other joint promisor or joint promisors; neither does it free the joint promisors so released from responsibility to the other joint promisor or joint promisors. The principles underlying the English Common Law regarding the rights of creditors and debtors are, therefore, not applicable in view of the provisions of the Indian Contract Act which are different from the English rule.

[18] Section 38, Contract Act, provides that where a promisor has made an offer of performance to the promisee, and the offer has not been accepted, the promisor is not responsible for non-performance, nor does he thereby lose his rights under the contract, and an offer to one of several joint promisees has the same legal consequences as an offer to all of them. As pointed out by White C. J. in 36 Mad. 544[11] at p. 545 the section deals with the consequences which flow from an offer of performance which has been refused but does not deal with the legal consequences of the offer which has been accepted. Section 38, Contract Act, on which the decision in 20 Mad. 461[9] was based, is therefore not helpful in deciding the question whether payment to one creditor is binding on the other creditors. The solution turns on the determination of the question whether the creditors who advanced money on security or otherwise are joint tenants or tenants in common. The conflict is whether the rule of law as laid down in (1840) 7 M. & W. 264[1] applies or whether the presumption of equity on which (1889) 22 Q. B. D. 537[2] was decided should prevail.

[19] The case in 20 Mad. 461[9] was doubted in 25 Mad. 26,[10] 20 M. L. J. 109[12] at p. 712, 35 Mad. 685[13] at p. 687, 27 Bom. 292,[14] at p. 294 : 38 Cal. 342[15] at p. 349 and 1 N.L R. 24[16] at p. 27; but was followed in 1 I C. 219[17] and approved by majority in 36 Mad. 544[11] which held that one of several payees of a negotiable instrument could give a valid discharge of the entire debt, but White C. J., in a dissenting judgment was of opinion that the equitable presumption of tenancy in common should prevail. The decision in 36 Mad. 544,[11] was followed in A. I. R. 1917 Mad. 269,[18] but Coutts-Trotter J., stated that it was desirable that the whole matter should be reconsidered by the Privy Council in view of the very careful judgment of the High Court of Calcutta in 38 Cal. 342,[15] which was contrary to the decision of the Madras Full Bench.

[20] The opinion taken by White C. J., has been followed in numerous cases: 21 C. L. J. 570,[19] A. I. R. 1921 Pat. 27,[20] 41 I. C. 921,[21] A. I. R. 1943 Pat. 1,[22] 1937 Rang. L. R. 1.[23] In A. I. R. 1919 Cal. 593[24] and A. I. R. 1927 Cal. 425,[25] it was held that a payment by a mortgagor to one of the mortgagees was valid to the extent of his share but did not affect the rights of the other mortgagees to sue for recovery of the sums due to them. In 41 ALL. 631[26] it was held that, notwithstanding a discharge by one co-mortgagee, a suit was maintainable by the other mortgagee to recover his share of the debt.

[21] In 3 C. P. L. R. 15[27] at p. 16 and 1 N. L. R. 24[16] at p. 27, it was held that a payment of a mortgage debt to one of the mortgagees will not discharge the security in equity which treats the interest of the creditors as-tenants-in common.

[22] The dissenting judgment of White C. J., in 36 Mad. 544,[11] has received the approval of eminent jurists: (Pollock and Mulla, Indian Contract Act, Edn. 7, p. 260; Mulla, Transfer of Property Act, Edn. 2, p. 379).

[23] In our opinion, the correct rule has been enunciated by White C. J., in his dissenting judgment in 36 Mad. 544,[11] and the presumption of equity that creditors are tenants-in-common is applicable in the absence of any contract to the contrary. Accordingly we hold that the repayments made by Mahadeo Singh to Govind Rao were not binding on plaintiffs 1 and 2 and they were entitled to recover the entire sum due to them notwithstanding the said repayments, and that the discharge of the mortgage by Govindrao, even if proved, does not affect the right of plaintiffs 1 and 2 to recover the amount due to them under the mortgage.

* * * * *

(After discussing the evidence on questions 5 to 9 formulated above, their Lordships proceeded.):

[24] After a careful and anxious consideration of the case we have reached the conclusions which may be summarised thus: Mahadeo Singh has failed to prove that he repaid Rs. 4,105 on 28-4-1928, Rs. 300 on 23-10-1928, Rs. 900 on 20-12-1928 and Rs. 1,300 on 19-1-1930. He has also failed to prove that the document Ex. 1-D-22, receipt for Rs. 4,105 dated 28-4-1928, and the letter dated 19-1-1930 Ex. 1 D-41 were executed and signed by Govindrao and that the signatures on those documents were his.

[25] The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Second Appeal No. 587 of 1943, Decided on 17-9-1947, from Appellate decree of First Addl. Dist. Judge, Nagpur, D/- 7-9-1943.

(a) Transfer of Property Act (1882), S. 52—Scope —'Court' includes revenue Court—Proceedings for recovery of arrears of rent pending in revenue Court — Lease of land by tenant — S. 52 held applied.

Section 52, of the Act is not confined in terms to civil Courts. The procedings before a revenue Court may also operate as lis pendens. A revenue officer when dealing with an application under S. 58-B, C. P. Tenancy Act, for realising arrears of rent is a revenue Court as defined in S. 5, Civil P. C., and when during the pendency of such proceedings the tenant leases out his field, the proceedings operate as lis pendens. Since the arrears of rent are the first charge on the holding under S. 58A, C. P. Tenancy Act, the question before the revenue officer is whether the holding should be sold to recover the money and therefore a right to immovable property is directly and specifically in question : 14 A. I. R. 1927 All. 679, Ref. [Paras 2, 3]

Even if S. 52, does not apply proprio vigore the principle underlying it must apply. [Para 4]

V. V. Kelkar — for Appellants.

D. T. Mangalmurti — for Respondents.

Judgment.—Defendants 1 to 3 were the occupancy tenants of field No. 21/1 in Umrer. As they had omitted to pay the rent due, the landlord applied to a revenue officer under S. 58-B, C. P. Tenancy Act, to realize the arrears. This application was made on 17-7-1941. While it was pending defendants 1 to 3 leased out this field and another field to the plaintiffs for the year 1942-43. On 15-6-1942 the field was sold by the revenue officer under S. 58-B (1) (b), and it was purchased by defendant 4. The sale was confirmed on 23-7-1942, and defendant 1 was placed in possession on 7-8-1942, disturbing the possession of the plaintiffs. The present suit was filed by the plaintiffs on 19-8-1942 to recover the damages which they suffered by being dispossessed.

[2] The lower appellate Court held that the plaintiffs took the lease with the full knowledge of the proceedings pending before the revenue officer and that the principle of lis pendens applied. It is contended that S. 52, T. P. Act, in which the doctrine of lis pendens is embodied, does not apply to the present case because no proceedings were pending in any Court and no right to immovable property was directly and specifically in question. The revenue officer when dealing with this application under S. 58-B, was, I think, clearly a revenue Court, as defined in S. 5, Civil P. C. Section 52, T. P. Act, is not confined in terms to civil Courts, and I see no reason why it should be so confined. In 50 ALL. 22[1] it was held that partition proceedings before a revenue Court operated as lis pendens, and it seems to me that proceedings before a revenue Court under S. 58-B, should also operate as lis pendens.

[3] As regards the objection that no right to immovable property was directly and specifically in question, the answer is that the arrears of rent were a first charge on the holding under S. 58-A, C. P. Tenancy Act, and the question before the revenue officer was whether the holding should be sold in order to recover the money that constituted this charge. Therefore, I would say that a right to immovable property was directly and specifically in question.

[4] Even if S. 52, T. P. Act, does not apply proprio vigore, then I would say that the principle underlying it must apply. The principle on which it rests was explained by Turner L. J. in (1857) 1 De. G. & J. 566[2] :

"It is, as I think, a doctrine common to the Courts both of Law and Equity, and rests, as I apprehend, upon this foundation that it would plainly be impossible that any action or suit could be brought to a successful termination, if alienations pendente lite were permitted to prevail."

The principle was applied in several cases before the Transfer of Property Act was enacted : see Mulla's Transfer of Property Act, Edn. 2, pp. 218 and 219, and the cases there cited. I consider therefore that the lower appellate Court was correct in holding that the purchaser was not bound by a transfer pendente lite.

[5] In this Court the counsel for the respondents has relied on S. 138, C. P. Land Revenue Act, which he contends applies by virtue of S. 58-D (2), C. P. Tenancy Act. Section 138 (1), however, does not apply to tenant rights recognized by or arising out of the Central Provinces Tenancy Act, 1898, and by virtue of S. 110, C. P. Tenancy Act of 1920, this would include tenant rights recognized by or arising under the Central Provinces Tenancy Act of 1920. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Misc. Second Appeal No. 151 of 1946, Decided on, 7-8-1947, from order of Dist Judge, Wardha 26-4-1946.

Limitation Act (1908), Art. 181—Application for execution—Execution stayed pending decision of certain suit—On decision of suit obstruction to execution removed and decree-holder applying to executing Court to proceed with his previous application—This later application is not governed by Art. 181.

Where an application is for the time being and for no fault of the decree-holder filed it should be deemed to be pending before the Court, and it is, in fact, the duty of the Court to have a vigilant eye and to find out if the obstruction which resulted in the filing of that application for execution had been removed. It is not the duty of the decree-holder to find out if such obstruction was removed and to remind the executing Court of its duty to proceed with the execution application pending before it. [Para 7]

A decree-holder obtained a final decree for sale of the mortgaged property and applied on 4-7-1938 for execution. The sons of the judgment-debtor filed a suit for a declaration that their interest in the mortgaged property was not liable to be sold in execution. This suit was dismissed and an appeal against it was also dismissed. They preferred a second appeal to the High Court and in that appeal the High Court passed an order directing the stay of execution. This was intimated to the trial Court which on 15-4-1939 passed an order 'execution filed.' The second appeal was dismissed by the High Court on 29-2-1940 and the stay order passed by it came to an end on that date. On 31-7-1945 the decree-holder applied to the executing Court to proceed with his application dated 4-7-1938 as the obstacle in the way of execution by the stay order of the High Court was removed :

Held that the application dated 31-7-1945 was not one which the decree-holder was bound to file and was not required under the procedure prescribed. That application could not even be said to be a revival application because its object was merely to remind the Court that it had to proceed with and dispose of the execution application pending before it. Such application was not governed by Article 181 or by any other Article. [Para 9]

N. V. Gadgil—for Appellants.
R. V. Khare—for Respondent.

Judgment. — This is a miscellaneous second appeal by the judgment-debtors and the only question involved in this appeal is whether the execution application dated 4-7-1938 for sale of mortgaged property was within time.

[2] A few relevant facts are these. The decree-holder respondent obtained a final decree for sale of the mortgaged property and applied on 4-7-1938 for execution of that decree. The sons of the judgment-debtor, Pandurang, filed a suit for a declaration that their interest in the mortgaged property was not liable to be sold in execution of the mortgage decree. The suit was dismissed on 14-3-1938 and the appeal preferred against that decree in the lower appellate Court was also dismissed on 28-6-1938. They preferred a second appeal to the High Court and in that appeal the High Court passed an order on 19-10-1938 ordering the sale of the mortgaged property in execution of the decree pending in the trial Court to be stayed. This was intimated to the trial Court and it passed an order 'execution filed'. This was on 15-4-1939.

[3] This second appeal No. 565 of 1938 was dismissed by this Court on 29-2-1940. There was then a Letters Patent Appeal and a remand to the second appellate Court and the final decision by the Letters Patent Appeal which is reported in I. L. R. (1946) Nag. 741.[1] For the decision of the present appeal it is however not necessary for me to examine the effect of the Letters Patent Appeal as to my mind it is obvious that the stay order passed by this Court in second appeal No. 565 of 1938 came to an end on 29-2-1940, the date on which that appeal was dismissed.

[4] It is however not disputed before me that the second appellate Court did not intimate to the trial Court the fact that the stay order was vacated by the dismissal of the second appeal on 29-2-1940. This may perhaps be due to the fact that Letters Patent Appeal was filed. On 31-7-1945, the decree-holder applied to the executing Court to proceed with his application dated 4-7-1938 as the obstacle in the way of execution by the stay order of the High Court was removed, that order having come to an end on 29-2-1940.

[5] It was contended by the judgment-debtors that the execution application dated 4-7-1938 was no longer pending as it was disposed of on 15-4-1939 and the same could not be proceeded with again. It was also argued before me that an application such as the one dated 31-7-1945, assuming it to be a revival application, was governed by Art. 181, Limitation Act, and that application not being filed within three years of 29-2-1940 was barred by limitation. The learned counsel for the appellants relied on A. I. R. 1944 Pesh 17.[2]

[6] I have read and examined carefully the decision relied on by the appellants' learned counsel. I do not find my way, I say this with respect, to agree with that decision in so far as it decides that the application filed in that case was an application for revival of the execution and that such a revival application was governed by Art. 181, Limitation Act. Mir Ahmad J. has based his decision on certain authorities one of which is 27 ALL. 334.[3] Whilst relying on this case the learned Judge himself observed thus :

"The judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council reported in A.I.R. 1935 Lah. 911[4] also indirectly indicates that this is a correct proposition of law."

In 27 ALL. 334[3] their Lordships of the Privy Council have not at all considered the applicability of Art. 181, Limitation Act, to what is loosely described as a revival application. The point is not similarly considered by the Lahore High Court in A. I. R. 1935 Lah 911.[4] The other case relied on namely A. I. R. 1927 ALL. 16[5] has been considered and not approved by the Full Bench in I. L. R. (1940) ALL. 246.[6]

[7] There is, on the other hand, a string of cases in which the point has been carefully and exhaustively discussed. It has been pointed out that where an application is for the time being and for no fault of the decree-holder filed it should be deemed to be pending before the Court, and it is, in fact the duty of the Court to have a vigilant eye and to find out if the obstruction which resulted in the filing of that application for execution had been removed. It is not the duty of the decree-holder to find out if such obstruction was removed and to remind the executing Court of its duty to proceed with the execution application pending before it. It has further been pointed out that every application whether it is according to the Civil Procedure Code or not is not governed by Art. 181, Limitation Act, and surely the application of the decree-holder dated 31-7-1945 was one of such applications.

[8] It is needless for me to refer to various decisions of the different High Courts on the point. It would be sufficient to refer to I. L. R. (1940) ALL. 246[6] in which a number of decisions, for and against, have been considered: 63 Cal. 57[7]; 43 ALL. 383[8]

[9] In my view therefore the application dated 31-7-1945 was not one which the decree-holder was bound to file and was not required under the procedure prescribed. That application cannot even be said to be a revival application because its object was merely to remind the Court that it had to proceed with and dispose of the execution application pending before it. I further hold that such application is not governed by Art. 181, Limitation Act, or by any other article of that Act.

[10] There is no question in this case of showing any sympathy to the decree-holder and there is also no question of hardship he is to be relieved from. The simple question is whether the execution application is in time or not and it is quite obvious to my mind that it is in time and has to be proceeded with.

[11] I uphold the orders of the two Courts below and dismiss this appeal with costs.

Misc. First Appeal No. 28 of 1943, Decided on 9-9-1947, from order of Sub-Judge, First Class, Akola, D/- 25-9-1942.

Civil P. C. (1908), S. 16 (d) — Interest in immovable property — Lease of coal mines — Agreement to pay three pies per ton on all coal sold during term of lease — Suit for recovery of such amount — Obligation is one annexed to ownership of immovable property but not amounting to interest therein — S. 16 (d) does not apply — T. P. Act (1882), S. 40.

One S agreed to pay P three pies per ton on all coal sold by him during the term of the lease of coal mines in district C. H then took over the business of the working of the mines with the knowledge of the agreement between S and P and certain payments were made to P. P who resided in district A brought a suit ar A where the money was payable, for the balance that might be found due after taking accounts. The Court held that the suit fell under S. 16 (d) and should be filed in Court at C:

Held, that the suit was for the commission on coal sold in the past. The coal was not immovable property, and the obligation was one falling under S. 40, T. P. Act as an obligation annexed to the ownership of immovable property but not amounting to an interest therein. Section 16 (d), Civil P. C., therefore did not apply to this case, and the suit could be brought in the Court at A, where the money was payable. [Para 3]

Judgment. — This is an appeal against an order of the Subordinate Judge, Akola, holding that he has no jurisdiction to try this suit. The allegations in the plaint are as follows: One Shahabuddin had obtained from the Provincial Government a lease of three coal mines in the Chhindwara district. He got into debt and agreed to transfer these mines to the plaintiffs and others. Subsequently he agreed to transfer his rights to S. C. Cambata and Co Ltd. (defendant 1). As a result of these conflicting agreements there was a civil suit which was compromised, and under the compromise S. C. Cambata (defendant 3) on behalf of S. C. Cambata and Co. Ltd., (defendant 1) agreed on 28-1-1930 to pay to the plaintiff three pies per ton on all coal sold by his company during the term of these three leases. Subsequently the Hirdagarh Collieries Ltd. (defendant 2) was formed and took over the business of the working of these mines with notice of the above agreement. Certain payments were made in accordance with that agreement, and the plaintiffs, who are residents of Akola, brought the present suit at Akola for the balance that might be found due to them on this agreement after taking accounts. The defendants contended, and the lower Court held, that it was a suit for the determination of an interest in immovable property under S. 16 (d), Civil P. C., and should therefore have been instituted in the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the property was situate, i. e. at Chhindwara.

[2] Most of the argument has been based on the statement in para. 6 of the plaint:

"The agreement with the plaintiffs ..... being in respect of the enjoyment of the mines, will go with them to whosoever may take them over from defendant 1 or from defendant 3."

It was apparently contended and held by the lower Court that this amounted to a plea that there was a covenant running with the land and that the suit was therefore one for the determination of an interest in immovable property. The plaintiffs apparently had in view S. 40, T. P. Act, which provides that where a third person is entitled to the benefit of an obligation arising out of contract, and annexed to the ownership of immovable property, but not amounting to an interest therein or easement thereon, such right or obligation may be enforced against a transferee with notice thereof. It will be observed that this refers to the benefit of an obligation not amounting to an interest in immovable property.

[3] Various cases have been cited in which it was held that an obligation amounted to an interest in immovable property, but none of those cases is precisely in point. There was no obligation on the defendants to work the mines at all. It was only after they had extracted coal and sold it that the plaintiff became entitled to three pies per ton of such coal. The plaintiffs are suing for their commission on coal sold in the past. The coal is not immovable property, and it seems to me that the obligation is one falling under S. 40, T. P. Act as an obligation annexed to the ownership of immovable property but not amounting to an interest therein. Section 16 (d), Civil P. C., therefore does not apply to this case, and it is admitted that, if it does not apply, the suit may be brought in the Court at Akola, where the money is admittedly payable.

[4] The appeal is allowed with costs here and below, and the lower Court is directed to proceed with the trial of the suit. Counsel's fee in this Court Rs. 75.

Second Appeal No. 385 of 1942, Decided on 10-2-1947, from appellate decree of Addl. Dist. Judge, Yeotmal, D/-4-7-1942.

(a) Evidence Act (1872), S. 45—Science or art — Meaning of — Test to determine if particular question is of scientific nature.

The words "Science or art" are to be broadly construed, the term "science" not being limited to the higher sciences and the term "art" not being limited to the fine arts but having its original sense of handicraft, trade profession and skill in work, which, with the advance of culture, has been carried beyond the sphere of the common pursuits of life into that of "artistic" and "scientific action". To determine whether a particular question is of a scientific nature or not, and, consequently, whether skilled witnesses may or may not pass their opinions upon it the test to be applied is, "is the subject-matter of inquiry such that inexperienced persons are unlikely to prove capable of forming a correct judgment upon it without the assistance of experts? Does it so far partake of the character of a science or art as to require a course of previous habit or study in order to obtain a competent knowledge of its nature, or is it one which does not require such habit or study?" [Para 5]

(b) Hindu law — Migration —Personal law not ascertainable — Law of domicile — Applicability — Yelmis in Berar are governed by Hindu Law of Madras Presidency.

S. P. Kotval — for Appellant.

V. V. Kelkar — for Respondent.

Judgment. — This is a second appeal by the plaintiff whose suit for partition and first appeal have been dismissed. He claims to have been adopted by Ratnamma to her deceased husband Devanna, the brother of the respondent, with whom he was joint in estate. The parties are Yelmis by caste residing in Kelapur Taluq of District Yeotmal in Berar. Both the lower Courts have found that the parties are governed by the law of adoption prevailing in the Madras Presidency as the Yelmis migrated to Berar from that Presidency, and there is nothing to show that they have renounced their personal law in favour of the law of the place to which they have migrated, viz., Berar.

[2] The learned counsel for the appellant contends that this Court can go into the question of the fact of migration as there is no evidence to support the finding on the point as the Court of first appeal has remarked in para. 4 of its judgment that the oral evidence on the point is of no value and the authorities referred to do not prove migration but only show that some Yelmis are residing in Berar, some in the Nizam's Dominions and some in the Madras Presidency.

[3] What the Additional District Judge meant was that the witnesses had no personal knowledge about the actual migration. He has actually believed those witnesses when they say that the mother-tongue of the community is Telugu, that it lives to the South of the Painganga and the Godavari, that the deity of the community is Venkateshwar of Tirupati in the Madras Presidency, that the customs of this community which is residing in Berar are the same as those of the community residing in the Madras Presidency, and that they are different from the customs of the Kunbi and other communities residing in Berar. So it cannot be said that the finding that the community and the family of the parties migrated from the Madras Presidency to Berar is based merely on what is stated in Sherring's Hindu Tribes and Castes, Russell's Tribes and Castes, and Castes and Tribes of the Nizam's Dominions by Syed Siraj-Ul-Hassan. As the learned Additional District Judge, however, is not very clear in his expression, I will deal with the matter as if he had discarded the evidence of the plaintiff's witnesses on those points.

[4] This gives rise to the question about the evidentiary value of the books mentioned above. They are written by persons who have made a special and systematic study of the customs and manners of the different castes and tribes, the areas occupied by them and other connected matters. They are therefore experts which term is defined in S. 45, Evidence Act, as persons, who are specially skilled in science, art, etc. That section makes the opinion of an expert on a point of foreign law or science, or art or identity of hand-writing or finger impressions relevant when the Court has to form an opinion upon that point. The question then is whether the study of customs and manners of tribes and castes, the areas occupied by them and other connected matters comes within the meaning of 'science or art.'

[5] The words 'science or art' are to be broadly construed, the term 'science' not being limited to the higher sciences and the term 'art' not being limited to the fine arts but having its original sense of handicraft, trade, profession and skill in work, which, with the advance of culture, has been carried beyond the sphere of the common pursuits of life into that of 'artistic' and 'scientific action.' In some cases it may be difficult to determine whether the particular question be one of a scientific nature or not, and consequently, whether skilled witnesses may or may not pass their opinions upon it. The following tests may be applied: Is the subject-matter of inquiry such that inexperienced persons are unlikely to prove capable of forming a correct judgment upon it without the assistance of experts? Does it so far partake of the character of a science or art as to require a course of previous habit or study in order to obtain a competent knowledge of its nature, or is it one which does not require such habit or study? (Woodroffe and Ameer Ali's Law of Evidence, 9 Edn. (1941), p. 447.) Stephen in his Digest of the Law of Evidence says that "the words 'science or art' include all subjects on which a course of special study or experience is necessary to the formation of an opinion."

[6] As stated in Sarkar's Law of Evidence 7 Edn., p. 496:

"It is not necessary 'that a speciality to enable one of its practitioners to be examined as an expert, should involve abstruse scientific conditions.' 'Art, in its legal significance, embraces every operation of human intelligence, whereby something is produced outside of nature; and the term 'science' includes all human knowledge which has been generalized and systematized, and has obtained method, relations and the forms of law.' So that while it may be laid down that the opinions of experts are limited to matters of science, art or skill, yet this limitation is not to be applied in any rigid or narrow sense. As Pigot C. B. said 'the subjects to which this kind of evidence is applicable, are not confined to classified and specified professions. It is applicable wherever peculiar skill and judgment applied to a particular subject, are required to explain results or trace them to their causes'."

[7] The same view has been expressed in Taylor on Evidence, 1931, edition, vol. 2, para. 1418 in the following words:

"In short, it may be laid down as a general rule that the opinion of witnesses possessing peculiar skill is admissible whenever the subject-matter of inquiry is such that inexperienced persons are unlikely to prove capable of forming a correct judgment upon it without such assistance. In other words, this is so when it so far partakes of the character of a science or art as to require a course of previous habit or study to obtain a competent knowledge of its nature."

[8] So the opinions of these experts, Sherring, Russell, and Syed Siraj-ul-Hassan, on the points connected with migration are relevant facts under S. 45, Evidence Act. These relevant facts can be proved in the manner given in proviso 1, to S. 60, Evidence Act, which says:

"Provided that the opinions of experts expressed in any treatise commonly offered for sale, and the grounds on which such opinions are held may be proved by the production of such treatises if the author is dead or cannot be found, or has become incapable of giving evidence, or cannot be called as a witness without an amount of delay or expense which the Court regards as unreasonable."

[9] The evidentiary value to be attached to these opinions which are relevant facts would depend on several factors as in the case of other relevant facts.

[10] The caste of the parties in the present case namely Yelmi is shown as an agricultural tribe in the Central Provinces in Chap. 2 of Part 2, Vol. 2 of Sherring's Hindu Tribes and Castes (1879-81). It is described there as a tribe in the Upper Godavari district speaking Telugu. In Vol. 3 of the same book in Part 2 Chap. 2, Velama is shown as an agricultural tribe in the Madras Presidency. Russell in his Tribes and Castes of the Central Provinces of India, Vol. 4, at p. 593 says about Velama, Elassa, Yelama that it is a Telugu cultivating caste found in large numbers in Vizagapatam and Ganjam, while in 1911 about 700 persons were returned from Chanda and other districts in the Central Provinces. The other books were not produced in this Court, but the information available from them, which the lower Courts have mentioned in their judgments, is of the same type. Even this information suggests migration in view of the very small number of persons of that community found in this Province, and the finding of the Court of First Appeal based on it cannot be interfered with.

[11] The evidence provided by those books, however, is not the only evidence in this case. There is oral evidence to the following effect: (1) This community is called Yelmi in Berar, Velma in the Nizam's Dominions, and Velmavaru in the Madras Presidency (Narsimraja D. W. 1 on commission). (2) Yelmis live only in 9 (nine) villages in Berar. The rest of the caste is living to the South of Painganga (Devanna, P. W. 4). (3) The language of Yelmis in Berar is also Telugu (Devanna P. W. 1, Krishnayya D. W. 1). (4) Dharmagurus (priests) and bhats (bards) of the Yelmis in Berar are from the Madras Presidency (Krishnayya D. W. 1, Ranganna D. W. 2. and Narsimraja D. W. 1, on commission). (5) The Yelmis in Berar worship as their family deity Venkateshwar of Tirupati, which is in the Madras Presidency (Narsimraja D. W. 1 on commission, Krishnayya D. W. 1, and Ranganna D. W. 2). (6) The custom regarding marriage of the Yelmis of Berar resemble those of the same caste in the Madras Presidency. A horse and dagger must be present at the time of the marriage of Yelmis in Berar as well as in the Madras Presidency. (Pulayya D. W. 2 on commission, Devanna P. W. 4). Tambula vidhi takes place at the house of the husband after marriage in this community in Berar as well as in the Madras Presidency (Devanna, P. W. 4, Krishnayya D. W. 1). (7) Both in Berar and in the Madras Presidency the Yelmis mention their family name before their personal name (Pulayya D. W. 2 on commission). (8) The father of Devanna (P. W. 4) used to say that they were not original residents of Berar but that they had come from beyond the river, that is, from the Madras Presidency (Pulayya D. W. 2 on commission). Such evidence is held to be admissible in I. L. R. (1943) Nag. 779[1] (9) There is no temple or guru of Yelmis in Berar (Narsimraja D. W. 1 on commission).

[12] I have carefully gone through the evidence of the witnesses on the points mentioned above and see no reason to disbelieve their testimony on those points. All this evidence goes to show that they have migrated to Berar from the Madras Presidency. The circumstances that they have no temples or gurus in Berar and that they are living only in 9 villages in Berar are decisive, and the Court of First Appeal was right in coming to that conclusion.

[13] The evidence mentioned above not only proves migration but also establishes that they are still following their ancient traditions, customs, and usages, and have not given them up in favour of those prevailing in the area to which they migrated, that is Berar. So their personal law will be the law prevailing in the Madras Presidency according to which a widow is not competent to adopt without the authority to do so from her husband or the consent of her husband's sapindas. The concurrent finding of the two lower Courts is that there was no such authority from Devanna, and that finding could not be and has not been, challenged in this Court. There was no pleading regarding consent of sapindas.

[14] The learned counsel for the appellant then contended that as there was a greater likelihood that the Yelmis migrated to Berar from the Nizam's Dominions the law prevailing in the Nizam's dominions would be applicable to this case and not that prevailing in the Madras Presidency. It appears that some of the families migrated from the Madras Presidency to the Nizam's Dominions and others to other parts and some of those who migrated to the Nizam's Dominions subsequently migrated to other parts. There is, however, nothing to show that those Yelmis who migrated to the Nizam's Dominions abandoned their personal law and adopted the law of the locality; on the other hand they retained their customs and manners as will appear from the evidence of the defendant's witnesses examined on commission. So it is immaterial whether the Yelmi families migrated to Berar from the Madras Presidency or from the Nizam's Dominions to which territory they first migrated from the Madras Presidency. What governs such a case is the personal law of the parties, and it is only when it is not possible to ascertain that that the law of the domicile is applied and then only as a last resort and even then only because it is assumed that it is the personal law: I. L. R. (1938) Nag. 469.[2] The personal law of the parties is known in this case and that is the law which prevails in the Madras Presidency because the Yelmis migrated from that Presidency. It continued to be their personal law when they migrated to the Nizam's Dominions and afterwards when they migrated from those Dominions to Berar.

[15] The learned counsel for the appellant also contended that there was no evidence regarding the migration of the particular family of the parties. There is, however, no force in this contention as it is shown that all the families belonging to this community and living in Berar had migrated to this area from the Madras Presidency. The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Second Appeal No. 748 of 1943. Decided on 19-8-1947, from appellate decree of Addl. Dist Judge, Buldana, D/- 20-9-1943.

Hindu law—Alienation—Mortgage of joint family property by father—In execution of simple money decree against father his share as well as that of his sons sold—Subsequent suit by mortgagee to enforce mortgage—Auction-purchaser can impeach mortgage on ground that it was not for legal necessity.

One G executed a mortgage of the joint family property belonging to himself and his two sons. Part of the consideration of the mortgage was the antecedent debt of G and the rest was advanced as cash. In execution of a simple money decree obtained by certain person against G the entire joint family property. i. e., of G himself and his two sons was sold. Subsequently the mortgagee brought a suit to enforce the mortgage:

Held that the auction purchaser represented not only the interest of G but also of his sons and the objection which was open to G's sons was also open to him. Hence, though to the extent of G's share in the mortgaged property the auction-purchaser would not be able to impeach the mortgage, there was nothing to prevent him from impeaching the mortgage for want of legal necessity to the extent of 2/3rd share of the two sons of G except to the extent of the antecedent debt of G included in the mortgage consideration: Case law referred. [Paras 4 and 5]

Judgment.—This second appeal arises out of a suit to enforce the mortgage dated 19-3-1923 executed by Gopal, father of the defendants 1 and 2, now deceased, in favour of Bandulal, the deceased son of the plaintiff Sunderabai. One of the sons of Gopal who was defendant 1 in the first Court died during the pendency of this second appeal.

[2] The appellant Ramnath was defendant 3 in the trial Court and he was impleaded on the ground that in an auction sale held on 31-1-1935 in execution of a simple money decree against Gopal this appellant purchased a half share of one of the items mortgaged under the mortgage deed in question, viz., Field No. 65. The mortgage claim has been decreed against this item of property by both the Courts below and Ramnath has therefore filed this appeal.

[3] The consideration of the mortgage deed in suit was Rs. 900/- of which Rs. 335/- was the antecedent debt of Gopal and Rs. 565/- was advanced as cash. The plaintiff alleged that this cash consideration was advanced for legal necessity. This fact was denied by the defendant (appellant) and the plaintiff's claim was denied on the ground that the mortgage was not for legal necessity and as such it was not binding against him, at least to the extent of the cash consideration. He further pleaded that though the mortgage would be binding so far as the antecedent debt of Rs. 335/-, that part of the debt and in fact more than double that amount has already been repaid by the mortgagor Gopal. His plea therefore was that the suit should be dismissed against him and against the property he purchased in execution of the money decree. Both the Courts held that the appellant who was the auction-purchaser in execution of the simple money decree against the mortgagor Gopal stands in the shoes of Gopal himself, and as Gopal the mortgagor could not impeach the mortgage for want of legal necessity, the auction-purchaser also could not do the same. The first Court held that legal necessity was not proved but the lower appellate Court has not given any finding on that point. I have myself gone through the evidence of Sunderabai (P. W. 1), and this is the only evidence on the point of legal necessity, and I have no hesitation in confirming the finding of the first Court that legal necessity for the amount of Rs. 565 advanced in cash was not established. In view of this finding the only question that remains to be examined is whether the present appellant can in law impeach the mortgage on the ground that it was not for legal necessity and whether the decision of the Court below on this point is according to law. In my view the decision of the Court below is not justified in law.

[4] The position undoubtedly is that though the decree in execution of which the property was purchased by the present appellant was against Gopal alone, what was sold in execution was not only Gopal's share in the property but the entire interest of the joint family was put to auction and purchased by the auction-purchaser. The auction-purchaser thus represents not only the interest of Gopal but also of Gopal's sons defendants 1 and 2. As, purchaser of the interests of Gopal as well as Gopal's sons, the auction-purchaser could not be said to be only in shoes of Gopal but also of Gopal's sons and the objection which was open to Gopal's sons was also open to him.

[5] It is true that Gopal himself could not have impeached this mortgage on the ground of want of legal necessity as a mortgagor could not deny his own right to mortgage the property included in that mortgage and so to the extent of Gopal's share in that mortgaged property the present appellant would not also be able to impeach that mortgage. There is nothing however to prevent him from impeaching the mortgage for want of legal necessity to the extent of 2/3rd share of the two sons of Gopal except to the extent of the antecedent debt of Gopal included in the mortgage consideration.

[6] The learned counsel for the appellant in supporting his point that the appellant could impeach the mortgage for want of legal necessity relied upon certain decisions some of which were already brought to the notice of the lower appellate Court. That Court however distinguished those authorities on the grounds which appear to me not correct. Leaving aside the decision in 11 N. L. R. 1[1] which may be distinguished, other authorities viz. 33 ALL. 783,[2] A. I. R. 1933 ALL. 180,[3] relying on 15 ALL. 339[4] and 45 ALL 692[5] clearly support the point of view pressed by the appellant. Besides these authorities, there are many others which clearly expose the erroneous view of law taken by the Courts below.

[7] 53 ALL. 21[6] is clearly a case which is on all fours with the present case. Similarly, in 3 Luck. 598[7] and 20 Pat. 904,[8] it is held that an auction-purchaser who purchases the entire joint family interest in any item of the property mortgaged can impeach the mortgage for want of legal necessity.

[8] The learned counsel for the respondents tried to distinguish 53 ALL. 21[6] and other decisions cited from the Allahabad High Court on the ground that according to the Mitakshara law as administered in the United Provinces no coparcener can alienate even for value his undivided interest without the consent of the other coparceners, and such alienation is wholly void; while according to the Mitakshara law as administered in the Central Provinces a coparcener can mortgage or otherwise alienate for value his undivided interest in coparcenary property without the consent of the other coparceners; therefore the alienation is in no case void. It will be valid at least to the extent of his own share and it may be valid wholly if the mortgagor was the father or a manager of the family and the mortgage debt was either for legal necessity or for the benefit of the estate. It was therefore contended that the decisions from the Allahabad High Court would not apply on this point in the Central Provinces. I do not agree with this contention. Though it is true that no coparcener can alienate even his own share under the Hindu law as administered in the United Provinces still the rigour of that rule has been relaxed in favour of the auction-purchaser throughout British India including the United Provinces and Bengal. Thus so far as the question that has to be examined in this appeal is concerned there is no distinction between the United Provinces and the Central Provinces and the decisions from the Allahabad High Court relied on are authorities which cannot be distinguished on the grounds on which the learned counsel for the respondents sought to distinguish them. It is thus clear to me that the appellant-auction-purchaser is entitled to impeach the mortgage on the ground of legal necessity and he can do so successfully in the present case as it has been found that legal necessity to the extent of the cash consideration of Rs. 565 was not established.

[9] The lower appellate Court has also further held that the mortgage cannot be impeached by the auction-purchaser as the property purchased by him was subject to the mortgage of respondent 1 and not free from encumbrance. The respondents' learned counsel conceded that in the circumstances of this case that view of the lower appellate Court is not substainable. There is nothing to show that what was sold was subject to mortgage. It could at best be said that the auction purchaser may have been aware of the existence of the mortgage but the position of the purchaser with knowledge of mortgage is not the same as the position of a purchaser subject to mortgage. A distinction between these two positions is pointed out in I. L. R. (1939) Nag. 655[9] and in the light of that authority it could not be contended that the present case was a case of sale subject to mortgage and that the auction purchaser could not therefore impeach the mortgage on that account.

[10] What is said above brings us to the position that the mortgage is not binding so far as the cash consideration is concerned. It cannot be impeached so far as Rs. 335 which is the antecedent debt of Gopal, father of defendants 1 and 2, and an equal amount by way of interest thereon. Similarly it cannot be impeached to the extent of the share of the mortgagor Gopal which on the date of the mortgage was 1/3rd in the property mortgaged.

[11] The learned counsel for the appellant contended that this debt of Rs. 335 has already been paid off. There is no reason why the repayments which were not expressly made towards any particular part of the consideration could be taken towards satisfaction of the antecedent debt. The appellant cannot while impeaching the mortgage of Gopal take advantage of the repayments made by him. It is thus clear to me that this mortgage is binding against the present appellant to the extent of Rs. 670, that is, Rs. 335 principal with damduppat thereon, and the decree for that amount should be passed in place of Rs. 739-15-0 claimed by the plaintiff in the present case. For satisfaction of this amount the share of Gopal in the mortgaged property that means 1/3rd share would be liable to be sold if the mortgage is not redeemed within the time allowed by the decree.

[12] In conclusion I hold that the decrees passed by the two Courts below should be modified to this extent that a decree will be passed for Rs. 670 with future interest at 6 per cent. per annum and on failure to satisfy this decree within the time allowed, 1/3rd share in survery No. 65 and the trees mortgaged will be sold for the satisfaction of the debt.

[13] As to costs in view of a partial success of the appeallant, the parties to bear their costs throughout.

Order. — This is a revision by the defendants-applicants against the decree passed in Civil Suit No 79 of 1944 by the Judge, Small Cause Court, Akot on 1-11-1944.

[2] Shortly stated, the facts are these. In Civil Suit No. 182-B of 1941, decided on 12-9-1942, Tikaram and others obtained a decree against three persons, namely Rama, Zangoji and Punjaji. Of these Zangoji and Punjaji applied to the Relief Court for scaling down their debts. In these proceedings they had joined Rama as non-applicant 6. This was, however, of no consequence as Rama was neither a necessary nor a proper party to the relief proceedings, he being not then a creditor of the applicants, or a person to whom they owed any liability.

[3] The decree-holders in Civil Suit No. 182-B of 1941 who were parties to the relief proceedings failed to comply with the requirement of S. 8, Relief Act, and in consequence their decretal debt so far as against the applicants before Relief Court, was discharged on 29-9-1942.

[4] The aforesaid decree-holders sued out execution against Rama who was not the applicant before the relief Court and realized from him the entire decretal amount on 12-4-1944. The amount actually recovered was Rs. 179-5-6.

[5] Rama thereafter sued his co-judgment-debtors, Zangoji and Punjaji for contribution to the extent of Rs. 60-0-0 from each one of them. His claim was opposed on the ground that their liability to the decree-holders was already discharged in the relief proceedings and in consequence they were not liable to contribute anything to Rama even though he was required to satisfy the entire decretal amount. This defence was negatived by the lower Court and the claim was decreed. The present application attacks the decree of the lower Court on the ground that it is contrary to law.

[6] It is not disputed that as between the decree-holders and the defendants who were proper parties to the relief proceedings, the decretal debt was discharged. The question is how far this discharge affects the claim of Rama (present plaintiff) to claim contribution from them i. e. his two co-judgment-debtors which right arose in his favour on his satisfying the decree on 12-4-1944 long after the termination of the relief proceedings. The discharge of the decretal debt in the relief proceedings disentitled the decree-holders from executing their decree against Zangoji and Punjaji. The legal effect of the discharge was in no way different from the discharge if given by the creditor or the decree-holder to some of his debtors or judgment-debtors who along with others were jointly and severally liable to him. Neither such an agreement between the creditor and some of his debtors nor the discharge in the relief proceedings can affect the mutual rights and liabilities between the co-debtors or co-promisors. Under S. 43, Contract Act, each of two or more joint promisors may compel every other joint promisor to contribute equally with himself to the performance of the promise, unless a contrary intention appears from the contract. The liability of the defendants as joint promisors—which is a liability between them inter se—is different from the joint and several liability of each of the joint promisors to the creditor. While the latter would be affected by the discharge of the joint promisor whether the discharge is obtained by that promisor from the creditor, either voluntarily or involuntarily, the former, which is a liability inter se between the joint promisors would not thereby be affected. The discharge in relief proceedings is merely an involuntary discharge obtained by a debtor from the debts due to the creditor as a result of a statute.

[7] As soon as a decree was passed the co-judgment-debtors were in the position of joint promisors, each of them being liable jointly and severally to the decree holders and mutually liable to one another to contribute towards the performance of the promise. The applicants before the Relief Court in which the debt was discharged are not absolved from their liability to their joint promisors. This liability between the joint promisors is no doubt latent until one of them satisfies the decretal amount, but on satisfaction of the decree, as was done in the present case on 12-4-1944, that liability becomes patent and can be enforced against other joint promisors and it is in no way affected by the discharge obtained by that joint promisor from the creditor either under an agreement or under the Relief Act.

[8] The discharge in the proceedings before the Debt Relief Court could in no way affect the persons who were not parties thereto or who could not be proper or necessary parties thereto. It could not similarly affect a liability or a debt which came into existence after the termination of the relief proceedings as was the case here. It is held in several decisions of this Court—and quite recently in 1946 N. L. J. 74[1] that the debt contemplated in the Relief Act is the debt due by the applicant and not by one who is not a party to the proceedings. Similarly, the discharge of a debt would affect the rights of persons impleaded as creditors in those proceedings and not the persons who are not parties to the proceedings. It cannot also affect a liability which was not even in existence on the date on which the order of discharge was passed.

[9] The cause of action in the present case arose on 12-4-1944, long after the termination of the relief proceedings. This cause of action was based mainly on the rights and liabilities inter se created between the plaintiff and the present defendants on the date on which the joint decree was passed against them and this cause of action could not possibly be affected by anything that may have happened between some of the debtors and creditors subsequent to the date of the decree and to which other debtors were not parties.

[10] In my opinion, therefore, the decree of the lower Court is perfectly correct. The plaintiff who paid off the entire decretal amount was entitled to call upon his other judgment-debtors to contribute to the performance of the promise unaffected by the discharge in the Relief Court. It is only the creditor who is affected by the discharge passed in the Relief Court and not the co-promisor or the co-judgment-debtor. The revision is dismissed with costs. Counsel's fee Rs. 20-0-0.

Second Appeal No. 496 of 1942, Decided on 6-12-1946, from appellate decree of Dist. Judge, Wardha, D/- 27-6-1942.

(a) Limitation Act (1908), S. 19 — Acknowledgment by de facto guardian.

Only a lawful guardian or manager can sign an acknowledgment for purposes of S. 19, or in their absence an agent duly authorised either by the lawful guardian or by the manager. Accordingly, a de facto guardian will not do. Acknowledgment by him will not extend limitation : 27 A. I. R. 1940 Mad. 33 (FB), Rel. on. [Para 7]

(b) Contract Act (1872), S. 196 — Minor, if can ratify acknowledgment given by de facto guardian, on attaining majority.

As a general rule a person or a body of persons not competent to authorize an act cannot give it validity by ratifying it. [Para 8]

Where the minor was not in a position to give authority at the date when the acts were performed for the reason that a minor cannot contract or perform other legal acts based on a contract, he cannot subsequently ratify these acts because the whole question of ratification is based on the assumption that authority could have been conferred at the date when the acts were performed. Subsequent acknowledgments by minor on attaining majority do not amount to ratification of acknowledgment given by his de facto guardian during his minority : 3 Cal. 280 (P.C.), Foll.; 22 A.I.R. 1935 Nag. 127, Expl. and Disting.; 11 A.I.R. 1924 All. 730 and 15 A. I. R. 1928 All. 440 (F.B.), Disting. [Paras 8 & 14]

(c) Contract Act (1872), S. 198—Minor executing acknowledgment on attaining majority — Knowledge that person executing prior acknowledgment had no authority, if can be imported.

There can be no valid ratification when the knowledge of the person making it regarding the facts of the case is materially defective. The mere fact that a minor executed an acknowledgment on attaining majority did not import knowledge of the minor that the person who executed prior acknowledgment during his minority was not his guardian and had no authority to execute it on his behalf. [Para 15]

(d) Evidence Act (1872), S. 115 — Acknowledgment beyond limitation.

Acknowledgments of debt made beyond limitation do not act as estoppel against the person making the acknowledgment. [Para 17]

Where the opposite party was not misled to change their position by the representations, there can be no estoppel against the person making the representation. [Para 17]

(f) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 100 — New plea — Plea based on stated account cannot be raised.

A stated or settled account is nothing but a contract. It is binding unless it is avoided for one or more of the reasons which the law permits in the case of avoiding a contract. Contracts must be specifically pleaded. It cannot be pleaded in second appeal for the first time, when the opposite party had no opportunity of meeting the case : 33A. I. (g) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 100—New plea—Discretion of Court to allow.

The question of amendment or deciding cases on matters not pleaded is largly one of discretion, and it is impossible for one Court to say whether discretion should or should not be exercised on the facts before it because of discretion exercised in some other case on some other facts. [Para 22]

Where the plaintiffs had already several opportunities to amend their pleadings, even in appellate Court but they did not include the new plea sought to be raised for the first time in second appeal, and the new plea involved not only questions of law but also of facts, the plea was not allowed to be taken in the second appeal. P. R. Padhye — for Appellants.

V. V. Kelkar and M. R. Bobde—for Respondents.

Judgment. — This is a suit for Rs. 2,500 based on an akada dated 21-4-1913 executed by the defendants' father Manaji in favour of the plaintiffs' father Ramji. The document is Ex. P-8. The claim was dismissed, and the plaintiff appeals.

[2] The history of the subsequent transactions is this. On 28-3-1916 accounts were made up and the defendants' father Manaji executed an acknowledgment Ex. P-9. Rupees 1350 were then found due. Manaji died some time after this on 3-3-1919 and left defendants 1 to 4 (his sons) as his heirs. He also left two widows, Mt. Gangu and Mt. Saru, who were the lawful guardians of the sons who were then minors.

[3] On 21-3-1919 accounts were again made up and Rs. 1526-4-0 were found due. The two guardians, Mt. Gangu and Mt. Saru, thereupon executed an acknowledgment Ex. P-10 on behalf of the minors. On 7-3-1922 accounts were again made up and Rs. 1866 are said to have been found due. In this case a document Ex. P-11 was executed by one Pandurang, the paternal uncle of the defendants. The main question in this case is whether Pandurang had authority to execute this document on behalf of the minors. On 26-2-1925 accounts were again made up and this time, Rs. 2271-10-9 were found due. Pandurang again executed an acknowledgment. This acknowledgment is Ex. P-12. When the next settling of accounts took place, viz., on 9-2-1928, defendant 1 had attained majority. According to the plaintiffs, Rs. 2829-2-3 were found due and this time the acknowledgment Ex. P-13 was executed by defendant 1. He signed on his own behalf and on behalf of his three minor brothers. Three years later, on 26-1-1931, accounts were again made up and this time Rs. 2722-1-3 are said to have been due. By then defendant 2 had also attained majority and accordingly the acknowledgment Ex. P-14 was signed by defendants 1 and 2 for themselves and by defendant 1 on behalf of his two minor brothers. The sum of Rs. 2722-1-3 was reached after giving credit for a repayment of Rs. 750 which was made at the same time. It is a matter of dispute whether this payment preceded the settlement of accounts or succeeded. So far as the document Ex. P-14 is concerned, it shows the total due, next a deduction of Rs. 750 and then the balance which we have set out above. Then follow the signatures.

[4] On 17-1-1934 there was a further settlement of accounts and this time Rs. 3458-10-6 are said to have been due. By this time all four defendants had attained majority and so they all signed the acknowledgment Ex. P-15.

[5] Three years later, on 6-1-1937, the defendants applied to the Debt Conciliation Board and this debt was included in their application Ex. P-16. The plaintiffs refused to conciliate, and accordingly a certificate under S. 15, Debt Conciliation Act, was issued against them. On 6-1-1940 the present suit was filed.

[6] A number of defences were taken to the action. As this is a second appeal we do not intend to deal with all the points raised because it is possible to decide the matter on the points with which we intend to deal. The first point is whether Pandurang had authority to execute the acknowledgments in the years 1922 and 1925.

[7] Under S. 19, Limitation Act, an acknowledgment for purposes of that section means one signed either personally or "by an agent duly authorised in this behalf." Section 21 (1) of the Act indicates who these agents are. The section runs,

"The expression "agent duly authorised in this behalf", in S. 19 . . . shall in the case of a person under disability, include his lawful guardian, . . . or manager, or an agent duly authorised by such guardian, . . . or manager to sign the acknowledgment."

It is evident from this that only a lawful guardian or manager can sign an acknowledgment for purposes of S. 19, or in their absence an agent duly authorised either by the lawful guardian or by the manager. Accordingly, a de facto guardian will not do. This point was considered by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court in I.L.R. (1940) Mad. 358,[1] and the learned Judges held that an acknowledgment signed by a de facto guardian does not fulfil the requirements of S. 19 read with S. 21 (1) of the Act. We are in respectful agreement with that conclusion. It follows, then that Pandurang had no authority to sign for purposes of extending limitation under S. 19. If he had no authority then the subsequent acknowledgments by the various defendants will not serve to extend limitation.

[8] That leads us to the next question, viz., whether there was ratification of Pandurang's acts by the defendants and whether there can be such ratification in law. It is urged on the basis of S. 196, Contract Act, that Pandurang purported to act on behalf of the minor defendants, and accordingly when the defendants after reaching age signed their subsequent acknowledgments they thereby ratified Pandurang's actions. As regards this, the law as enunciated by their Lordships of the Privy Council in 3 Cal. 280[2] at p. 285 is this. Their Lordships say,

"A ratification in law is treated as equivalent to a previous authority, and it follows that, as a general rule, a person, or body of persons, not competent to authorize an act, cannot give it validity by ratifying it."

This is also the view of the learned authors of Pollock and Mulla's Indian Contract Act, Edn. 7, p. 553. The minors were not in a position to give authority at the date when the acts were performed for the reason that a minor cannot contract or perform other legal acts based on a contract. Accordingly, under the law enunciated above, they cannot subsequently ratify these acts because the whole question of ratification is based on the assumption that authority could have been conferred at the date when the acts were performed.

[9] We are referred to 31 N.L.R. 243[3] at p. 245 where Pollock J. states:

"It was of course open to the defendant to ratify the acts of his guardian, and the acts of the guardian's agent may be taken to be the acts of the guardian."

It is sought to be inferred from this that there can be ratification of acts performed during a person's minority in certain cases. We are, however, of opinion that that is not true ratification. In the case of an act of a minor's guardian the act is good until avoided. The minor has the right, when he reaches age, either to elect to ratify the act or to avoid it, assuming it falls within the clause of avoidable actions. Accordingly, when he makes his election he is not ratifying it in the sense in which ratification is spoken of in S. 196. He is electing not to avoid an act which he is entitled to avoid. The point is that in such a case the act is good until avoided.

[10] In cases falling under S. 196 the position is the reverse. The act is not good. The person acting without authority has no power to do anything on behalf of another, and unless his action is ratified it does not hold good. That is true ratification. In the other case it is an election not to avoid an avoidable act. In a case under S. 196 it it a matter of ratifying and making good that which otherwise would not be good.

[11] We must not be understood in saying this to imply that there can be ratification of void act, e. g., the contracts of a minor. The Privy Council hold there can be no such ratification. The position contemplated by S. 196 is different, because there it is assumed that if the act had been done with authority it would have been good. Accordingly, it is assumed that the person who subsequently ratifies would have been in a position to confer the requisite authority at the time of ratification.

[12] Reliance was next placed upon 46 ALL. 568[4] and 51 ALL. 164.[5] The former is not a case of ratification. It is a case in which a minor when he reached age elected to pay for articles which had been supplied to him during his minority. This, as the learned authors of Pollock and Mulla's Indian Contract Act point out at p. 70, amounts not to ratification but to a gift. If a minor is not bound under the law to pay for goods supplied to him and chooses to do so then he is doing something which he is not compelled by law to do, that is to say, he is making a free gift. That is not ratification. If, however, they are necessaries then of course he is compelled to pay in any event and no question of ratification arises. 46 ALL. 568[4] is accordingly not in point.

[13] As regards the other ruling, that also is not a case of ratification. That is a case in which a minor borrowed a sum of money and executed a simple bond for it when he was still minor. After attaining majority he executed a second bond in respect of the original loan together with interest. It was held that the second bond was good. That is not a case of ratifying a void act but of entering into a fresh contract based on good consideration. It is to be observed that a minor's contracts are not illegal; they are merely void, that is to say, they cannot be enforced in law, but the fact that considerations are received under them remains, and therefore, if basing upon that consideration, a minor subsequently elects to enter into a fresh contract when of age his consideration is good and the contract is a fresh contract. The position is also adumbrated by the learned authors of Pollock and Mulla's Indian Contract Act, Edn. 7, at pp. 69 and 70.

[14] We hold, therefore, that the actions of the defendants in executing acknowledgments subsequent to the acknowledgments executed by Pandurang do not in law amount to ratification.

[15] Then follows another question of law, viz., whether knowledge of the circumstances can be deduced from the facts found. Under S. 198, Contract Act there can be no valid ratification when the knowledge of the person making it regarding the facts of the case is materially defective. It was held by Pollock J. in 31 N. L. R. 243[3] at p. 245 that the mere fact that a minor executed a promissory note on attaining majority did not import that he intended to acknowledge liability for an old debt. The facts here are similar except that here the minors did not execute a promissory note but executed acknowledgments. Agreeing with Pollock J. we are of opinion that that fact in itself cannot import knowledge of the minors that Pandurang was not their guardian and had no authority to execute prior acknowledgments on their behalf. It is not necessary to go into this question further.

[16] Next question of estoppel was raised. It was said that the action of the defendants in executing these subsequent acknowledgments, and particularly in making the statement which they did to the Debt Conciliation Board, estops them from questioning the plaintiffs' right of suit. In our opinion, there is no estoppel.

[17] The question here is whether Pandurang had authority to make acknowledgments in 1922 and 1925. Nothing has been shown to indicate that the plaintiffs were in any way misled by any statement or action of the defendants in receiving these acknowledgments. The subsequent statements or acts of the defendants long after 1922 and 1925 could clearly not have misled the plaintiffs in 1922 and in 1925. Accordingly their subsequent statements do not estop them from questioning Pandurang's authority. So far as their own acknowledgments are concerned, there is no question of estoppel. They do not deny these acknowledgments. They admit they made them. But they were made beyond time if Pandurang's acknowledgments fall to the ground, and therefore do not serve to extend limitation. Accordingly, as the plaintiffs were not misled and as they are not shown to have changed their position for the worse in any way by reason of the subsequent statements, there can be no estoppel.

[18] The plaintiffs next claim to base their case on an account stated or settled. According to them, the various acknowledgments executed by the defendants themselves amount not only to acknowledgments but are also accounts stated.

[19] This question was not pleaded. A stated or settled account is nothing but a contract. It is binding unless it is avoided for one or more of the reasons which the law permits in the case of avoiding a contract. Contracts must be specifically pleaded; also the plaint must set out the facts which constitute the cause of action and the date on which the cause of action accrued. The acknowledgments here have not been used as contracts. Accordingly, the defendants have had no opportunity of meeting that case and of contesting the acknowledgments on any of the grounds on which a contract can be contested. As the matter has not been fought out and has been raised first time in second appeal, we are unable to allow the plea to be taken.

[20] The cause of action for a suit based on an account stated is entirely different from one based on the original loan with acknowledgments used to extend limitation. Accordingly, the present claim could not be entertained without an amendment of the plaint. The plaintiffs have already had several opportunities to amend. At one stage they were allowed to amend in the appellate Court, and after amendment the matter was remanded to the first Court for fresh trial. We are unable to grant them further opportunity. Accordingly, we do not allow this plea to be taken.

[21] We pause to observe that the matter is not only one of law but it involves facts also. It involves a difficult consideration of a question of law regarding EX. P-15 which is said to be the account stated. A question arises whether that is a one-sided account and whether in law an account stated can be based on accounts which are only one sided. However, we need not go into all that because, as we have said, the matter was not pleaded. The claim was not based on an account stated. The suit has not been tried along those lines and it is impossible for us to guess at what would be the result if the matter had been properly fought out.

[22] Reliance was placed in this connection on a decision of Puranik J. in I. L. R. (1946) Nag.21[6] at p. 25 where the learned Judge stated that even though the matter had not been pleaded the suit before him could be decided on the basis of an account stated. It is not necessary for us to dissent from that view because the question of amendment or deciding cases on matters not pleaded is largely one of discretion, and it is impossible for one Court to say whether discretion should or should not be exercised on the facts before it because of a discretion exercised in some other case on some other facts. It is to be observed that in I. L. R. (1946) Nag. 21[6] the learned Judge decided the matter on two other grounds, and at the end he said that it could also be decided on the ground of an account stated even though it had not been pleaded. We are unable to accept that as authority for the view that in every case in which the matter is not pleaded it would be right and proper to permit a claim to be decreed on that basis. In our opinion, this is a case in which it would not be right. As we have said, the plaintiffs were given ample opportunity to amend. They availed themselves of it in one particular but not in this. Accordingly they cannot succeed on this ground. In view of this, we need not consider the other points raised. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Order. — This is a revision by defendants 1 and 3 in Civil suit No. 2-B of 1946 pending in the Court of the Additional District Judge, Khamgaon, against the order of that Court refusing to stay the suit pending the decision of First Appeal No. 18 of 1945 pending in the High Court.

[2] In order to appreciate correctly the subject-matter of this revision it is necessary to state facts in detail. 'Sitaram Bindraban' a partnership firm at Khamgaon (hereafter called a firm) dealt in cotton, cotton-seed etc. and it also carried on business as adtiya and commission agents for purchases and sales of these articles for its constituents and it also financed its constituents in their transactions. Harikisan was one of the constituents of the firm and he did cotton business in the adat of the firm between 14-8-1942 and 21-3-1943. The business consisted inter alia of purchase of 496 bales of cotton through the pakki adat of the firm which also financed Harikisan. Harikisan agreed to pay interest, adat, brokerage and loss, if any, to the firm. It is alleged that the bales were in the custody of the firm by way of security for money advanced for purchasing the bales until these bales were sold by Harikisan to the firm from time to time until 6-3-1943. As he suffered loss in this and other businesses carried on through the adat of the firm he was unable to repay the amount due from him to the firm. As Harikisan failed to satisfy his liability to the firm, the latter instituted against Harikisan and others Civil Suit No. 6-B of 1943 and claimed Rs. 12,868-2-9 as a result of all the dealings between Harikisan and the firm or through the adat of the firm. Subsequently, the firm also instituted another suit—Civil Suit No. 7-B of 1943 against Harikisan for recovery of Rs. 15,202-4-0 which was realised from the firm on a hundi dated 12th February 1943 drawn in favour of Laxmi Bank by Harikisan and in which the firm was the drawee. These two suits were consolidated and the claim of the firm was decreed on 22nd September 1944 for Rs. 17,216-3-0. The firm has filed an appeal against the dismissal of a part of its claim and it is pending as First Appeal No. 18 of 1945 in the High Court.

[3] On 6th March 1946, Harikisan instituted Civil Suit No. 2-B of 1946 against Laxmi Bank, Kisanlal, the Sub agent of Laxmi Bank and the firm Sitaram Bindraban at Khamgaon for recovery of Rs. 57,094-7-0, made up of Rs. 45,358 as the price of 250 bales of cotton on 22nd April 1943 or by way of damages and Rs. 11,736 7-0 as interest thereon at 9 per cent. per annum. In this suit Harikisan alleged that as on 17th September 1942 the firm 'Sitaram Bindraban' pressed Harikisan for a substantial repayment he applied for a loan of Rs. 14,000 from the Laxmi Bank on the security of his bales of cotton and it was granted to him under the hypothecation bond dated 17 September 1942. According to the bond 250 out of 496 bales were pawned with the Bank and delivered in its custody and the Bank paid Rs. 14,000 to the firm by a cheque for Rs. 14,000. The price of cotton began to go up and Harikisan wanted the Bank to allow him to redeem the 250 bales pawned by him with the Bank. It was after much delay on 22nd April 1943 that the reply was received from the Bank that these bales were pawned not by Harikisan but by the firm through its managing partner and that the pawn was already redeemed in March 1943. Harikisan, therefore, filed on 6th March 1946 Civil Suit No. 2 B of 1946 as already stated above.

[4] Defendants 1 and 3 contended in Civil Suit No. 2-B of 1946 that the trial of the suit should be stayed till the decision of First Appeal No. 18 of 1945 and this was the subject-matter of issue 16 framed by the lower Court. The lower Court treated this as a preliminary issue and rejected the prayer for stay by its order dated 15th January 1947. Defendants 1 and 3 seek to have this order revised.

[5] The prayer for stay was mainly based on the ground that in Civil Suit No. 6-B of 1943 between the firm as plaintiff and Harikisan as one of the defendants the question about the ownership of the 250 bales pledged with the Laxmi Bank was agitated and it formed the subject-matter of issue 13 in that suit. The trial Court answered this issue against the plaintiff, e. g., the firm. It held that 250 bales belonged not to the firm but to Harikisan and they were pledged by Harikisan. The claim of the firm to that extent was disallowed, and the firm is now agitating that question in First Appeal No. 18 of 1945 before the High Court. In the present suit, i. e., Civil Suit No. 2-B of 1946, the sole question in dispute is that which was covered by issue 13 in the previously instituted suit, Civil Suit No. 6-B of 1943 and which is now the subject matter of First Appeal No. 18 of 1945.

[6] It is clear from the order of the lower Court that it has misdirected itself on very vital points resulting in the refusal to exercise jurisdiction or acting in the exercise of jurisdiction with material irregularity. Evidently, the learned Judge has misunderstood and misapplied the decision in A. I. R. 1935 Mad. 112.[1] According to that decision the subject-matter of the subsequent suit must be covered by the previously instituted suit and not the vice versa. It is obvious that the subject-matter of civil suit No. 2-B of 1946 is covered completely by civil suit No. 6-B of 1943 but the lower Court somehow misapprehended the correct position under a wrong belief that according to the ruling the subject-matter of the two suits should be in every respect identical. The lower Court thus acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction under S. 10, Civil P. C., with material irregularity. Further the lower Court denied to itself the jurisdiction to stay the suit under S. 151, Civil P. C., by misunderstanding the decision in I. L. R. (1941) 1 Cal. 373.[2] The lower Court failed to see that in that case the learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court have discussed the scope and the application of the inherent powers of the Court now recognized in S. 151, Civil P. C., and these powers are open to the High Court and to the subordinate Court alike. This resulted in the non-exercise of jurisdiction which the lower Court had under S. 151 of the Code i. e., apart from S. 10, Civil P. C., in suitable cases. In the unreported judgment passed by this Court in second appeal No. 395 of 1946 it is held that a subsequently instituted suit could be stayed under S. 151, Civil P. C., even though S. 10 of the Code may not strictly apply. The same view is taken in A. I. R. 1929 Lah. 12[3] and A. I. R. 1947 Lah. 28.[4] Even before the Code of 1908 which gave a statutory recognition to the inherent powers of a Court such a power was recognized as appears from 17 ALL. 29,[5] 33 Cal. 927[6] and other cases. In 33 Cal. 927[6] Woodroffe J. observed:

"Law cannot make express provisions against all inconveniences, and that the Court had, therefore, in many cases where the circumstances warranted it, and the necessities of the case required it, acted upon the assumption of the possession of an inherent power to act ex debito justitiae and to do that real and substantial justice for the administration of which it alone exists".

These observations are cited with approval in I. L. R. (1941) 1 Cal. 490[7] and I. L. R. (1940) ALL. 201.[8]

[7] According to S. 10, Civil P. C., the Court is forbidden from proceeding with the trial of a suit when the matter in issue in the subsequent suit is directly in issue in the previously instituted suit between the same parties or between the parties under whom they or any of them claimed under the same title where the suit is pending in British India having jurisdiction to grant the relief. It is not disputed that all the requirements of S. 10, are satisfied so far as the firm and Harikisan are concerned and as against Harikisan the suit is liable to be stayed. It is however contended that the suit cannot be stayed so far as defendants 1 and 2 are concerned as they were not parties to the previously instituted suit. It is true that so far as defendants 1 and 2 are concerned the subsequently instituted suit cannot be said to be a parallel suit as the findings in First Appeal No. 18 of 1945 would not operate as res judicata as held in 61 Cal. 670[9] and A. I. R. 1942 Bom. 314,[10] but a finding regarding the ownership of the firm and its right of redemption of 250 bales which would be binding between the firm and Harikisan would have a material bearing so far as the suit between Harikisan and defendants 1 and 2 is concerned. Thus even if S. 10, Civil P. C., does not as such apply, the circumstances of this case, the interest of justice and the balance of convenience justify the staying of the entire suit as against all the defendants. On the other hand, serious complications may arise if the suit is allowed to proceed.

[8] It is doubtful if for the application of S. 10, Civil P. C., there should be a complete identity of parties or a complete identity of the subject-matter. Such a view would furnish a handle to the unscrupulous litigants to escape from the operation of S. 10 by adding some formal party who was not a party in the previously instituted suit or add some nominal relief not covered by the previous suit. It is enough as pointed out in the exhaustive commentary on S. 10, Civil P. C., by Chitaley and Annaji Rao that there should be a substantial identity of parties in the two suits. The same applies to the subject-matter.

[9] The learned counsel for the non-applicant relied on 48 Bom. L. R. 633[11] which lays down the undisputed proposition that all the issues in the subsequent suit should be covered by the previously instituted suit. The decision in I. L. R. (1945) Nag. 634[12] is also to the same effect.

[10] Finally I hold that the lower Court should have stayed the trial of civil suit No. 2-B of 1946 under S. 10 read with S. 151, Civil P. C., and I order accordingly. The revision is allowed with costs. Counsel's fee Rs. 30.

Second Appeal No. 306 of 1943, Decided on 14-3-1947, from appellate decree of 1st Addl. Dist. Judge, Nagpur, D/-16-2-1943.

(a) C. P. Tenancy Act (1 [I] of 1920), S. 105 (a) —Applicability — Transfer of interest in absolute occupancy holding void — S. 105 (a) does not bar jurisdiction of civil Court.

Section 105 (a) does not bar the jurisdiction of a civil Court where there is no legal transfer of the interest of an absolute occupancy tenant. [Para 3]

Where a minor is living under the guardianship of his father a sale of the minor's interest in an absolute occupancy holding by his brother who is not his guardian is void: 14 A. I. R. 1927 Bom. 611, Rel. on. [Para 2]

Hence where such sale was pre-empted by the lambardar under S. 6 of the Act as it stood before the Amending Act (11 [XI] of 1940) the jurisdiction of the civil Court to entertain a suit by the minor for possession would not be barred by S. 105 (a): 15 A. I. R. 1928 Nag. 249, Disting. [Para 3]

M. N. Gadgil and M. R. Rajkarne— for Appellant.

D. B. Padhye—for Respondent.

Judgment.—The respondent Punjabrao, who is a minor, and his elder brother Shripat inherited from their mother's father his interest in the absolute occupancy field Khasra No. 91, area 4.56 acres. Shripat for himself and also purporting to act as the guardian of the minor Punjabrao sold 2.65 acres out of this field to one Banudeo. The appellant Mt. Deokibai, who is the lambardar of the village thereupon pre-empted the sale under S. 6, C. P. Tenancy Act. Punjabrao therefore brought the suit out of which this second appeal has arisen claiming to be put in joint possession. It was decreed, and the appeal therefrom was dismissed by the Additional District Judge, Nagpur. Hence this second appeal by the defendant Mt. Deokibai.

[2] The learned District Judge has found that Punjabrao is living under the guardianship of his father Bhola and that Shripat is not the guardian of Punjabrao. The learned counsel for the appellant has not shown any reason for interfering with this finding of fact. So the sale by Shripat of Punjabrao's share is void: 51 Bom. 1040.[1]

[3] The learned counsel for the appellant, however, contended that the jurisdiction of civil Courts was barred in this case under S. 105 (a), C. P. Tenancy Act, which says :

". . . . no Civil Court shall exercise jurisdiction over . . . . (a) any matter provided for in S. 6 as to the enforcement by the landlord of his right to purchase the right of an absolute occupancy tenant. . . . . "

This case is governed by S. 6, C. P. Tenancy Act as it stood before the amendment made by the C. P. Tenancy (Amendment) Act, 1939 (Act 11 [XI] of 1940). That section dealt with the right of transfer by an absolute occupancy tenant and permitted pre-emption when there was a transfer. In this case, however, there is no legal transfer at all, Shripat having had absolutely no right to transfer the share of Punjabrao who was then a minor. Section 105 (a) does not bar the jurisdiction of the civil Court in such a case where there is no transfer. It is a well-established rule that a statute purporting to create a special jurisdiction must be very strictly construed, especially when it seems to have the effect of depriving the subject of a common law right: 8 N. L. R. 107.[2]

[4] Concerning this question of jurisdiction we get in I. L. R. (1940) Mad. 599[3] at p. 614, the following very instructive remarks of their Lordships of the Privy Council :

"It is settled law that the exclusion of the jurisdiction of the civil Courts is not to be readily inferred, but that such exclusion must either be explicitly expressed or clearly implied. It is also well-settled that even if jurisdiction is so excluded, the civil Courts have jurisdiction to examine into cases where the provisions of the Act have not been complied with, or the statutory tribunal has not acted in conformity with the fundamental principles of judicial procedure."

It is clear from the last part of these remarks that the Court of special jurisdiction does not carry with it a power to act beyond and outside that jurisdiction. Therefore action which is ultra vires of such jurisdiction gives a cause of action in the civil Court: 8 N. L. R. 107.[2]

[5] The learned counsel for the appellant relied on A. I. R. 1928 Nag. 249.[4] But it is not applicable to the present case as in that case it was the guardian of the minor who had given the notice to the defendant of her intention to sell. Such an alienation, i. e. an alienation by a de facto guardian, is not void but only voidable if it is neither for necessity nor for the benefit of the estate of the minor: 49 Mad. 768.[5] It is therefore not necessary in this case to go into the question of conflict between the decisions in A. I. R. 1928 Nag. 249[4] and A. I. R. 1928 Nag. 151.[6] There is therefore no force in the appeal, and it is hereby dismissed with costs.

Second Appeal No. 656 of 1943, Decided on 12-12-1947, from Appellate Decree of Dist. Judge, Wardha, D/- 18-8-1943.

(a) C. P. Land Revenue Act (2 [II] of 1917), S. 157 (4)—S. 157 (4) is not governed by S. 149.

Section 157 (4) is not governed by S. 149. The section provides the lambardar with a speedy and summary remedy when he pays the land revenue on behalf of a Malik-Makbuza, but it does not take away any of his ordinary rights of suit. In the same way, though immediate effect is given to the Deputy Commissioner's order of sale the rights of those affected to agitate the matter in the regular Courts is not taken away. [Para 21]

Judgment. — This is a suit to set aside the sale of a Malik-Makbuza Plot No. 26/2 made under S. 157, Central Provinces Land Revenue Act of 1917.

[2] The field was sold at the instance of defendant 2 who was the lambardar of the village in which the field is situated. The appellant, who was defendant 1, is the auction-purchaser. The history of the plot is as follows. The original owner of this Malik-Makbuza plot and two other fields, which were khudkasht, was one Bhagwantrao. He mortgaged all three to four sets of persons, namely (1) Narayan, the present plaintiff 1, (2) the firm of Mansukhdas Pannalal whose owners were (a) Tejmal, (b) Harakchand, (c) Narayandas and (d) Khushalchand (the Narayandas No. (c) is not the same as the Narayan just mentioned.) (3) Jitmal and (4) Punamchand Agyaram.

[3] In due course the mortgagees sued on their mortgage and obtained a foreclosure decree on 14th June 1932. They obtained possession on 1st November 1933 : see Ex. P-2 (when I say they obtained possession, the one who took actual possession was Narayandas.)

[4] From 1st November 1933 down to 16th December 1940 no land revenue was paid and so the lambardar had to pay what was due to Government. Having done this he initiated proceedings under S. 157, Land Revenue Act.

[5] Though the fields were transferred to the mortgagees under their foreclosure decree no steps were taken to obtain mutation in the case of the Malik-Makbuza plot and Bhagwantrao continued to be recorded as the Malik-Makbuza down to the date of the auction sale in 1940. Exhibits D-10 to D-15 are the relevant Jamabandis from 1933 to 1940.

[6] The history of the Khudkasht plots in the revenue records is different. In the year 1934-35 they were recorded as the Khudkasht of one Ramrao (Ex. D 3). Then in the years 1935 36 to 1939-40 one of the mortgagees, Punamchand and one Khioraj were entered as the occupancy tenants of these fields (see Exs. D-4 to D-8). I have referred to Punamchand as one of the mortgagees. Actually of course he was now one of the owners because of the foreclosure decree in 1932, but it will be convenient to refer to these owners as the mortgagees throughout this judgment.

[7] In 1940-41, the year in which the auction sale took place, three of the mortgagees, Jitmal, Narayan and Punamchand, along with two others, Harakchand and another Narayan, were recorded as the occupancy tenants (see Ex. D 9).

[8] The revenue was not paid and the Lambardar had to pay it over to Government. In consequence the Lambardar instituted two separate cases under S. 157. The first was filed on 30-7-1937 (Ex. P-12) for the land revenue of the year 1936-37 in connection with all three fields. Rupees 63-12-0 was claimed for the Malik-Makbuza field now in suit and Rs. 47 for the other two. The proceedings were against Jitmal alone.

[9] Exhibit P-5 contains the order sheets relating to that case. It shows that various attempts were made to serve Jitmal, but he was not served till the hearing of 23-2-1937 and on that date the Lambardar asked that the R. R. C. be issued through the Deputy Commissioner. After that nothing further was done for some months.

[10] In the meanwhile a second application, Ex. P-16, was filed on 26-7-1938. This related to to the Malik Makbuza field alone. The Lambardar sought to recover Rs. 63-12-0 for the year 1937-38. This also was against Jitmal alone.

[11] The order sheets relating to this case will be found in Ex. P-7. Jitmal appeared on 8-9-1938 and said that he should only be made liable for one-third of the claim because there were two other co-sharers, Punamchand and Narayandas. The Lambardar was then told to amend his application and serve the other two. The application was amended (Ex. P-15), but the other two co-sharers could not be served and so an R. R. C. was ordered to be issued against Jitmal on 30-11-1938, and against the other two in their absence on 30-1-1939.

[12] Nothing was done till 20-2-1940 and then the first case, Ex. P-5, was linked up with the second and the proceedings continued in the second.

[13] On 23-4-1940 the Lambardar asked for attachment of the Malik-Makbuza field alone. On 30-7-1940 the Naib-Tahsildar was shown the sale-deed under which the four mortgagees obtained the three fields. He was informed that the fields had been mutated in the names of these four persons. He therefore directed that enquiries should be made.

[14] On 15-8-1940, the Lambardar said he wanted to attach only half the Malik-Makbuza field and asked that it be sold in satisfaction of the arrears in both cases. This was sanctioned and the Naib-Tahsildar directed that the prohibitory order forms be put up. This was done and the Deputy Commissioner sanctioned the sale on 23-9-1940 (Ex. P 6) and the sale was eventually held on 16-12-1940. The field was then purchased by defendant 1-appellant and the sale was confirmed on 1-2-1941 (Ex. P-6).

[15] Jitmal died on 2-10-1940 after the Deputy Commissioner's order sanctioning the sale but before the sale. Thereupon on 31-3-1941, after the sale had been held and after the confirmation, the legal representatives of Jitmal applied for review (Ex. D-20) and at the same time made an application for substitution (Ex. D-19). These applications were dismissed on 31-3-1941 (Ex.P-7).

[16] Having failed in the revenue Courts, the mortgagees and their representatives, who by that time were the owners of the property, brought the present suit seeking to set aside the revenue proceedings and asking for possession.

[17] The case was contested on grounds of fraud and the like, but those points have been dropped here because of the finding of fact that there was no fraud. The two points which I have to see are, (1) whether the sale could proceed in the absence of Jitmal's legal representatives, and (2) whether the interests of the other mortgagees who were not noticed are affected.

[18] As the sale here was held under the Land Revenue Act it is necessary first to look to the provisions of that Act. Section 157 is the material section. It authorises a Lambardar who has paid any land revenue due by any Malik Makbuza or proprietor to apply to the Deputy Commissioner and ask the Deputy Commissioner to recover the same on his behalf.

[19] The Deputy Commissioner is then authorised to proceed to recover the sum "as if it were an arrear of land revenue." Sub-section (4) then proceeds:

"No appeal shall lie from an order under this section; but any person affected by such order may institute a suit in a civil Court to establish the right which he claims."

[20] If that were all the matter would be plain sailing. The Lambardar applied, the Deputy Commissioner acted, and this is the suit which is contemplated. But it was argued that this section is governed by S. 149 which limits such suits to two grounds, namely (1) fraud and (2) that no arrears were due. It was said that sub-s. (5) of S. 157 makes it clear because it says "If the civil Court decides that no arrear was due, and the property has been sold for the recovery of arrears, the sale shall become void."

[21] I am of opinion that S. 157 (4) is not governed by S. 149. The section provides the Lambardar with a speedy and summary remedy when he pays the land revenue on behalf of a Malik-Makbuza, but it does not take away any of his ordinary rights of suit. In the same way, though immediate effect is given to the Deputy Commissioner's order of sale the rights of those affected to agitate the matter in the regular Courts is not taken away.

[22] In my opinion S. 157, so far as it goes, is complete in itself, and the direction that the Deputy Commissioner shall recover the money "as if it were an arrear of land revenue" merely indicates the mode of recovery and does not clothe the Lambardar with any of the attributes or privileges of Government conferred by the earlier sections. The only right given to him is to make the application. Once that is done the Deputy Commissioner does everything else for him and recovers the money. The rest of the section tells the Deputy Commissioner how to proceed, and sub-s. (4), says that any person affected by his action can fight the matter out in the civil Courts in the ordinary way if he is aggrieved.

[23] Sub-section (5) of S. 157 is there for a special reason. It is not intended to limit the scope of the suits which sub-s. (4) permits. The reason is this. Sub-s. (3) empowers the Deputy Commissioner to decide how much was due, and if sub-s. (5) had not been there the jurisdiction of the civil Courts to enquire into this particular matter would have been barred under S. 220 because this is one of the matters which a Revenue Officer, namely the Deputy Commissioner, is empowered by the Act to determine. But that has the effect of extending the scope of the suit contemplated by sub-s. (4) and not of curtailing it.

[24] Turning next to the Deputy Commissioner's powers, as he is directed to recover the amount "as if it were an arrear of land revenue" he has to proceed in the manner set out in the earlier sections. These sections draw a distinction between attachments and sales under Chap. 10 of the Act other than S. 128 and those made specially under S. 128. Section 128 is limited to recoveries of arrears due to Government. For that there are special provisions and powers in addition to the ordinary ones. But in all other cases under Chap. 10, S. 131 directs that the attachment and sale shall be as nearly as may be "according to the law for the time being in force for the attachment and sale of such property under the decree of a civil Court."

[25] Section 149 is an empowering section and does not impose limitations. As I have said, S. 220 excludes the jurisdiction of the civil Courts in all matters with which the Revenue Officers are empowered to deal under the Act. The attachment and sale of properties for arrears of land revenue and for sums directed to be recovered as if they were arrears is one of these matters. Therefore without S. 149 (2) no civil suit would have lain. Sub-s. (2) modifies this and permits suits in two classes of cases. Sub-section (4) of S. 157 does the same thing in yet another class of case, only there the scope of the permitted suit is wider.

[26] As S. 131 directs that all sales under Chap. 10 which are not separately provided for under S. 128 shall be as nearly as may be in accordance with the law relating to the attachment and sale of such property under the decree of a civil Court it follows that the law which prevails there must obtain here as well. Under that law a sale which is held without notice to the parties concerned is a nullity : see 32 Cal. 296[1] at p. 312. That being the case, the interests of all the mortgagees except Jitmal are not affected.

[27] As regards Jitmal 1940 N. L. J. 148[2] holds that when a judgment-debtor dies, even after attachment any sale of his property held after his death is a nullity against his legal representatives unless they are noticed. This is based on a Privy Council decision in 42 Cal. 72[3] at. p. 83. and on 20 Cal. 370.[4] As Jitmal's legal representatives were not noticed the sale is void against them as well.

[28] The decisions of the Courts below are upheld, and the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Civil Revn. No. 367 of 1946, Decided on 30-9-1947, from order of Addl. Dist. Judge, Wardha, D/- 21-8-1946.

(a) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 21, R. 89 — Notice of application under, to auction-purchaser is sufficient—He need not be made party.

The law nowhere requires that an auction-purchaser should be impleaded as a party to an application under O. 21, R. 89. It is sufficient if he has notice of this application before it is disposed of. Where the auction-purchaser took part in the proceedings in the executing Court and he raised all possible objections and in fact succeeded in the executing Court and was impleaded as a party in appeal, there is no substance in the objection by auction-purchaser, that he was not impleaded in the application under O. 21, R. 89. R. V. Khare — for Non-applicants 1 and 2.

Order.—Between 1938-1941, Ganpati, the landlord, obtained against Mt. Savitri three rent decrees amounting to a total of Rs. 304-0-6 in respect of an occupancy field No. 380/2 of patti E of mauza Paunar. In execution of these decrees the aforesaid field was put to auction on 28th May 1945 for Rs. 650 and it was purchased by Vithoba auction-purchaser, (applicant 1). On 20th June 1945 the present non-applicants 1 and 2 deposited the decretal amount, 5 per cent. of the sale proceeds as compensation to the purchaser, and applied that the auction sale held on 28th May 1945 should be set aside. In that application they pointed out that they are the recorded tenants of the field sold and were also in its possession for several years and that they, therefore, had sufficient interest to entitle them to apply under O. 21, R. 89, Civil P. C.

[2] This application was opposed both by the decree-holder and also by the auction-purchaser Vithoba. They contended that the applicants had no locus standi to apply under O. 21, R. 89, Civil P. C., and that they are also barred by the principle of res judicata from agitating that they had such interest as in the previous execution case their application to set aside the sale under O. 21, R. 89 of the Code was rejected on the ground that they had no locus standi to apply under that provision of law. These contentions prevailed in the executing Court and the application under O. 21, R. 89 was dismissed.

[3] The non-applicants 1 and 2, then appealed to the Court of the Additional District Judge, Wardha, and the learned appellate Judge in his order under revision held that the appellants were in possession of this field for several years in the past and this in itself is sufficient interest, within the meaning of O. 21, R. 89, Civil P. C., as now amended, to entitle the applicants to deposit the amount and to apply for setting aside the sale. The appeal was consequently allowed. The auction-purchaser and the decree-holder have jointly filed this revision against the aforesaid order of the appellate Court.

[4] One of the contentions raised on behalf of the auction-purchaser in the executing Court was that an application under O. 21, R. 89, Civil P. C. was not competent because the auction-purchaser was not impleaded in the application and no notice was issued to him. The appellate Court has correctly overruled this objection on the ground that there was sufficient compliance with the law as the auction-purchaser had an opportunity of opposing the application and he, in fact, did oppose it before it was disposed of under O. 21, R. 92 of the Code. The law nowhere requires that an auction-purchaser should be impleaded as a party to an application under O. 21, R. 89. It is sufficient if he has notice of this application before it is disposed of. In the present case, the auction-purchaser took part in the proceedings in the executing Court and he raised all possible objections and in fact succeeded in the executing Court. He was impleaded as a party in appeal. There is thus no substance in the objection by the auction-purchaser.

[5] It appears from the documents on record that in 1931 the name of Savitri as a tenant of the field No. 380/2 was removed and the names of the present non-applicants 1 and 2 were recorded and the revenue record shows that this field is continuously recorded and is also in continuous possession of non-applicants 1 and 2. They have certainly an interest to safeguard and to maintain their possession over this field from which they may be dispossessed as a result of the auction sale in favour of applicant 1. Order 21, R. 89 of the Code is recently amended and its scope is now very much enlarged. According to the amended provision "any person claiming any interest in the property sold at the time of the sale or at the time of the petition, may apply to have the sale set aside on his depositing in Court, etc....." It is no longer necessary now that the person applying must be either owning such property or holding an interest therein by virtue of a title acquired before such sale.

[6] An amendment similar to the Central Provinces amendment was made to the original O. 21, R. 89, Civil P. C. by the Lahore High Court in 1932. In A. I. R. 1935 Lah. 51[1] it was held that it was no longer necessary under the new rule to prove that the applicant either owned the property or held an interest in the property before the sale. It is sufficient now for the applicant to claim an interest in the property at the time of making the application under O. 21, R. 89, Civil P. C. If he does so and deposits in Court 5 per cent. of the purchase price for payment to the auction-purchaser and the amount due to the decree-holder he is entitled to have the sale set aside. This decision was followed in A. I. R. 1936 Lah. 561.[2] In my view the learned Judge of the appellate Court was, therefore, right in holding that the present non-applicants 1 and 2 had sufficient interest in the property within the meaning of O. 21, R. 89 of the Code as amended to enable them to deposit the amount and to claim that the sale of the property of which they were in possession peacefully and for a very long time should be set aside.

[7] In fact, in A. I. R. 1924 Mad. 723[3] Venkatasubba Rao J. went further and held that even a trespasser who is in possession of property sold in a court auction prior to the execution sale, is a person holding an interest in the property sold by virtue of a title acquired before such a sale within O. 21, R. 89, Civil P. C.

[8] Even apart from what is stated above, to indicate that the order passed by the appellate Court was correct and legal I see no reason to interfere with the decision of the appellate Court in revision. The learned Judge has properly exercised his jurisdiction in a perfectly legal and regular manner and his decision, whether right or wrong, cannot therefore, be interfered with under S. 115, Civil P. C. The revision application is dismissed with costs. Counsel's fee Rs. 20.

(a) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 11 — Consent decree against minor—Res judicata.

A consent decree once obtained whether by consent or otherwise, stands and must be obeyed until it is set aside. It must be obeyed not only in execution but in subsequent proceedings and it binds the parties as effectively as any other decree so long as it is there. In this respect there is no difference between a consent decree to which all parties are adults and one where a minor is concerned, though a minor is entitled to impeach a decree passed against him if the next friend or guardian for the suit is guilty of fraud or gross negligence. It has to be set aside by proper proceedings instituted for that purpose but cannot to called in question by way of objection in a subsequent suit, where it operates as res judicata : 16 A. I. Judgment.—This is an appeal by defendants 5 to 9 in a suit on a mortgage dated 11 1-1921 (Ex. P.3) for Rs. 30,000 executed by three brothers Shamrao, Govindrao and Shankar. Of these Shankar was a minor and was represented by his eldest brother Shamrao who acted as his guardian. The mortgage was in favour of defendant 1. On 24 4 1934 he and his sons assigned it to the plaintiffs and the plaintiffs sue on it.

[2] The following genealogical tree will show the relationship between the defendants, or rather those with whom we are concerned in this appeal.

JHANABAPU = Parbatibai

- Shamrao = Saraswati (Defendant 4)
  - Ramrao (Deft. 6)
  - Ganeshrao (Deft. 7)
- Govindrao (Defendant 5)
  - Vyankatrao (Deft. 8)
  - Manekrao (Deft. 9.)
- Shankar (Defendant 6 W. Nanibai.)

Defendants 4 and 5, Shamrao and Govindrao are dead and are represented by their respective sons who were already on the record. Defendant 6 Shankar is also dead and is represented by his widow Mt. Nanibai.

[3] The defence to the action is considered in stages. We will deal first with Shankar's position. He was a minor at the date of the mortgage. The lower appellate Court finds that none of the debts were incurred by the father of the mortgagors Jhanabapu. It also finds that the debts were not for legal necessity. Accordingly, the defendants state that Shankar's share is not liable.

[4] The answer to this contention is that the matter is now res judicata. In the year 1923 Shankar and his mother Parbatibai (Shankar was then still a minor) sued Shamrao and Govindrao for partition; the suit is Civil Suit No. 9 of 1923. The mortgagee Narsappa was joined as a defendant to the case. Shanker raised the questions of legal necessity and the like. The plaint is Ex. P-18. The mortgagee did not oppose the partition but pleaded that the mortgage was binding on the whole body of coparceners. This plea was taken in Ex. P-14. In another statement (Ex. P-13) the mortgagee also pleaded in the alternative that if the mortgage were found not to be binding on the minor Shankar's interest then the items of the joint family property should as far as possible be allotted to the shares of Shamrao and Govindrao.

[5] The brothers of Shankar also contested the suit. One of the pleas taken by the two brothers was to the effect that the plaintiff Shankar was not the son of Jhanabapu. That implied that Shankar's mother Parbatibai had been immoral and that Shankar was her illegitimate son. That is not stated in so many words in the statement (Ex. P-19), but it is the necessary effect of what they say. We refer to this because of the plea of coercion which we will have to consider at a later stage.

[6] The parties to this litigation compromised their dispute. The compromise petition (Ex. P-15) was signed by all the parties including the mortgagee who was represented by a pleader Mr. D. V. Gharpure. The portion of the compromise which relates to the mortgagee is as follows: The petition first of all sets out that three of the instalments due on the mortgage have been fully paid together with interest and that only seven remained. Then it continues :

"The liability of the plaintiffs and the defendants 1 to 4 will be 1/3rd and 2/3rd respectively. With regard to defendant 5 it be decided in this compromise that the plaintiffs and defendants 1 to 4 are all liable for the remaining mortgage debt and all the conditions in the mortgage-deed."

[7] The plaintiff Shankar who was then a minor was represented in the litigation by his mother Parbatibai who acted as his next friend,

He was represented by a senior pleader Mr. Lule. The Court considered whether it should accord sanction to the compromise and reached the conclusion that the compromise was for the benefit of the minor and after stating out its reasons sanctioned the compromise. This will be found in EX. P-3.

[8] Following this a compromise decree was drawn up. The part of the decree which relates to the mortgagee is in these terms. It sets out that the first three kists have been paid with interest, and it then states that :

"all the parties agree the remaining seven kists with whatever interest would be chargeable are still to be paid to defendant 5 and that plaintiffs 1 and 2 and defendants 1 to 4 would be liable jointly and severally for the above balance of the mortgage money .... A declaration be granted in favour of defendant 5 that his mortgage stands effective for the remaining seven kists and the interest due thereupon and subject to all other conditions specified in the mortgage-deed as against plaintiffs 1 and 2 and defendants 1 to 4."

[9] It is clear from this decree that the mortgagee was entitled to enforce his mortgage for the balance due against the whole family. There is implicit in that the conclusion that the mortgage was good and binding. That is not stated in so many words but it is impossible to hold in a decree that a mortgagee can enforce his mortgage against the parties mentioned in the decree without at the same time importing into the decree the conclusion that the mortgage is binding against all the parties.

[10] The defendants seek to challenge this decree on the ground that a compromise decree does not act as res judicata, and also on the ground that it is open to a minor to challenge a compromise decree on any ground which he can take in a suit brought against him on the mortgage.

[11] We will deal first with the position of compromise decrees and their effect on the parties as regards res judicata. This matter is concluded by their Lordships of the Privy Council in A.I.R. 1929 P. C. 289[1] at p. 294. Their Lordships point out there that "an order by consent, not discharged by mutual agreement, and remaining unreduced, is as effective as an order of the Court made otherwise than by consent and not discharged on appeal .... In other words the only difference in this respect between an order made by consent and one not so made is that the first stands unless and until it is discharged by mutual agreement or is set aside by another order of the Court; the second stands unless and until it is discharged on appeal."

Their Lordships were dealing there with the question of res judicata and that, in our opinion, concludes the matter. A consent decree so long as it stands binds the parties as effectively and in the same way as any other decree; although, so far as getting that decree set aside is concerned, the matter stands on a different footing from other decrees.

[12] That brings us to the question as to how a consent decree can be set aside. Their Lordships indicate one method, namely, mutual agreement. That does not apply here. The other is, to quote the quotation of their Lordships of the Privy Council, to get it "set aside in proceedings duly constituted for the purpose." These words have been construed in English cases—in fact their Lordships quoted an English case—and also in India, to mean, to set aside in a suit properly instituted for that purpose. Apart from the English decision quoted in their Lordships decision, there is another in (1877) 6 Ch. D. 297.[2] There are also several other cases which will be found collected by Sir Dinshah Mulla in Edn. 11 of his Civil Procedure Code at p. 358. The learned author also states there that this can only be done by a suit. A similar conclusion was reached in 15 Bom. 594[3] at p. 598 and by a Division Bench of this Court in I. L. R. (1941) Nag. 513.[4]

[13] These cases were not cases of minors, and the question arises whether there is any difference between a consent decree to which all the parties are adults and one where a minor is concerned. In our opinion, there is none so far as this point is concerned, though the manner and the grounds on which a consent decree can be set aside by a minor are different and somewhat wider than the grounds on which an adult can do so. The general principle is that a decree is an order of a Court, and to quote the Privy Council quotation the judgment-debtor

"must when once it has been completed, obey it, unless and until he can get it set aside in proceedings duly constituted for the purpose."

That, in our opinion, is the general principle which runs through the doctrine of estoppel by record. A consent decree once obtained, whether by consent or otherwise, stands and must be obeyed until it is set aside. It must be obeyed not only in execution but in subsequent proceedings and it binds the parties as effectively as any other decree so long as it is there.

[14] So far as minors are concerned, their position is dealt with by Sir Dinshah Mulla at p. 70 of Edn. 11 of his Civil Procedure Code. The learned author points out there that a decree passed against a minor properly represented is binding upon him to the same extent as a decree passed against an adult, though a minor is entitled to impeach a decree passed against him if the next friend or guardian for the suit is guilty of fraud or gross negligence. Also, of course, if there was fraud. At page 1029 Sir Dinshah states that:

"A compromise decree may be set aside either in a regular suit or upon an application for review to the Court that passed the decree. But it cannot be called in question by way of objection to any proceeding taken in execution of it."

In our opinion, the same principle applies when a decree is being considered in a subsequent suit instead of in execution. The position is also dealt with in Mayne's Hindu Law (Edn. 10) at p. 915. The learned author states that:

"A decree in a suit in which a minor is properly represented may be liable to be set aside for fraud or other reasons, but till set aside it binds him, and proceedings to get rid of it must be commenced within three years from the date of the discovery of the fraud or from the termination of the minority."

[15] As this decree has never been set aside, and as this is not a suit constituted for that purpose, it stands good and we have next to consider the effect of it. As we have already said it is plain from the decree that the mortgagee is entitled to enforce his mortgage against all the mortgagors including the minor Shankar. It does not matter why it was so agreed. The fact remains that under the decree he is entitled. Accordingly it is not open to the minor or any one on his behalf now to challenge that decree.

[16] The learned counsel for the appellants contends that the decree says nothing about legal necessity and immorality of the father and so forth. He contends that these points were not in issue and there was no decision on them, and that, in any event, a decree by consent can only operate to create an estoppel under S. 115, Evidence Act, and that the principle of res judicata does not extend beyond, in any event, what is actually stated in the decree. We have already dealt with this and are of opinion that the matter is res judicata and that it is not open to the defendants to raise any plea which will have the effect of rendering the mortgagee's right to enforce his decree against the whole of the family property ineffective.

[17] The next point raised is that, in any event, Shankar's liability is restricted to Rs. 7000 under the compromise decree. He relies on cl. (2) of the decree which states that

"out of the lists of Rs. 32,148-0-0 admitted as joint debt by both sides as per details below the plaintiffs will be liable for one-third debt, i. e., Rs. 7000 0-0 only due on the mortgage of Narsappa Komti while the defendants will bear the other two-thirds of Narsappa and all the debts of all other creditors."

In our opinion, this relates to the liability of the members of the family inter se and not to the rights of the mortgagee. Those rights are to be found in cl. (7) of the decree the relevant portions of which we have already reproduced.

[18] Next we consider the position of the sons of Govindrao. The lower Court finds that these sons were not in existence at the date of the mortgage. This finding was accepted on behalf of the appellants in this Court. That being so, the sons cannot, in any event, challenge the mortgage because of the Full Bench decision in I. L. R. (1940) Nag. 573.[5] This is quite apart from the question of res judicata.

[19] Next, regarding the position of the sons of Shamrao. The finding is that only Rs. 19,378 of the mortgage debt is antecedent debt, and the rest is found by the lower Court not to be for legal necessity. Accordingly, the appellants say that the sons of Shamrao can challenge the mortgage to the extent of the balance, namely Rs. 10,622-0-0. In our opinion, the matter is concluded against the sons because of the previous suit. They are bound to the same extent as their father Shamrao. The decision there reached by consent was that the entire family property was to be liable for the mortgage. That concludes the matter.

[20] We may state that the mortgagee contests the findings of the lower Court which are against him on the point of legal necessity. But as, in our judgment, the mortgagee is bound to succeed on other grounds it is not necessary for us to enter into this.

[21] It was next urged that the sons of the mortgagors Shamrao and Govindrao have challenged the mortgage on the ground of immorality. This can only arise if the consent decree does not operate as res judicata and bind them. We have already held that it does. Therefore, we need only say very briefly that, in our opinion, it is beyond controversy that the sons cannot challange the antecedent debt of their father unless they can first establish their father's immorality and next establish some reasonable connection between the debt and the immorality that is to say, unless they can show that the debt was borrowed for immoral purposes. In our opinion, this is to be gathered from the Privy Council rulings. We need only quote 15 Cal. 717,[6] 64 M. L. J. 148[7]; 17 C. W. N. 124.[8] Also Mulla's Hindu Law, Edn. 9. p. 357 and Mayne's Hindu Law, Edn. 10, p. 442.

[22] The learned counsel for the appellants contends that the Privy Council decisions have been much misunderstood and relies on 15 Cal. 717[6] and an earlier Privy Council case in 6 M. I. A. 393[9] at p. 418. As we have said we do not intend to enter into this at length because of our finding on the question of res judicata. We merely content ourselves with stating that in our opinion the law is well settled and that it is necessary for the sons to show that the debt was borrowed for an immoral purpose. The finding here is that though the father was immoral there is no connexion shown between his immorality and the debt and that it is not proved that the debt was borrowed for any of those purposes. That finding regarding the facts was not challenged, and we were not shown how there was any connexion. All that was argued was that the sons need do no more than establish generally that the father was immoral and that he was unlikely to be in need of money for other purposes. That in our judgment is not sufficient.

[23] It was then argued that the consent decree can be set aside because it was obtained by coercion. The plea regarding this is to be found in paras. 3 and 4 of Shankar's written statement. He there says that the decree was obtained by "the exercise of undue influence, fraud and misrepresentation."

Later he says that it was obtained

"with the sole object of coercing her into submitting to the terms of compromise as dictated by them and defendant 1."

[24] The only detail regarding coercion, upon which reliance was placed in the appeal before us, was that Shamrao denied the legitimacy of Shankar and thus implied that his guardian and mother in that litigation, had been immoral. It is said that she was thus prevailed upon to enter into the compromise.

[25] As we have already said, this is not a proceeding in which we can entertain such a plea. It might be relevant in a proper suit for setting aside the compromise decree, but it cannot be taken by way of defence in the present suit. Apart from that, we have not been shown any other evidence. We do not know whether the lady was strong-willed, or otherwise. We do not know what advice she had beyond the fact that she was represented by a very senior pleader. Accordingly, we are unable to hold on that single allegation that there was coercion.

[26] We may add that the eldest brother Shamrao admitted in the mortgage deed by implication that his minor brother Shankar was a legitimate son of his father because he described him as his brother and joined him in the mortgage deed and acted as his guardian in that deed. This, however, is seized on by the appellant as one of the facts showing coercion. He says that the same person who admitted in the mortgage deed that Shankar was legitimate contended later in the partition suit that he was not. This, however, is not sufficient to constitute coercion.

[27] That leaves the question whether we should pass in this suit a decree for sale instead of one for foreclosure. It is said that the mortgage is an anomalous mortgage and, therefore, on the principle laid down in I. L. R. (1938) Nag. 91[10] we should exercise our discretion in passing a sale decree.

[28] We need not enquire here whether the mortgage is anomalous or not because even if it is, we are of opinion that the lower Court exercised a proper discretion in refusing to pass a decree for sale.

[29] The value of the property given by the appellants in their statement in the first Court is Rs. 40,000-0-0 at the time of the mortgage. According to them the value at the date on which they made the statements, namely 6-2-1943 was Rs. 31,980. The lower Court remarks that the property has fallen in value and it is clear from the statement of the appellants themselves that the property is worth about half of the amount due to the defendants on the decree. The decree is for Rs. 79,458-13-9. In addition to this we have the fact that the preliminary decree was passed on 30-3 1940 while a final decree was not made till 22-12-1943, that is to say, $3\frac{3}{4}$ years later. If the property really had any value disproportionate to the amount of the decree, it is evident that the mortgagors could and would have raised money on the strength of it to pay off this decree. Taking all these matters into consideration we are of opinion that the lower Court exercised a proper discretion in not allowing a sale. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Misc. Appeal No. 43 of 1945, Decided on 31-1-1947, from order of Dist. Judge, Chhindwara, D/-6-11-1944.

(a) Limitation Act (1908), Art. 182 (5)—Step-in-aid of execution — Criterion — Compromise decree passed on award—Subsequent application for final decree is not step-in-aid of execution—Question of bona fides is irrelevant.

The words "step-in-aid of execution of a decree" postulate very clearly that there must be at least a decree in existence. The passing of a decree creates a dividing line between the suit and its execution. An application for the passing of a final decree would, therefore, be an application in the suit and it cannot by any stretch of imagination be placed beyond the dividing line marked by the decree in the case so as to be called a step-in-aid of execution of a decree. In cases where a decree is already in existence the application must necessarily be to aid the execution of that decree. Infructuous applications made in the suit are not steps-in-aid of execution.

Hence where a compromise decree passed on an award which allowed the judgment-debtor to pay the amount by instalments and on failure to pay three instalments the whole of the amount was to become due, an application by the decree-holder, on default of three instalments, for a final decree, whether bona fide or not, must inevitably be regarded as a proceeding in the suit itself though entirely superfluous because the relief claimed had already been got and is not therefore a step-in-aid of execution to enlarge the period of limitation. The question of bona fides is irrelevant : 25 A. I. R. 1938 Lah. 117; 29 A. I. R. 1942 Nag. 63; 31

The decree-holder respondent is entitled to plead an acknowledgment to save limitation even in second appeal although he had not raised such a plea in the lower Courts especially when the orders of the lower Courts are in his favour and no question of surprise arises where he is relying upon a document of which the judgment-debtor appellant is himself the author. Judgment.—This is a miscellaneous (second) appeal against the order dated 6 11.1944 passed by Mr. K. Radhakrishnan, I. C. S., District Judge, Chhindwara, in Civil Appeal No. 12A of 1944 arising out of execution proceedings in Civil Suit No. 81A of 1937 decided by the Subordinate Judge, 2nd Class, Chhindwara.

[2] The suit was originally brought on a mortgage, but the matter was referred to an arbitrator and on his award a compromise decree was passed on 10-11-1937. By this decree the judgment-debtors were allowed to pay by annual instalments commencing from 1-6 1938. The agreement was that on default of three instalments the whole of the amount would become due. Admittedly three instalments were defaulted, and thereafter the decree-holder (respondent 1 in this matter) applied to the Court for a final decree on 7-9-1942. This application was rejected on 31-8-1943 because the compromise decree in effect operated as a final decree between the parties and after the rejection of this application the present application for execution was filed on 19-10-1943. This was patently beyond the period of limitation and unless the application dated 7-9-1942 can be regarded as a step-in-aid of execution of the decree the application for execution (unless otherwise saved) must be rejected.

[3] The two Courts below have held that the application for making the decree final was a step-in-aid of execution and they have relied on A. I. R. 1928 Mad. 38[1] and 14 Luck. 453.[2] For the appellant reliance is placed on I. L. R. (1942) Nag. 539,[3] 18 Lah. 671[4] and A. I. R. 1939 Cal. 488[5] and Mr. V. K. Sanghi who appeared for the minor respondent 5 has further relied upon I.L.R. (1944) Nag. 419.[6] The argument on behalf of the appellant is that the application for a final decree was a totally infructuous proceeding, and, therefore, it did not serve to save limitation. In I. L. R. (1942) Nag. 539[3] the decree-holder had applied to the Court which passed the decree to recall the decree sent to another Court for execution and to send it back to the same Court for execution. It was held that this was not an application in aid of execution under Art. 182 (5), Limitation Act, as being a thoroughly unnecessary and infructuous step. In 18 Lah. 671[4] which overruled A. I. R. 1937 Lah. 404[7] a Divisional Bench of the Lahore High Court doubted the correctness of the decision in A. I. R. 1928 Mad. 38.[1] The reasons given by their Lordships are as follows:

"In A. I. R. 1928 Mad. 38[1] it was held that strictly speaking O. 34, R. 5 has no application to a compromise decree, but that where the decree-holder, by applying for a final decree, was endeavouring to get an order which he thought at the time was necessary before executing his decree, but afterwards due to better advice he gave up that attempt and applied for the execution of the decree without obtaining a final decree, such an application was a step-in-aid of execution; for he was asking the Court to make an order which was thought necessary before taking out actual execution of the decree. With all respect, this amounts to a decision that the decree-holder can take any step, whether necessary or not, and, whatever that step may be, it will be counted as a step-in-aid of execution though unnecessary. This appears to us to go very far, and in any case this decision has no application to the facts before us where there was already a final decree in existence passed in the presence of the decree-holder."

In A.I.R. 1939 Cal. 488[5] a final decree had already been passed and the decree-holder made a second application for a final decree, and it was held that the application was not a step-in-aid of execution because it was not taken in aid of the decree which was already in existence but was something else quite independent of it. In I.L.R. (1944) Nag. 419[6] where the execution application was filed against a deceased judgment-debtor, Bobde J. held that the application did not save limitation. The gist of all these cases is that an application which is entirely infructuous and made merely to save limitation does not count as a step-in-aid of execution. The contrary view is expressed in the two cases referred to on behalf of the respondents, namely A.I.R. 1928 Mad. 38[1] and 14 Luck. 453.[2] In those cases there was a compromise decree and the decree-holder genuinely thought that he had to apply for a final decree before he could proceed with his execution, and the Court took into account the conduct of the decree-holder and in one case also the conduct of the judgment-debtor.

[4] In my opinion, the words "step-in-aid of execution of a decree" postulate very clearly that there must be at least a decree in existence. The passing of a decree creates a dividing line between the suit and its execution. An application for the passing of a final decree would, therefore, be an application in the suit and it cannot by any stretch of imagination be placed beyond the dividing line marked by the decree in the case so as to be called a step-in-aid of execution of a decree. In cases where a decree is already in existence the application must necessarily be to aid the execution of that decree, and I respectfully agree with the observations contained in 18 Lah. 671[4] and I. L. R. (1942) Nag. 539[3] that infructuous applications made in the suit are not steps-in-aid of execution and the present application whether bona fide or not must inevitably be regarded as a proceeding in the suit itself though entirely superfluous because the relief claimed had already been got. To hold otherwise would enable all manner of applications whether profitable or not to be used as steps-in-aid of execution to enlarge the period of limitation. In my opinion (and I say with all due respect) the question of bona fides is irrelevant. The matter has to be judged objectively as to whether the application in question was or was not a step-in-aid of execution. The learned counsel appearing on behalf of the respondent (decree-holder) attempted to distinguish the Lahore and the Calcutta cases on the ground that in those cases a final decree had already been passed. In principle I do not see any difference between those cases and the case before me. Either there is an executable decree or there is not one. If there is an executable decree that decree has to be executed by a proper application and the application must be in aid of that execution; if there is no decree in existence, then the application is not one for execution of the decree and must, therefore, be regarded as an application in the suit. From whichever point of view the matter is looked at, the present application falls within the rules indicated in I.L.R. (1942) Nag. 539[3] and the Lahore and the Calcutta cases cited by me above. I hold, therefore, that the application by itself did not serve as a step-in-aid of execution in the case.

[5] There is, however, another point which has been urged by respondent 1 (decree-holder) which serves to save limitation. It is that in answer to the application for making a final decree, the judgment-debtors applied for instalments admitting their liability under the decree. This is an acknowledgment of liability under S. 19, Limitation Act, and as it was consciously made of a subsisting liability a fresh period will start from 11th November 1942 when that acknowledgment was made : see I.L.R. (1939) ALL. 728.[8] The learned counsel appearing on behalf of the appellant says that this is a plea which was not taken in the lower Court. The decree-holder's application for execution is being challenged on the ground of limitation and he can in support of his case, prove any circumstance by which limitation is saved. He has in his favour orders of the learned Judges in the Courts below and he can also support these orders on any ground not noticed by the learned Judges who passed these orders. There is no question of surprise because the decree-holder is relying upon a document of which the judgment-debtor is himself the author and it is, therefore, well-known to him (the judgment-debtor). In the circumstances I hold, therefore, that the decree-holder (respondent 1 here) is entitled to plead an acknowledgment to save limitation. The result is that the decision of the two Courts below is confirmed and the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Where on the adjourned date of hearing the counsel for the plaintiff appears and applies for an adjournment on the ground of the absence of the plaintiff and the absence of any instructions, but the Court rejects the application and proceeds with the case by examining the defendant and dismisses the suit and passes a decree, the decision is on merits and the case is covered by O. 17, R. 3 and not O. 17, R. 2. It is immaterial whether this decree is right or wrong because if it is wrong it can be set aside in appeal preferred therefrom and not in any other way. Order.—Civil Suit No. 11-A of 1944 was fixed on 11-10-1945 for recording evidence of parties. On that date the plaintiff who had to lead evidence was not present and his pleader applied for an adjournment on the ground that the plaintiff was ill since last three days and that his witnesses were also ill and were consequently absent. The defendants opposed the adjournment and the lower Court refused to adjourn the case. Thereupon the plaintiff's counsel Mr. C. D. Gautam said that as the plaintiff could not appear and instruct him for that date he was unable to proceed with the case for want of instructions, and that the plaintiff may be treated as absent. Thereafter the Court recorded the evidence of defendant 1 as a witness and closed the case at 12.35 P. M. The learned Judge then immediately proceeded to write a judgment which was delivered the same day, and the decree in accordance with that judgment was actually signed on 12-10-1945.

[2] On 8-11-1945 the plaintiff applied for restoration of the suit to file on the ground that it was dismissed in default on 11-10-1945. This was registered as Miscellaneous Judicial Case No. 54 of 1945. This application was dismissed by the Court on 26-2-1946. It held that the dismissal of the suit on 11-10-1945 was on merits under O. 17, R. 3, Civil P. C., and the proper remedy of the plaintiff was by way of an appeal and not by way of an application for restoration of the suit to file. The plaintiff has now come up in revision to this Court. He is again met with the objection that his proper remedy against the decree passed by the lower Court was by way of an appeal and that that decree cannot be set aside by the same Court in proceedings for restoration of the suit or by this Court in revision against the order refusing to restore the suit to file.

[3] There is much substance in the contention of the non-applicant. In a case where the plaintiff at whose instance a suit is adjourned to enable him to perform some act necessary for the further progress of the suit remains absent on the adjourned date of hearing and also fails to perform the act for which the adjournment was granted to him, the Court should dispose of the case under O. 17, R. 2, Civil P. C. and not under O. 17, R. 3: vide cases collected by Sir D. F. Mulla in his Civil Procedure Code at p. 708.

[4] In the present case the counsel for the plaintiff did appear on the adjourned date of hearing and applied for an adjournment. It was when his request for adjournment was refused that he retired from the case on the ground that no instructions were given to him by the plaintiff for that particular date. This is not therefore a case where a party has failed to appear on the date to which the suit is adjourned. In these circumstances it cannot be said that the Court was positively wrong in proceeding under O. 17, R. 3, Civil P. C., or that it had no jurisdiction to decide the suit forthwith on merits as it did.

[5] It cannot be denied in this case that the lower Court did proceed under O. 17, R. 3 and decide the case on merits. It has also passed a decree dismissing the plaintiff's suit. It is immaterial whether this decree is right or wrong because if it was wrong it could be set aside in appeal preferred therefrom and not in any other way. At any event the Court passing such a decree has no jurisdiction to set aside the decree passed by it in a proceeding started on an application for restoration of a suit to file and this Court cannot also do it in revision against an order refusing to restore the suit to file. The decree passed by the lower Court would therefore stand apart from the fact whether it was right or wrong because the proper remedy for having it set aside was not followed by the plaintiff.

[6] In A.I.R. 1935 ALL. 398[1] a Division Bench of that Court held that where the lower Court holding that there was no ground for allowing an adjournment dismissed the suit the case was covered by O. 17, R. 3 and if it subsequently restored the same it acted without jurisdiction as it had no jurisdiction to restore the suit to file and the order for restoration was set aside by the High Court in revision. It was further observed in that case that where the plaintiff does appear either through himself or through his counsel the provisions of O. 17, R. 2 are not attracted and the case can only be disposed of under O. 17, R. 3, Civil P. C.

[7] I am aware of the fact that the Allahabad High Court has added by way of amendment a clause and an explanation to O. 17, R. 2 and it has also amended O. 17, R. 3, Civil P. C. But that does not affect the view that I am taking in this revision.

[8] This revision is dismissed mainly on the ground that when once the lower Court has proceeded under O. 17, R. 3, Civil P. C., and passed, rightly or wrongly, a decree the only remedy of the party is to appeal against that decree. This was not done in the present case and a wrong remedy in the shape of an application for restoration of the suit to file was adopted. In my view that application was rightly dismissed by the lower Court and consequently this revision is also dismissed with costs. Counsel's fee Rs. 20.

(a) C. P. & Berar Debt Conciliation Act (2 [II] of 1933), S. 21 — Stay of pending suit — In absence of certificate, civil Court is not bound to stay suit.

The civil Court is not bound to stay the proceedings of a suit in respect of a debt in the absence of a certificate from the Board under S. 21 and the civil Court is quite competent to proceed with the suit and eventually pass a preliminary decree for foreclosure. [Para 4]

(b) C. P. & Berar Debt Conciliation Act (2 [II] of 1933), S. 21—Certificate of suspension—Duty is cast on Board to issue certificate suo motu—Failure of Board to issue certificate — Decree in civil suit followed by discharge of debt by Board under S. 8 (2)—Debtor is not estopped from questioning decree because he was party to civil suit — Evidence Act (1872), S. 115.

It is clear from the provisions of S. 21 that the statutory duty is cast upon the Board to issue a certificate of suspension of civil suit proceedings, pending the determination of the application filed before it. It is the business of the Board to issue such a certificate suo motu. The only responsibility that lies upon the debtor is to bring it to the notice of the Board that some suit or proceeding is pending in a civil Court. [Para 4]

Where due to the mistake of the Board, the suit on a mortgage is not suspended with the result that a preliminary decree for foreclosure is passed and subsequently the Board discharges the debt under S. 8 (2), the debtor is not estopped from questioning the preliminary decree because he was a party thereto. Judgment. — This appeal arises out of final decree proceedings in Civil Suit No. 11-A of 1938 in the Court of the Second Subordinate Judge, Second Class, Amraoti. The facts of the case are somewhat as follows. The plaintiff (respondent before me) filed this suit on the basis of a mortgage dated 30-1-1924, claiming foreclosure in default of the payment of the mortgage debt. The appellant Lungya Dhangar was impleaded in this suit as defendant 4 as a subseqnent purchaser of the fields under the mortgage. The mortgage in suit comprises a house and two fields and defendant 4 Lungya is the subsequent purchaser of these two fields and is in possession thereof. Pending the suit in the trial Court, Lungya filed an application on 28-5-1938 before the Debt Conciliation Board, Murtizapur, (hereinafter called the Board) for conciliation of his debts including the mortgage debt of the plaintiff-respondent. The proceedings in the suit were not stayed, presumably because no certificate was issued by the Board to the civil Court, with the result that a preliminary decree for foreclosure was passed on 19-7-1938. Later on the Board discharged the debt of the plaintiff for his failure to submit to the Board a statement of debts in writing under S. 8 (2), Debt Conciliation Act (hereinafter referred to as the Act), on 8-9-1939. When the plaintiff filed an application for a final decree for foreclosure on 29-3-1940, defendant 4 Lungya objected to a final decree being passed against the two fields in his hands, on the ground that the debt was discharged by the Board. The plaintiff Bansilal admitted that the debt was discharged, but his contention was that as he was not served with a notice by the Board as required, the order of discharge of the Board was illegal and ultra vires.

[2] The trial Court found that defendant 4 Lungya could apply to the Board, that the plaintiff Bansilal was served with a proper notice and that the order of discharge being intra vires, the plaintiff was not entitled to a final decree for foreclosure, in respect of fields in the possession of defendant 4, namely, Lungya. It, therefore, passed a final decree for foreclosure only in respect of the house property, in the hands of the mortgagor.

[3] On appeal by the plaintiff, the lower Court of appeal set aside the order of the Court of first instance and ordered that the final decree for foreclosure be passed against the entire property comprised in the mortgage. Defendant 4 Lungya has, therefore, come up in second appeal.

[4] The substantial points for determination in the appeal before me are : (i) Whether defendant 4, Lungya is estopped from disputing the preliminary decree for foreclosure on the ground that he did not bring a certificate from the Debt Conciliation Board for stay of proceedings in the civil suit; and (ii) Whether the order of discharge dated 8.9.1938 passed by the Chairman of the Debt Conciliation Board was illegal and ultra vires.

[5] Point No. (i) : I agree with the first appellate Court that the civil Court was not bound to stay the proceedings of the suit on mortgage, in the absence of a certificate from the Board under S. 21 of the Act, and, that the civil Court was quite competent to proceed with the suit and eventually pass a preliminary decree for foreclosure and this is quite all right so far as it goes, but it appears from the reasoning of the lower Court of appeal that it was the duty of the appellant Lungya to obtain such a certificate and it was he, who was at fault for not getting it produced in the Court. It is quite clear from the provisions of S. 21 of the Act that the statutory duty is cast upon the Board to issue a certificate of suspension of civil suit proceedings, pending the determination of the application filed before it. It is the business of the Board to issue such a certificate suo motu. The only responsibility that lies upon the debtor is to bring it to the notice of the Board that some suit or proceeding is pending in a civil Court. It is an admitted fact that the debtor Lungya has clearly mentioned in his application to the Board dated 28.5.1938 (Ex. 4-D-2) under S. 4 of the Act that he wanted the mortgage debt due to the respondent Bansilal to be conciliated, which was the subject-matter of the suit (Civil Suit No. 11-A of 1938) in the second Subordinate Judge, 2nd Class, Amraoti. If in spite of this definite notice about the mortgage suit, the Board did not act in accordance with the requirements of law, under S. 21 of the Act, that was the mistake of the Board and not the fault of the debtor. It is a fundamental principle of jurisprudence that mistakes of Courts cannot prejudice parties and the plea of estoppel cannot, therefore, be sustained on the mistake of the Board. It is ridiculous to argue that defendant 4 Lungya is estopped from questioning the preliminary decree for foreclosure because he was a party thereto.

[6] The mortgage debt did not cease to be a "debt" within the meaning of S. 2 (e) of the Act, merely because it had merged into the preliminary decree for foreclosure. It is no doubt true that it was held in I. L. R. (1942) Nag. 357[1] that there was no debt left within the meaning of the Act after a preliminary decree for foreclosure had been passed, but that ruling was overruled by the Full Bench in I. L. R. (1944) Nag. 568[2] and it was held therein that the mortgage debt did not cease to be a debt within the meaning of S. 2 (e) of the Act, even though it had merged into a preliminary decree. It is, therefore, beyond question that the Board was quite competent to discharge the debt under S. 8 (2) of the Act and if the order was intra vires, the decretal amount was wiped out by operation of law. The preliminary decree for foreclosure was dead as against defendant 4, Lungya and it cannot certainly be revived on the ground of estoppel. Estoppel is always personal, and it cannot be argued that defendant 4 is guilty of any acts or representations to the plaintiff respondent, on the faith of which the latter acted to his prejudice, so as to create any estoppel against the appellant Lungya. The failure to obtain a certificate was not certainly the fault of the appellant Lungya as I have stated above. It was certainly not the result of any personal acts or representations on his part and it cannot possibly serve as the basis for the plea of estoppel. Looking at the question from another point of view I think that the plea of estoppel is devoid of any substance. The preliminary decree is wiped out, not by any personal acts of defendant 4 but by operation of law. If the statute says that the debt is discharged under certain conditions, as laid down by the statute itself, it is discharged. There is an end of the matter, for the simple reason that there is no estoppel against a statute. I, therefore, set aside the finding of the lower appellate Court and hold that defendant 4 Lungya is not estopped from disputing the preliminary decree for foreclosure.

[7] In conclusion I allow the appeal and set aside the order of the lower appellate Court and restore that of the trial Court, directing the final decree for foreclosure to be passed only in respect of the house in the possession of the mortgagors. The respondent will pay the costs of the appellant here and in the Courts below and bear his own.

Letters Patent Appeal No. 18 of 1943, Decided on 9-9-1947, from High Court's decree in S. A. No. 31 of 1942, D/- 23-11-1943.

C. P. Land Revenue Act (2 [II] of 1917), S. 203 (3) — Scope — Word 'transfer' does not cover simple mortgage — Simple mortgage of house in abadi with site under it does not entitle landlord to eject mortgagor.

The word 'transfer' in S. 203 (3) is not wide enough to include a simple mortgage. [Para 9]

A simple mortgage of his house in the abadi by the owner together with a mortgage of the site under it (whatever the effect of that might be) is not such a transfer as would entitle the landlord to eject the creator of the mortgage: S. A. No. 314 of 1935, Rel. on ; 27 A. I. R. 1940 Nag. 182, held must be taken to apply to possessory mortgages alone. Passages in that case so far as they are capable of being taken to apply to simple mortgages overruled. [Para 10]

The malguzar's cause of action arises when the actual transfer is made and not as in the case of a simple mortgage when a transfer of right to occupy is merely in contemplation and may never happen. [Para 8]

Judgment. — The plaintiff as malguzar of mouza Mendha in the Balaghat District brought a suit to eject the defendant, a tenant, from his site in the abadi of the village on the ground that he had executed a simple mortgage of his house and the site in favour of Ganpatrao Pande a large land-owner, and thereby contravened sub-s. (3) of S. 203, Land Revenue Act. The defendant pleaded that the word 'transfer' in that section did not include a mortgage and that the plaintiff had no right of suit as long as Ganpatrao Pande did not obtain possession of the site, and that possession had not been given by the terms of the mortgage and since the defendant remained in possession S. 203 would not be applicable.

[2] The defendant's contentions prevailed in the trial Court, and the plaintiff went up in appeal. The Additional District Judge, Balaghat, applying the principles in I. L. R. (1940) Nag. 167,[1] which deal with a possessory mortgage, to the case of a simple mortgage equally, allowed the appeal and decreed the plaintiff's claim.

[3] In second appeal Bose J. reversed this decision and restored that of the trial Court. Owing to the fact, however, that he was confronted with obiter dicta in two cases both of which decided a similar question in respect of possessory mortgages only but which pointed to opposite conclusions in the matter of simple mortgages, he gave permission for an appeal to be filed under the Letters Patent of this High Court.

[4] The first three sub-sections of S. 203, C. P. Land Revenue Act, read as follows :

"(1) Every person holding land in a mahal for agricultural purposes, otherwise than as a sub-tenant, or ordinarily working therein as an agricultural artisan or labourer, and the village-watchman are entitled to a housesite of reasonable dimensions in the abadi free of rent.

(2) Such person, on ceasing to hold such land, or to work as an agricultural artisan or labourer, or to be the village-watchman, shall forfeit his right under sub-s. (1).

(3) A person holding a site under sub-s. (1) shall be incompetent to transfer it except to his next heir or to a person entitled to and not already in possession of such site :

Provided that the materials of any house erected thereon shall be transferable."

The case as far as simple mortgages are concerned is one of first impression, the previous cases being concerned either with sales or possessory mortgages, and it must be noted that in every case, namely, 4 N. L. R. 149,[2] 11 N. L. R. 126[3]—both these cases were cases of sale—A.I.R. 1925 Nag. 396,[4] S. A. No. 314 of 1935[5] and I. L. R. 1940 Nag. 167[1]—which were cases of possessory mortgages—the defendant was not the tenant-mortgagor or the tenant-vendor but the vendee or the mortgagee. S. A. No. 314 of 1935,[5] the obiter dicta to which Bose J. has preferred to that of I. L. R. (1940) Nag. 167[1] is in agreement with the conclusion reached in that case that the possessory mortgage is one coming within the mischief of sub-s. (3) of S. 203, Land Revenue Code, though the reasoning in each case is different. It is true that in I. L. R. (1940) Nag. 167[1] there are statements in dealing with arguments that a tenant is not entitled to transfer his house in an abadi and the right to occupy the site by a possessory mortgage, which may be taken to apply to a simple mortgage. For instance it is said that:

"the term 'transfer' cannot be limited to a conveyance of all the transferor's interest in the property and includes such limited form of conveyance as a mortgage," and also

"A transfer of a house in the abadi site without the malguzar's permission by means of a mortgage is as repugnant to the Land Revenue Act as is a transfer by means of a sale, and the plaintiff's claim must be decreed."

The lower appellate Court then could with reason believe that these dicta applied to the case of a simple mortgage as well as a possessory

one. It was also stated in I. L. R. (1940) Nag. 167:[1]

"The malguzar cannot be expected to wait until such time as the period of mortgage expires and then be alert to take action in the event of the mortgagor failing to redeem."

We do not consider that these words were intended to apply or should be taken to apply to a simple mortgage; they cover only the question of a possessory mortgage where the mortgagee was in possession of the house and it would not be easy to determine when his rights as a mortgagee expired and any adverse possession began. In the very next sentence, it is stated that the transfer of the site is no more than the transfer of a licence to occupy, and naturally there is no transfer of the licence to occupy until the mortgagor occupant has moved out and the mortgagee has moved in.

[5] In the answer to the reference made in S. A. No. 314 of 1935[5] it is stated that the words "to transfer it" in sub s. (3) of S. 203 mean "to transfer the right to possession," that such right of possession is transferred if the transferor does some act which in law has the effect of transferring within the meaning of the Transfer of Property Act the right to possession, that despite the fact that in the case of a lease or possessory mortgage the transferor reserved to himself a right of re-entry thereafter, there would be a transfer of the present right of possession, and that that is the kind of transfer which sub-s. (3) prohibits.

[6] It follows then from this that there is no transfer of a right of possession until some act is done which has the effect of transferring it, and we are in respectful agreement with this view. The point was put with more acuity in the reference made by Niyogi J. which resulted in the opinion quoted, where we find:

"The word 'transfer' used in S. 203, Central Provinces Land Revenue Act comprises all such modes of transfer as result in the transfer of possession." (the italics are ours.)

And again:

"Consequently as soon as a licensee transfers the right to occupy, and ceases to occupy the site himself, the license which means only a permission to occupy comes to an end with the result that the transferee in occupation becomes a trespasser from the moment he takes possession." (Again the italics are ours.)

[7] Turning now to the wording of sub-s. (3) itself we are constrained to point out that the wording is somewhat loose. It lays down that "the person holding a site under sub-s. (1) shall be incompetent to transfer it . . . . ." The word 'it' cannot refer to the site as the site is not the property of the person holding it but of the malguzar, and the person holding it is only a licensee. 'It' therefore can only have reference to his right to occupy. Now, while a house on the site can be the subject of a mortgage the site itself cannot be mortgaged by the owner of the house since he has no title to the site, and the right to occupy or license is not something that is susceptible of being mortgaged at all. When therefore a person holding a site executes a mortgage of whatever character in respect of the site on which the house stands, his act in respect of that site is a nullity and of no effect, and the only way in which he can transfer the particular right to which the section refers is by allowing his mortgagee or vendee to enter into possession, either voluntarily or involuntarily, and relinquishing that possession himself. Until the tenant, that is to say, the person defined in sub-s. (1), relinquishes his possession and his transferee enters into possession there is no transfer as contemplated by sub-s. (3), and, as we have pointed out earlier in this judgment, every case unlike the present one which has been brought to our notice arises out of a suit brought against the transferee and not the transferor.

[8] A fortiori no suit can be brought against a licensee from the malguzar in respect of the transfer made or contemplated under sub-s. (3) since that sub-section unlike sub-s. (2) does not contemplate forfeiture of a right on the part of the licensee on account of the licensee's action if the licensee does transfer his right except to a person entitled. The malguzar's cause of action arises when the actual transfer is made and not as in the case of a simple mortgage when a transfer of a right to occupy is merely in contemplation and may never happen.

[9] The passages which we have cited from I. L. R. (1940) Nag. 167[1] in so far as they are capable of being taken to apply to mortgages of that description are too widely stated in so far as simple mortgages are concerned, and to that extent are now overruled and must be taken to apply to possessory mortgages alone. The contention raised by the appellant before us, which is really based on the wide assertion that the term 'transfer' in sub-s. (3) is wide enough to cover all mortgages including a simple mortgage, cannot therefore prevail.

[10] We have no doubt that the view taken by Bose J. is the correct one and that a simple mortgage of his house in the abadi together with a mortgage of the site under it (whatever the effect of that might be) is not such a transfer as would entitle the landlord to eject the creator of the mortgage.

[11] The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs. Counsel's fee Rs. 25.

BOSE AND PADHYE JJ.

Shamrav Bapuji —Defendant—Appellant v. Kamalnayan Jamanlalji Bajaj and others —Plaintiffs — Respondents.

First Appeal No. 75 of 1940, Decided on 12-12-1946, from decree of Sub-Judge, 1st Class, Wardha, D/- 13-2-1940.

(a) C. P. Tenancy Act (I [1] of 1920), S. 9 — Charge given to landlord, extent of —Prior encumbrancer, right of — Purchase of holding by landlord at rent sale — Right of prior charge-holder to redeem —Position of landlord in such case —Transfer of Property Act (1882), Ss. 92, 101, 60.

Under S. 9, C. P. Tenancy Act, the landlord is given a charge on the holding for his rent. The charge is not on the fee simple in the land but on the tenancy rights. That charge is made a first charge, and accordingly all prior encumbrancers are postponed to him. But they are no more than postponed. Thay are not wiped out altogether. The prior encumbrancer has therefore a subsequent right of suit: Case law relied on. [Para 18]

Section 9, C. P. Tenancy Act, confers no right of subrogation. Therefore, if subrogation is sought, the matter must be brought within S. 92, T. P. Act. The landlord has charge for rent upon the property and so falls within the class mentioned in cl. (a) of S. 91, T. P. Act, but when he brings the property to sale, he does not redeem the charge. Landlord when he purchases the holding in execution of rent decree does not redeem his own charge but extinguishes it by sale. Accordingly he does not come under S. 92, T. P. Act. Section 101, T. P. Act, however, comes into play in such cases and the landlord is entitled to set up his own charge as he is a chargeholder within the meaning of that section. [Paras 34, 35, 36 & 37]

Rent in respect of the absolute occupancy holdings fell in arrears and the lambardar brought suits to recover it and got a decree and in execution thereof purchased both the fields A and B and obtained possession. Some years before rent suit, one P had brought a suit against the tenant for money and a consent decree was passed during the pendency of the rent suit which created a charge on field A in respect of the decretal amount. In execution of the decree, P brought field A to sale and purchased it himself. His taking of possession was however resisted by the lambardar who was in possession. P then brought a suit seeking possession of A field against the defendant lambardar and claimed priority over him. In the alternative, he claimed the right to redeem the two fields by paying the defendant the price of his decrees etc, and on redemption he prayed that he be placed in possession of field A and as regards the other field, he claimed the right to bring it to sale, free of the defendant's encumbrances, in satisfaction of the unsatisfied part of his decree :

Held (i) that the plaintiff must redeem the landlord's charge before he could enforce his own charge under the decree; [Para 36]

(ii) that the defendant-landlord was not only the holder of the first charge because there had been no merger, but he was also a purchaser of the property. That resulted in splitting up of the charge. As the charge was split by reason of the defendant being the owner of the right to redeem as well as a chargeholder, the defendant should be paid so much of the total of the decree which he had obtained as was proportionately assignable to A field. On this payment being made the plaintiff would be entitled to enforce his mortgage against the defendant in the usual way, and if the defendant did not pay up, the field should be sold; [Para 38]

(iii) that since the plaintiff proceeded against field A only in the suit, he could not be permitted to proceed against field B. Therefore, so far as the prior charge which related to both fields was concerned, the defendant was in the position of a charge-holder who had acquired an indefeasible right as owner to a portion of the charged property, namely, the field B. This attracted the provisions of S. 60, T. P. Act, and resulted in a splitting up of the charge, and that resulted in piecemeal redemption; [Para 40]

(iv) that since the rights of the defendant in the litigation were not affected by the charge decree in plaintiff's favour, S. 52, T. P. Act, did not apply and question of lis pendens did not arise; [Para 42]

(v) that as the plaintiff's charge decree was registered before the purchase by the defendant in execution, it operated as notice; 39 Cal. 527 (P. C.) and 18 A. I. R. 1931 All. 62, Rel. on: [Para 43]

(vi) that since the plaintiff was not entitled to possession under the charge decree no question of accounting for profits on the part of the defendant arose; [Para 46]

(vii) that the defendant was entitled to amount spent by him on improvements of the field while in possession; [Para 46]

(viii) that the plaintiff was no more than a chargeholder, and all he could do was to enforce his charge. In doing so the defendant, as owner of the equity, had the right to redeem. [Para 49]

Annotation : — ('45 Com.) T. P. Act, S. 101, N. 6; S. 92, Ns. 6, 7.

(b) Transfer of Property Act (1882), S. 52 — Creation of charge during pendency of rent suit.

The plaintiff's charge on a field was created on 23-4-1930. This was during the pendency of the rent suit in respect of that field which was instituted on 11-2-1930. In a suit by the plaintiff to enforce the charge against the defendant-landlord who had purchased the field in execution of the rent decree, it was contended that the charge was consequently inoperative against the defendant :

Held, that the question of lis pendens did not arise. The defendant's only right in the litigation was to have the property brought to sale in satisfaction of a first charge which, as such, obtained priority over all other charges. The creation of a subsequent encumbrance did not affect that right. The defendant still got priority. His rights in the litigation were consequently not affected and so S. 52 was not called into play. [Para 42]

Judgment.—This judgment will govern First Appeal No. 75 of 1940 and First Appeal No. 76 of 1940. They turn on a construction of S. 9, C. P. Tenancy Act (Act I [1] of 1920). One is by the plaintiff and the other by the defendant.

[2] One Kautikabai was the absolute occupancy tenant of the fields in suit. They can be divided into two groups and it will be convenient to speak of them as two fields. One, comprising five K Nos., was known as the Bhonslawala field, and the other, comprising KI No. 88, was known as Bhivseni. Both are situate in mouza Digras of which the defendant is the lambardar.

[3] Kautikabai's rent fell into arrears and so the defendant instituted Civil Suit No. 2 of 1930 against her for the arrears. He obtained a decree (Ex. D-13) for Rs. 565-4-6 on 4th August 1930. He applied for execution, and the C Form was sent to the Collector. On 6th October 1934 the Collector ordered both sets of fields to be sold (Ex. D-15).

[4] In the meanwhile, there were further arrears and so a second suit (Civil Suit No. 247 of 1933) was launched on 30th March 1933. This resulted in a decree on 28th July 1933 (Ex. D-17) for Rs. 461-14-0. Here also, the C Form was sent to the Collector, and on 16th November 1934 the two executions were consolidated. The Collector ordered both sums to be included in one proclamation and directed the fields to be sold for the combined amounts (Ex. P-14).

[5] One of the fields (Bhivseni) was sold on 19th January 1935 and was purchased by the decree-holder (the defendant lambardar in this case). The sale was confirmed in due course, and the defendant was placed in possession on 21st May 1935. The other field (Bhonslawala) was sold on 12th December 1935 and was also purchased by the defendant. This sale was also confirmed and the defendant was placed in possession on 26th May 1936.

[6] Some years before the first rent suit was launched, namely in 1927, the plaintiff had filed a suit for money (Civil Suit No. 16 of 1927) against Kautikabai and certain others with whom we are not concerned. The parties compromised, and the plaintiff was given a consent decree on 23rd April 1930. This decree created a charge for Rs. 55,000 on the plaint fields and certain other property. The judgment in that suit is Ex. P-6. It will be observed that the charge was created during the pendency of the first rent suit but before the sale and before the decree.

[7] In execution the plaintiff brought the Bhonslawala field to sale and purchased it himself on 28th June 1937. When he tried to take possession he was resisted by the defendant who had already been placed in possession in execution of his own decrees.

[8] In the present suit the plaintiff seeks possession of the Bhonslawala field which he purchased and claims priority over the defendant. In the alternative, he claims the right to redeem the two fields by paying the defendant the price of his decrees etc., and on redemption he prays that he be placed in possession of Bhonslawala; and as regards the other field, he claims the right to bring it to sale, free of the defendant's encumbrances, in satisfaction of the unsatisfied part of his decree.

[9] The question at issue is who is to get priority and to what extent. It arises because of S. 9, C. P. Tenancy Act of 1920. But before going into that it will be necessary to define the respective positions of the plaintiff and the defendant qua holders of the right to redeem. Both have charges on the property. The defendant purchased the right to redeem the Bhonslawala field, which alone is in suit, on 12th December 1935. The plaintiff purchased on 28th June 1937. Therefore, so far as the ownership of the field is concerned, the defendant gets priority, and for purposes of redemption he must be treated as owner of the equity of redemption. As regards the priority of their respective charges and the results which flow from that, that is governed by S. 9 which we will now have to examine.

[10] Section 9 provides:

(1) that the rent of the holding of an absolute-occupancy tenant shall be a first charge thereon; and

(2) that "notwithstanding anything contained in S. 100, T. P. Act, 1882, and O. XXXIV of Schedule 1, Civil P. C. 1908, such holding shall be liable to sale for the satisfaction of such charge in execution of a decree for rent against the tenant whether such decree orders such sale or not."

It also permits any person claiming an interest in the holding

"to deposit in the Court executing a decree for rent on account of such holding, the amount due under such decree."

and directs that

"such deposit shall be credited in satisfaction of such decree."

[11] The provision which makes the rent a first charge on the holding gives the landlord priority over other charge-holders and mortgagees. It merely means that even though the landlord's right to recover the rent may have arisen after a prior encumbrance the landlord shall be put in the same position as if it had occurred first. Therefore, whatever the order of their respective titles to their charges, we must regard the defendant landlord as the first charge-holder in respect of the sums awarded to him under both his decrees, and look upon the plaintiff as a subsequent encumbrancer. Of course, actually the landlord's charge accrues as soon as the rent is in arrears. Therefore, so far as the arrears prior to 1930 were concerned, the landlord would be a first charge-holder anyway. But that, in our opinion, is immaterial because whether the arrears are prior or subsequent the law gives the landlord precedence. So far the matter is simple. All that is necessary is to reverse the order of their encumbrances where necessary.

[12] Next follows a matter which raises complications. In the ordinary way, when a prior charge-holder seeks to enforce his charge he has to join all subsequent encumbrancers to the action so as to give them an opportunity of redeeming, and if they are not joined their rights are not affected. But owing to the special provisions of S. 9 the landlord need not join anyone but the tenant and he can still enforce his charge. Subsequent encumbrancers, and those who are relegated to that position because of the section, are given the right to free the holding under S. 9(3) depositing the amount of the decree in Court any time before the sale. But they need not be joined to the action and they need not be noticed. That raises the question whether this is their only chance of redemption. That is a question which has been debated many times in this Court, and a series of cases hold that it is not. With one exception they are all agreed that a subsequent suit for redemption lies.

[13] We are in respectful agreement with the majority view. Section 9 enacts a special law, and though a special law overrides the general it only does so to the extent to which it expressly or by necessary implication changes the general law. This is particularly so when the special law seeks to affect vested interests. Under S. 9 (1) a prior charge holder is relegated to the position of a subsequent encumbrancer. That is bad enough from his point of view, but if the intention was to wipe away his charge altogether he has a right to have that unequivocally expressed. In our judgment, that is not done by affording him the privilege of paying off the landlord's charge under S. 9 (3) when he is not a party to the action. That merely softens the rigour of the blow inflicted by sub-s. (1). It does not take away his general right as a puisne encumbrancer.

[14] It seems futile to us to relegate him to the position of puisne encumbrancer by sub s. (1) and then hold, without express legislation to that effect, that he is not to have any of the rights of a puisne encumbrancer. Moreover, that is not the way the legislature acts. In the allied legislation (C. P. Land Revenue Act of 1917) which was enacted only three years befor the present Act, there are similar provisions except for one notable difference. Section 122, Land Revenue Act, makes the land revenue a first charge on the estate, mahal or land. But S. 138(1), unlike S. 9, C. P. Tenancy Act, provides that the purchaser at the auction will get the land free from all encumbrances. There must have been some reason for omitting this express provision in the later Act. In our opinion, the legislature would have made a similar provision in the C. P. Tenancy Act if that had been its intention. We are accordingly in respectful agreement with the following cases which hold that the prior encumbrancer, though relegated to a secondary position by the section, is not wiped out altogether, and that he has a subsequent right of suit. Exactly what he can do in the subsequent suit, whether claim a right to redeem only, or to enforce his mortgage, is a matter we have yet to consider. The decisions to which we refer are A. I. R. 1927 Nag. 119,[1] I. L. R. (1937) Nag. 498,[2] I. L. R. (1940) Nag. 522,[3] I. L. R. (1941) Nag. 607[4] and S. A. No. 287 of 1937.[5] The decision of Niyogi J. in I L.R. (1936) Nag. 138,[6] which was quoted to the contrary, we will consider later.

[15] Reliance was placed by the appellant on I. L. R. (1940) Mad. 599[7] at p. 616 where their Lordships quoted Willes J. to the effect that:

"Where the statute creates a liability not existing at common law, and gives also a particular remedy for enforcing it .... With respect to that class it has always been held, that the party must adopt the form of remedy given by the statute."

He also relied on 5 N. L. R. 176.[8]

[16] In our opinion that principle does not apply. The rights and liabilities of a charge-holder are not new. They are defined and dealt with under the ordinary law. All that S. 9 does is to alter the order of the charges where necessary and give the landlord a special privilege, namely the right to enforce his charge without joining either subsequent encumbrancers or those who are relegated to that position; and the effect of sub-s. (3) is to prevent these other charge-holders from questioning either the existence of the arrears of rent or their extent. As regards that, they are bound by the decree.

[17] The object of the Legislature was to provide the landlord with a simple and effective remedy when his rent is not paid. He holds the superior right and is not concerned with mortgagees of the lesser interests, namely, the interests of the tenant. It was considered undesirable that these holders of lesser interests should be permitted to intervene and challenge his rights and complicate a simple rent suit by the introduction of extraneous matters in which the landlord was not interested. But except for this, there is here no creation of new rights and remedies under the general law. Landlords are not new, nor are tenants; nor are chargeholders unknown to the general law. On the contrary, their rights are well defined. The rule enunciated by their Lordships does not apply in such cases. On the contrary, the rule to be applied here is the one which directs Courts to respect vested rights and rights given by the general law and to permit them to be varied only to the extent expressly empowered by the special law or empowered by necessary implication.

[18] In our opinion, the position is this. The landlord is given a charge on the holding for his rent. The charge is not on the fee simple in the land but on the tenancy rights. That charge is made a first charge, and accordingly all prior encumbrancers are postponed to him. But they are no more than postponed. They are not wiped out altogether.

[19] Next, it is clear to us that what the landlord sells at the auction is the tenant's interests in the holding and not his (the landlord's) fee simple in the land. Accordingly, a stranger-auction-purchaser gets only the tenant's rights in the land. He does not acquire any of the landlord's superior rights. In the circumstances, it is not easy to see how a stranger-purchaser can be said to step into the landlord's shoes and acquire his charge. It is impossible to hold that there is, or can be, any subrogation in a case like this. It is clear to us that the stranger-purchaser steps into the tenant's shoes and not the landlord's. He becomes a tenant and has no higher rights. When the landlord purchases a complication arises, but until we are clear about the stranger-purchaser's rights it will not be easy to define the landlord-purchaser's position.

[20] Now, if there is no subrogation when a stranger purchases, and a prior encumbrancer is relegated to a secondary position, then we have a simple case of a man purchasing an encumbered estate and allocating part of the purchase price to the satisfaction of a prior encumbrance. This is considered at length by the Full Bench in I. L. R. (1938) Nag. 206.[9] The question posed there was (p. 215):

"Is a purchaser of a property with whom is left part of the consideration of the sale in his favour for paying off a mortgage but in whose favour there is no express agreement of subrogation in writing registered entitled to claim subrogation as against a later mortgagee under S. 92, T. P. Act as amended by Act 20 [XX] of 1929 ?"

The answer was no.

[21] Now, the position posed there is, in our opinion, almost exactly the position here when there is a stranger-purchaser. It is true no part of the purchase price is left in the purchaser's hands; the prior encumbrance is automatically discharged, but that makes the matter worse for the purchaser, and in any case, that position was dealt with in the argument at p. 219. The Full Bench point out that in such a case the only way in which the purchaser can get subrogation is (1) by first acquiring the prior mortgagee's rights and then the mortgagor's, or (2) by lending money to the mortgagor to pay off the prior mortgagee and obtaining from the mortgagor an agreement in writing registered under S. 92, T. P. Act. These rights are now regulated by statute, and, in our opinion, it is no longer open to us to apply equitable principles which have not been embodied in the Transfer of Property Act. As Sulaiman C. J. said in I. L. R. (1937) ALL. 880[10] at p. 892:

"The entire law is now contained in Ss. 91 and 92 and also 95 and 101 of the new Act."

[22] A Division Bench of this Court took the same view when construing S. 9, C. P. Tenancy Act: see I. L. R. (1941) Nag. 607[4] at p. 612 Reference may also be made to the observations of the Privy Council where, dealing with S. 60, T. P. Act, they say that questions of redemption are governed and delimited by the Act: see I. L. R. (1942) ALL. 608[11] at pp. 621, 623. What applies to redemption applies equally, in our opinion, to the allied question of subrogation.

[23] The Allahabad Full Bench say at p. 895 that:

"If the vendee .... has taken the property and undertakes as part of the sale consideration .... to discharge a prior debt, he is making the payment out of the money which really belongs to his transferor and is not paying money which belongs to him himself."

[24] The Nagpur Full Bench takes the same view at p. 218. But at p. 219 a distinction is drawn between a stranger-purchaser and one who falls within S. 91, T. P. Act:

"Different considerations apply where D, (the purchaser) is a subsequent mortgagee or other person falling within S. 91, T. P. Act or a transferee in circumstances that cause him not to be in the position of a mortgagor."

What these considerations are the Full Bench do not say. It will be nesessary, therefore, to examine the local decisions under S. 9.

[25] In A. I. R. 1927 Nag. 119[1] Kinkhede A. J. C. considered that the auction-purchaser has a dual capacity. In one he steps into the shoes of the holder of the first charge and in the other he is a purchaser of the equity of redemption. He accordingly has the option of redeeming as owner or of falling back on his first charge and enforcing it.

[26] This case was decided in 1927 before the Transfer of Property Act was amended by Act 20 of 1929. Unfortunately no facts are set out in the report so we do not know whether the learned A. J. C., was dealing with a stranger-auction-purchaser or the landlord. If he was dealing with a stranger, then, for the reasons we have already given, we do not think the law laid down there holds good after the amendment. But if he is referring to the landlord then different considerations apply.

[27] Niyogi J. considered the matter in I. L. R. (1936) Nag. 138.[6] In this case one S purchased the holding from the absolute-occupancy tenant in 1920 in execution of a simple money decree, but never got physical possession. Shortly before the purchase, namely in 1919, and again after the purchase, in 1923, the landlord instituted two suits against the tenant for arrears of rent. He obtained two decrees, which were consolidated, and at the auction the holding was purchased by one H in the year 1925. In 1930 H sold the holding to the landlord at least that is how the transaction is described though of course there could be no sale in such a case. It would be a surrender. Thereupon S sued H and the landlord for possession. That suit was dismissed. Thereupon S filed the suit with which Niyogi J. was concerned for redemption. He claimed the right to pay off the rent decrees and to get possession. Niyogi J. held he could not redeem. He held that S's only remedy was to pay off landlord's first charge under S. 9 (3), C. P. Tenancy Act, in the execution proceedings (see p. 140), and that once the holding was sold S's right of redemption disappeared.

[28] It is to be observed that S, in that case, was not a chargeholder. At no time had he any charge on the land. He was in the simple position of purchaser of the holding. As there were arrears of rent extant upon the land at the time of his purchase it was his duty to pay them. He did not pay them, therefore he was in no better position than the tenant himself. As the tenant could not have redeemed after the sale H, who stood in the tenant's shoes, could not do so either. Whether the case was rightly decided or not we need not say, but it is to be distinguished from a case like the present where the person in H's position has a charge upon the land and acquires the holding in satisfaction of his own charge. Grille J. (as he then was) distinguished Niyogi J's decision on this ground in S. A. No. 287 of 1937[5] and he pointed out that Niyogi J. did not dissent from Kinkhede A. J. C's view but distinguished it saying that that case "bears no analogy to the present case."

[29] In I. L. R. (1937) Nag. 498[2] Gruer J. dealing with a stranger-auction-purchaser at the landlord's auction, held that he was in no better position than an auction-purchaser who buys in execution of a simple money decree. If the estate is encumbered at the time of his purchase he takes it subject to those encumbrances. But, curiously enough, a decree for redemption was passed and the stranger-auction-purchaser was allowed to claim the money he had paid at the landlord's auction sale, (p. 502). We gather this means the purchase price and not merely the amount of the rent decree. But whichever it is we find it difficult to reconcile this with the finding that the stranger-purchaser is in no better position than an auction purchaser, who buys in execution of a simple money decree. A purchaser at an auction gets no better title than his judgment-debtor, and mortgagees who were not parties to the suit are not affected by it: see Mulla's Civil Procedure Code, Edn. 11 pp. 266 and 906; also 18 Cal. 164[12] at pp. 164, 179. Such a purchaser stands in the shoes of the owner and like any other owner of the right to redeem he must either discharge the encumbrances on the property or have his property sold. He cannot use a prior encumbrance as a shield unless he has a right of subrogation or comes in under S. 101, T. P. Act. A person who purchases in execution of a simple money decree has no such right. Accordingly, we find it difficult to reconcile Gruer J.'s conclusions with the decree which he passed.

[30] The next decision in order of time is Grille J.'s decision in S. A. No. 287 of 1937.[5] In his case the landlord himself purchased. A prior mortgagee had, however, obtained a decree for foreclosure shortly before and entered into possession. Accordingly, the landlord purchaser sued for possession. Grille J. held that he was in the same position as stranger-purchaser. He purchased subject to the mortgage and accordingly was not entitled to possession. His duty was to redeem the mortgage. This is a question we shall have to consider later.

[31] Next follows a decision of Pollock and Dig by JJ. in I. L. R. (1940) Nag. 522.[3] They were concerned with stranger-auction-purchasers. The suit was by mortgagees to enforce their mortgage. It was held that the suit was competent and that the stranger-purchasers must redeem. But it was also held that if they redeemed they would be given credit for Rs. 107-3-9, the amount of the rent decree. This was done because the lower Court had so ordered and that part of the decree was not appealed against. Pollock J. observed at p. 524. "I express no opinion on the correctness of that decision." We have already dealt with this and doubt whether the first Court's decree was legally substainable to that extent. The High Court's position is of course understandable. There was no appeal against that part of the decree and so the High Court could not have interfered. But the first Court neither permitted subrogation nor treated the purchasers as mortgagors pure and simple. If there was subrogation it would have been the duty of the plaintiffs mortgagees to redeem the purchasers. But that was not the decree. The mortgagees were permitted to enforce their mortgage and the purchasers were told to redeem. The purchasers were to be given credit for the Rs. 107-3-9 only if they redeemed. Otherwise, we gather the property was to be put to sale, and there was no direction to the effect that this sum should be refunded to them out of the sale proceeds. Even such a direction would, in our opinion, have been wrong. As we have said, the matter is now regulated by statute, and there is no room for the application of some vague and hitherto unknown equity.

[32] The last case is I. L. R. (1941) Nag. 607.[4] There a subsequent mortgagee paid the landlord the arrears of rent due on the holding without the intervention of Court. When the prior mortgagee sued on this mortgage the subsequent mortgagee claimed priority to the extent of the landlord's first charge. He contended that he stepped into the landlord's shoes and became a holder of the landlord's first charge the moment he paid the arrears of rent in order to save the holding from sale. It was held that the charge was extinguished the moment the rent was paid and so the subsequent mortgagee could not get priority.

[33] This analysis of the case law reveals that the only case which dealt with the rights of a landlord-purchaser was Grille, J's decision in S. A. No. 287 of 1937.[5] He held that the landlord was in no better position than a stranger-purchaser. This is the position we have to consider.

[34] Now, the Division Bench in I. L. R. (1941) Nag. 607[4] at pp. 611, 612 say that S. 9, C. P. Tenancy Act, confers no right of subrogation. Therefore, if subrogation is sought, the matter must be brought within S. 92, T. P. Act. We have already said that we agree with this view because the matter is now governed by statute.

[35] Section 92 lays down two conditions. First, the person claiming the right must be one of the persons referred to in S. 91, and second, he must have redeemed property subject to a mortgage (which will also include a charge because of S. 100). Now, the landlord has a charge upon the property and so falls within the class mentioned in Cl. (a) of S. 91, but when he brings the property to sale he does not, in our opinion, redeem that charge. A stranger who purchases at the auction does not redeem the charge, nor is he a person "interested." He pays the full price and buys free of that particular encumbrance. What happens to his purchase money is no concern of his unless he takes the precaution of obtaining a right of subrogation by writing registered under the second part of S. 92. We have already dealt with this. In the same way we do not see how the landlord can be said to be redeeming his own charge when he purchases instead of a stranger. He does not redeem it but extinguishes it by the sale. Accordingly, we are of opinion that he does not come in under S. 92.

[36] That leaves S. 101 which deals with merger. Here the conditions are these. The section starts by saying,

"Any ..... person having a charge upon immoveable property ..... may purchase or otherwise acquire the rights in the property of the mortgagor" (which as the context shows will include a charge-holder).

Now, the landlord is, in our opinion, such a person. He has a charge upon the property and he either purchases or "otherwise acquires" the property at the auction. Therefore, he comes, within this portion of the section. The section continues,

"Without thereby causing the ..... charge to be merged as between himself and any subsequent mortgagee ..... and no such subsequent mortgagee ..... shall be entitled to foreclose or sell such property without redeeming the prior ..... charge."

[37] In our opinion when the landlord purchases at his own auction S. 101 comes into play and he is entitled to set up his own charge. The position is otherwise when a stranger purchases. To that extent we, with the utmost respect dissent from Grille J's decision in S. A. No. 287 of 1937.[5] The plaintiff must accordingly redeem the landlord's charge before he can enforce his own mortgage.

[38] The next question we have to determine is the extent of that charge. The matter is complicated because the plaintiff is only interested in the Bhonslawala field while the landlord's decrees in his rent suit covered two fields—Bhonslawala as well as Bhivseni. Now, the defendant landlord is not only the holder of the first charge because there has been no merger, but he is also a purchaser of the property. That results in splitting up of the charge. Had there been only one field in dispute the defendant would have been entitled to Rs. 1027-2-6 which is Rs. 565-4-6 plus Rs. 461-14-0, the amount of the two decrees we have mentioned at the outset of our judgment. He would also have been entitled to have added to this the amount of four other decrees with which we shall deal later. But as the charge is, in our judgment, split by reason of the defendant being the owner of the right to redeem as well as a chargeholder, the defendant will be paid so much of the total of the six decrees which he has obtained as is proportionately assignable to the Bhonslawala field. On this payment being made the plaintiff will be entitled to enforce his mortgage against the defendant in the usual way, and if the defendant does not pay up the field will be sold.

[39] We direct a splitting up of the first charge for this reason. The original owner of the property, Mt. Kautikabai, the tenant, has disappeared and the defendant stands in her shoes. If the defendant were to be paid the whole of the Rs. 1027-2-6 then the plaintiff would stand in the position of an assignee of the first charge. He would not, by reason of this payment, become owner of the right to redeem. Before he could reach that position it would be necessary for him to enforce this first charge. But such enforcement has to be against somebody and that somebody is the owner of the right to redeem or whoever stands in his shoes; and it is axiomatic that the owner of the right to redeem can redeem.

[39a] Now, the original owner of the property has disappeared, and the defendant stands in her shoes. Therefore, the only person who can now redeem is the defendant. But it would be absurd to hold that he can redeem the whole property because then a vicious circle would be created and there would be no end to the action. Plaintiff 1 would redeem the entire first charge and step into the defendant's shoes. Next the defendant, as owner of the right to redeem, would re-redeem the plaintiff and we would be where we were before with the plaintiff seeking to enforce his charge against the Bhonslawala field and the defendant out of pocket to the extent of the first charge which he has redeemed.

[40] In our opinion, the true position is this. The plaintiff is proceeding against a particular field. He cannot in this suit travel beyond that and obtain other property to which he has no title. The defendant, on the other hand, is entitled to use his prior charge as a shield against the plaintiff's attack on the field in dispute in this case. But as regards the other field, the defendant is the owner of it. He has purchased it and there is now no encumbrance on it. The plaintiff cannot be permitted to proceed against it in this suit because this suit is confined to the Bhonslawala field. Therefore, so far as the prior charge which relates to both fields is concerned, the defendant is in the position of a chargeholder who has acquired an indefeasible right as owner to a portion of the charged property, namely, the Bhivseni field. This attracts the provisions of S. 60, T. P. Act, and results in a splitting up of the charge, and that results in piecemeal redemption.

[41] A question of lis pendens was raised. The plaintiff's charge was created on 23-4-1930. This was during the pendency of the first rent suit (Civil Suit No. 2 of 1930) which was constituted on 11-2-1930. It was contended that the charge was consequently inoperative against the defendant.

[42] We do not think any question of lis pendens arises Section 52, T. P. Act, does not prohibit a transfer of property during the pendency of a litigation. All it says is that such transfer shall not affect the right of any party to the suit. The defendant's only right in the litigation was to have the property brought to sale in satisfaction of a first charge which, as such, obtained priority over all other charges. The creation of a subsequent encumbrance did not affect that right. The defendant still got priority. His rights in the litigation were consequently not affected and so S. 52 was not called into play.

[43] It was next argued that the defendant purchased the equity of redemption without notice of the plaintiff's charge and so it does not bind him. This is material only in so far as it affects the defendant's title as owner and not as a chargeholder. If he wants to rely on his rights as owner then he must show, not only that he had no notice of the prior charge but also that with due diligence he could not have known. The plaintiff's charge-decree was registered on 21-8-1930 and this operates as notice. See 52 ALL. 985[13] at p. 990 and the observations of the Privy Council in 39 Cal. 527[14] at p. 556 where their Lordships say :

"If Gajadhur Mahto had taken the ordinary precaution of inspecting the register ..... before he took his mortgage ..... he would have found that the "(property)" had been charged ..... It is to be presumed that Gajadhur Mahto took the ordinary precautions before parting with his money, which a prudent intending mortgagee would take."

This contention has no force.

[44] A question was raised regarding the defendant's right of pre-emption under the Tenancy Law, but we are not concerned with that in this suit and say nothing about it beyond setting out the fact that the defendant raised the point before us in order, as he says, to safeguard his right hereafter and to show that he had not abandoned it.

[45] A question of improvements also arises. The defendant claimed Rs. 850-0-0 for this under S. 51, T. P. Act. The lower Court holds that he spent Rs. 700 but has omitted to include this in the decree. This figure was not challenged but it was urged that the profits of the field should be deducted. It was argued that if the defendant wants to occupy the position of a chargeholder and claim to be redeemed then he must account for the profits.

[46] We do not think this is right. The defendant is not primarily a chargeholder. He is the owner of the property. The plaintiff has only a charge on it and had no right to possession. Therefore, the owner-defendant could do what he liked with the profits. The question of the prior charge only arises because of the statutory protection which S. 101, T. P. Act, gives. In order to protect his interests, which have priority over the plaintiff's, the defendant can use his prior encumbrance as a shield and demand that he be reimbursed for what he paid towards redemption of this field. That, however, is a right given to the defendant. It is a special privilege conferred on him alone and does not impair his position otherwise as owner of the right to redeem. The plaintiff gets no extra rights because of this, therefore, as he was not entitled to possession under his charge decree, no question of accounting for profits arises. The defendant will accordingly be allowed Rs. 700 for the improvements he has made.

[47] The result then is this. The defendant has six decrees for arrears of his rent in his favour. They are as follows: Exhibit D-13 in Civil Suit No. 2 of 1930 for Rs. 565-4-6, Ex. D-17 in Civil Suit No. 247 of 1933 for Rs. 461-14-0, Ex. D-19 in Civil Suit No. 485 of 1933 for Rs. 259-11-6, Ex. D-21 in Civil Suit No. 555 of 1933 for Rs. 15-14-0, Ex. D-22 in Civil Suit No. 616 of 1935 for Rs. 21-12-6, Ex. D-23 in Civil Suit No. 434 of 1936 for Rs. 123-8-9. Total Rs. 1,448-1 3.

[48] The lower Court has only taken the first three into account. It is admitted on behalf of the plaintiff that he will also have to pay the amount of the other three. But the lower Court has not made any apportionment between the Bhonslawala field and the Bhivseni field on the one hand, and the occupancy and absolute occupancy fields in each decree on other. The defendant's charge is against the absolute occupancy fields only, so that will have to be separated. Both these errors will be corrected, as also the omission to allow the defendant credit for the Rs. 700 spent on improvements.

[49] The lower Court has passed a decree for redemption treating the plaintiff as the owner of the right to redeem. As we have pointed out, that is not correct. The defendant was the first to purchase that right. The existence of a mortgage or charge does not prevent the mortgagor from selling or otherwise transferring his right of redemption. Accordingly, the first to purchase the equity steps into the owner's shoes. Once the equity is sold it cannot be sold over again, and the second purchaser gets no title to it. The plaintiff is, therefore, no more than a chargeholder, and all he can do is to enforce his charge. In doing so the defendant, as owner of the equity, has the right to redeem.

[50] It will now be ascertained how much out of the Rs. 1448-1-3 which appertains to the two absolute occupancy fields is apportionable to the Bhonslawala field. If the parties can agree on a figure, that will be accepted. If not, that will have to be determined. The decree will then direct that the plaintiff do pay to the defendant that sum plus a further Rs. 700 within 6 months. No interest will be awarded on either of these sums because the defendant has been in possession for four years, and in so far as he is setting up his rights as a chargeholder he must be taken to have appropriated the profits towards the interest. If this sum is not paid within the time mentioned, or such further time as may be allowed, the plaintiff's suit will stand dismissed with costs in the lower Court and here.

[51] If the money is paid as above then the decree will proceed along the lines of an ordinary decree for sale on a mortgage except that the date fixed for payment will be nine months hence instead of the usual six. That will give the defendant three months from the date of receipt of his money to exercise his own right of redemption.

[52] As regards the price which the defendant must pay to the plaintiff, that will be such part of the Rs. 55,000 plus interest (but not costs of the plaintiff's charge decree dated 23rd April 1930 in Civil Suit No. 16 of 1927) as will be proportionately assignable to the field in suit. Here also, as in the defendant's case, the plaintiff's charge is split up because the plaintiff, like the defendant, has purchased a part of the charged property. Here also, if the parties can agree on a figure it will be accepted, otherwise it will have to be determined.

[53] The suit has not been framed as one on a mortgage or charge. But as the plaintiff has asked for possession outright, which is the higher right, and as he has set out most of the material facts in the plaint, and in view of the uncertainty about the law, we think it proper to mould the claim as above.

[54] The plaintiff asks in the appeal that he be given possession unconditionally and without being asked to pay the defendant any sum. He fails in this, and if technicalities were pushed to their utmost he would fail altogether because his proper course was to sue on his charge and afford the defendant an opportunity of redemption after redemption of the defendant's prior charge. Accordingly, he will pay the defendant the costs of this appeal. The costs in the first

Court will follow the usual course in a mortgage suit for sale.

[55] As regards the defendant's costs in his appeal. He has appealed against the decree granting possession to the plaintiff and has contended in the 10th ground of appeal that the plaintiff is not entitled to possession even on redemption. This contention we have upheld to this extent. The plaintiff must first redeem the defendant's first charge. When he has done that the defendant, as owner of the right to redeem, will be at liberty to redeem the plaintiff. As between the plaintiff and the defendant, the defendant is the owner of the property because he purchased it first. Accordingly, he is the one entitled to keep it if he is prepared to redeem the plaintiff's charge on it. The plaintiff's remedy accordingly is not possession but sale as on a mortgage if his (the plaintiff's) charge is not redeemed.

[56] The defendant accordingly succeeds on this upto a point. But as he has nowhere offered to pay off the plaintiff's charge and redeem him he does not succeed to the full extent on that point. On the other point he has asked that the figure of Rs. 2040-8-0 which the lower Court fixed as the price of redemption, that is to say, the figure which the plaintiff was ordered to pay the defendant for redemption of the defendant's first charge, be increased by Rs. 2100. We have dealt with this in para. 55 of the judgment. Since writing the above the parties have agreed that Rs. 1,375-15-0 out of the Rs. 1448-1-3 is apportionable to the Bhonslawala field. Therefore, as held in para. 55 the plaintiff will pay to the defendant Rs. 2075-15-0 (being Rs. 1375-15 0 plus Rs. 700) within six months. This means that the defendant has failed regarding the bulk of the Rs. 2100 by which he desires the decree to be enhanced. We think it right, therefore, that each party bear its own costs in the defendant's appeal, that is First Appeal No. 76 of 1940.

[57] The parties are not able to agree about the apportionment dealt with in para. 57, (para. 50 of report). It will, therefore, be necessary for us to collect data on which the apportionment can be made. Counsel on both sides agree that the valuation of the properties be made in the year 1930 because, as we are dealing with a proportion the exact year of valuation will not make much difference, the various items of property will increase or decrease in value proportionately and so their relative values will not be affected. In view of this, the lower Court will try, and determine, the following issues, after taking evidence and hearing the parties.

(1) What was the price of the Bhonslawala field in the year 1930?

(2) What was the price in 1930 of the remaining properties (after excluding the Bhonslawala field) covered by the plaintiff's charge decree dated 23-4-1930 in Civil Suit No. 16 of 1927?

[58] The findings and records to be returned within three months. Objections to be filed within a fortnight of the receipt of the findings in this Court.

Letters Patent Appeal No. 9 of 1944, Decided on 29-12-1947, from appellate decree of Puranik J., in S. A. No. 226 of 1940, D/- 25-8-1944.

(a) Hindu law—Joint family—Suit against—Parties —Suit for foreclosure against manager — Minor member not made party — Manager can represent him — Decree is binding on him unless prejudice is shown — Civil P. C. (1908), O. 34, R. 1.

Though a member of a joint Hindu family may not actually be a party to a suit for foreclosure he can be effectively represented by the manager and the family as a whole can be bound by a decree passed in such a litigation. This may be so even if the mortgagee may have no notice of the interest of the member not impleaded in the suit. A member of a joint family claiming redemption of a mortgage in spite of a decree extinguishing the mortgage must prove that he was prejudiced as to the right of redemption because he was not effectively represented in the mortgage suit: 1 A. (b) Hindu law — Joint family—Manager—Minor can be manager—Guardians and Wards Act (1890), S. 21.

There is nothing in the Hindu law which absolutely forbids a minor though a senior member of a joint Hindu family from occupying the status of a managing member of the joint Hindu family, particularly when such a senior member has a capable guardian to represent him. A minor in order to be a managing member need not be of an age capable of having a wife and a son: 4 A. I. R. 1917 Mad. 612, Dissent.; 8 N. L.R. 136, Rel. on. [Para 10]

(c) Hindu law—Joint family—Manager—Representation—Fact that he was sued in representative capacity need not be mentioned—Civil P. C. (1908), O. 7, R. 5.

In a suit against the manager, it is not necessary, in order to bind the minor members who were not impleaded as defendants, by the decree, that the capacity in which the manager is being sued, should be specifically mentioned in the plaint and pleadings. It is sufficient if the person sued has a representative capacity and this fact should be established by independent evidence: 34 All. 296, Disting.; 14 A. I. R. 1927 P. C. 56; and 22 A. I. Dr. D. W. Kathaley—for Appellants.

Y. S. Tambe—for Respondents.

Judgment. — Sonba, who was the owner of field No. 120 and two other fields at Dhamangaon, mortgaged them on 5 6-1884, (Ex. B-21) in favour of Ghamji Marwadi. Of the mortgaged fields, field No. 120 was purchased subsequently on 13-4-1900, (Ex. P-18) by Raoji. Raoji died on 18-9-1908, leaving two minor sons Trimbak and Gangadhar as his heirs; the younger (Gangadhar), who was born on 6-4-1906, died on 18-9-1937, leaving behind a widow Susbila who, according to the law in force on 18-9-1937, represented her husband's share in the joint family property for her life.

[2] The mortgage, dated 5-6-1884, was the basis of Civil Suit No. 138 of 1910 instituted by the mortgagee against Trimbak treating him as the sole representative of Raoji. Gangadhar was not impleaded as a defendant as his existence was not probably known to the mortgagee. Thimbak was, to begin with, wrongly shown as major but was subsequently shown as a minor aged 10 years and was represented in the suit by his paternal uncle, Daji as his guardian. This suit was contested but it ended in a preliminary decree passed on 30-3-1912. The appeal preferred against it was dismissed, and ultimately the decree was made final on 19-4-1913 and the mortgagee took possession of the mortgaged porperty on 27-5-1913.

[2a] Out of the three mortgaged fields the persons who were in possession of the other two, i. e. other than No. 120, which was in the possession of Trimbak, pleaded paramount title and were discharged from the mortgage suit. After obtaining a final decree for foreclosure, the mortgagee no doubt took possession of those two fields but the persons in possession applied under O. 21, R. 100, Civil P. C., and obtained possession thereof. The mortgagee submitted to dispossession and the mortgage security was reduced, the mortgage being enforced against field No. 120 alone.

[3] On the death of Gangadhar on 18-9-1937, the present suit for possession of field No. 120 on redemption of the mortgage dated 5-6-1884, and for surplus profits was instituted on 2-12-1937 by Trimbak and Sushila, the widow of Gangadhar. The redemption of the mortgage was claimed mainly on the ground that Trimbak, though impleaded in the mortgage suit, was not properly represented as his mother, who was the natural guardian, was not shown as his guardian and one Daji, who was fraudulently shown as guardian, did not make any defence and guard his interests. The other brother, Gangadhar, was not impleaded in this suit. The plaintiffs further pleaded that the mortgage was split up and from the profits of field No. 120 the mortgagee who was in possession had received much more than 1/3rd of the amount due on the mortgage and they therefore claimed the return of the surplus.

[4] The suit was dismissed throughout, by the first Court, by the lower appellate Court and by this Court in second appeal. All the Courts held that Trimbak was duly represented by the guardian Daji who represented the minor properly and efficiently and Gangadhar was also properly represented by Trimbak and the guardian Daji, Trimbak being in the position of a managing member of a joint Hindu family. In any case, it was held that there was in the circumstances of the case no prejudice to Gangadhar.

[5] The plaintiffs, Trimbak and Sushila, have now preferred this Letters Patent appeal and the main question urged before us is that in any case the right of redemption of Gangadhar was not extinguished and that that right has now vested in his widow Sushila. It was argued with much force that a minor could not, according to the principles of Hindu law, be a manager of a joint Hindu family and represent other minor co-parceners in that family. The learned counsel for the appellants pointed out that a manager of a joint Hindu family has certain powers and obligations and one of his powers is to alienate joint family property for legal necessity. A minor would not be able to exercise this power as, in fact, a contract by a minor, even according to the Hindu law, is void. The learned counsel urged further that as a fact Gangadhar was not represented as Trimbak was not sued in his representative capacity, even if he had any, and the mortgagee was not even aware of Gangadhar at all. According to the learned counsel, 8 N. L. R. 136,[1] was not correctly decided and it could also be distinguished as all that it decided was that a minor father or his guardian represented his minor son.

[6] In 36 ALL. 383,[2] their Lordships of the Privy Council in a similar suit for redemption observed thus at pp. 386-387:

"There seems to be no doubt upon the Indian decisions (from which their Lordships see no reason to dissent) that there are occasions, including foreclosure actions, when the managers of a joint Hindu family so effectively represent all other members of the family that the family as a whole is bound. It is quite clear from the facts of this case and the findings of the Courts upon them that this is a case where this principle ought to be applied. There is not the slightest ground for suggesting that the managers of the joint family did not act in every way in the interests of the family itself, and no question arises under S. 85, T. P. Act, 1882, because the mortgagee had no notice of the plaintiffs' interests."

Their Lordships have also indirectly approved the following observations of the High Court at p. 386:

"On appeal to the High Court of Judicature it was held that they were bound by the foreclosure decrees on the ground that the joint family was effectively represented in the suit, and that in such case the Court is not bound to set aside the execution proceedings where substantial justice has been done merely because every existing member of the family was not formally a party to the suit."

[7] It thus follows that though a member of a family may not actually be a party to the suit he can be effectively represented and in fact the family as a whole can be bound by a decree passed in such a litigation. This may be so even if the mortgagee may have no notice of the interest of the member not impleaded in the suit. A member of a joint family claiming redemption of a mortgage in spite of a decree extinguishing the mortgage must prove that he was prejudiced as to the right of redemption because he was not effectively represented in the mortgage suit.

[8] It has not been shown to us that Gangadhar was in any way prejudiced because he was not included in the array of defendants in the mortgage suit. His elder brother Trimbak was impleaded and was represented by his paternal uncle Daji who was then the only adult male member in the family and who, on the very admissions of Trimbak and Gangadhar, was actually managing their property: (vide Exhibit P-3) In fact, these brothers sued Daji for rendition of accounts as a manager of their property during their minority and obtained a decree against him in Civil Suit No. 214 of 1928. Though the mother of Trimbak and Gangadhar was alive at the date of the mortgage suit Daji was allowed to act as Trimbak's guardian because he was regarded as the only competent person to guard the interests of the minor. If Gangadhar had been shown as one of the defendants he would have been in the same position as Trimbak and would have been represented by Daji as his guardian. It has already been shown that Daji did everything which a prudent guardian would do in conducting the litigation in the interests of a minor. It is neither alleged nor proved that the result of the litigation would have been otherwise and that the foreclosure of the mortgaged property would have been avoided if Gangadhar was actually impleaded in the suit. Gangadhar died on 18-9-1937 when he was a little more than 31 years of age, and in 1928 he had joined Trimbak in instituting a suit against Daji. If he had any grievance against the mortgage decree or the foreclosure of the mortgaged property, he had sufficient time to sue for redemption. It appears that Gangadhar had no grievance against the foreclosure decree, and he did not consider himself prejudiced thereby. The present suit for redemption instituted soon after the death of Gangadhar is purely an afterthought on the part of Trimbak. This is, in our view, sufficient to refuse the relief of redemption asked for in the present suit.

[9] In 47 Cal. 924[3] the head of a joint family, had mortgaged family property for purposes binding on the entire family. The mortgage was sued upon and the two sons of the mortgagor though impleaded were admittedly not represented. In the mortgage decree which was passed, this mortgaged property was put to sale, and the property was purchased by the mortgagee who also took possession thereof. The two sons then filed a suit for redemption on the only ground that they were not represented in the mortgage suit. Their Lordships of the Privy Council refused to allow the right of redemption as it was extinguished by the mortgage decree and that right could not be revived until the sale was set aside. In the present case, which was instituted nearly 24 years after the foreclosure, no relief is claimed to set aside the foreclosure decree.

[10] There is nothing in the Hindu law so far as we have seen and nothing has been pointed out to us by Dr. Kathalay, the learned counsel for the appellants, which absolutely forbids a minor though a senior member of a joint Hindu family from occupying the status of a managing member of the joint Hindu family, particularly when such a senior member has a capable guardian to represent him. On the other hand, S. 21, Guardians and Wards Act, positively contemplates that a minor member can be a managing member of an undivided Hindu family. We do not see in the section any jurisdiction to hold that the minor in order to be a managing member must be of an age capable of having a wife and a son. Sir D. F. Mulla in a very learned book dealing with Principles of Hindu Law, at page 590 of the 10th edition observed:

"There is no rule of Hindu law that the managing member of an undivided family should be an adult. He may be a minor..."

The learned counsel for the appellants relied on the observations of Sadasiva Ayyar J. in 39 Mad. 608[4] at p. 614:

"I am very doubtful whether a minor can at all be the managing member of a Hindu family, though he is the senior male member."

The learned Judge characterised S. 21, Guardians and Wards Act as somewhat anomalous and suggested that the Legislature should amend the section. The Legislature has not however thought it necessary to amend the section in these 32 years.

[11] In 2 C. P. L. R. 221[5] which was decided by the Judicial Commissioner, Central Provinces, the learned J. C. held:

"Where a mortgage is effected by the managing members of a Hindu joint family and a decree for foreclosure or sale is obtained in a suit against those members alone and the property is absolutely foreclosed or passes under a sale to a third party, the transfer by foreclosure or sale would bind the interest of those members of the family who are not parties to the suit."

At p. 224 there is a paragraph which can be usefully reproduced below:

"It might be contended, that, granting that the mortgage was valid against the minor, still the law allows him a right of redemption, and he should not lose this right in a suit to which he was not a party. But the Judicial Committee refers to the case of Nanomi Babuasin and Madan Mohan in which it was said: 'If his debt was of a nature to support a sale of the entirety, he might legally have sold it without suit, or the creditor might legally procure a sale of it by suit. All the sons can claim is that, not being parties to the suit or execution proceedings, they ought not to be barred from trying the fact, or the nature, of the debt in a suit of their own. Assuming they have such a right, it will avail them nothing, unless they can prove that the debt was not such as to justify the sale.'"

[12] The authority in 2 C. P. L. R. 221[5] has not been shaken anywhere in the last 60 years. On the other hand it is followed in 8 N. L. R. 136.[1] At pp. 138-139 the learned Additional Judicial Commissioner observed as follows:

"It appears to me that this case should be decided on the same principles as that in 2 C. P. L. R. 221[5] since it is not a case under the Transfer of Property Act. No exactly similar case to the present can be found, but it seems to me that if the person who would naturally be the manager of the family is incapacitated by minority from acting as manager, and the other members (in this case the son) are incapacitated by still greater minority, the person who is guardian of the minor who would naturally be manager takes the place of that manager as regards the other minors and fully represents them. In this case their mother was the guardian of Narayan and his two brothers and of Narayan's son. In the ordinary course Narayan or one of his brothers would have been manager and the plaintiff would have been adequately represented by that manager. As things stood I think he was adequately represented by the mother-guardian of his father and uncles."

[13] The learned counsel for the appellants relied on 34 ALL. 296[6] and further urged that Trimbak was not sued in a representative capacity. The decision in 34 ALL. 296[6] was based on its special facts in which the document was executed by one who was in fact a minor on the date of execution describing him as a major. That decision is of no help in the present case. It is not necessary, as held in 51 Bom. 450,[7] 31 N. L. R. 352[8] and other decisions, that the capacity in which the defendant was sued should be specifically mentioned in the plaint and pleadings. It is sufficient if the person sued had a representative capacity and this fact could be established by independent evidence. It is plain that a decree passed against such a person would bind the entire family. The learned counsel for the appellants also referred us to Art. 44, Limitation Act, and pointed out that there is a difference between the position of a guardian and a managing member of the family. This was nowhere disputed by the other side and is not relevant to the decision of the present appeal.

[14] In our view, the decision of this Court appealed against is correct and this appeal is therefore dismissed with costs.

Letters Patent Appeal No. 2 of 1945, Decided on 29-12-1947, from appellate decree of Bose J. in S. A. No. 432 of 1941, D/- 11-12-1944.

(a) Co-operative Societies Act (1912), S. 43 (2) (m) — Rules (C. P.) under—Withdrawal of member at any time is allowed unless rules otherwise provide—Such member trading in manner forbidden by rules — He cannot be fined — Civil Court can entertain suit in respect of it.

The general principle is that any member of a voluntary association or society, who is not under any contractual or other obligation to perform some undertaking, can withdraw at any time he pleases, and it is immaterial whether his resignation is accepted or not, unless the rules otherwise provide. The member ceases to be member when he tenders his resignation and the society has no power to impose fines on him because he thereafter traded in a way forbidden by the rules of the society.

The act of the Society in fining would be ultra vires and the civil Court would have jurisdiction to entertain a suit in respect of it, the jurisdiction not being barred by R. 26 and the matter being not one "touching the business of the Society:" (1896) 1 Ch. 409, Ref. [Paras 1 & 2]

Judgment.—This is a Letters Patent appeal against the decision of Bose J. We agree with him that, the general principle is that any member of a voluntary association or society, who is not under any contractual or other obligation to perform some undertaking, can withdraw at any time he pleases, and that it is immaterial whether his resignation is accepted or not, unless the rules otherwise provide, as was held in (1896) 1 Ch. 409.[1] The plaintiffs therefore ceased to be members when they tendered their resignations, and the defendant-society had no power to impose fines on them because they thereafter traded in a way forbidden by the rules of the society.

[2] It is contended that the jurisdiction of the civil Courts is barred by R. 26 of the rules under the Co-operative Societies Act. That rule requires that any dispute touching the business of a co-operative society between members or past members of the society and the committee or any officer shall be referred to the Registrar. This point was not dealt with by Bose J., and it is not open to the appellants to take a new point in Letters Patent appeal: see I. L. R. (1940) Nag. 37.[2] We may however say that the point has no force. The imposition of a fine on past members for not trading in accordance with the rules of the society, by which they had ceased to be bound, was not a matter touching the business of the society and had nothing to do with the society which had no power to interfere with the trading activities of outsiders. The imposition of the fines was ultra vires of the society and therefore, as was held by Gruer J., in this case on 25-3-1937, the civil Courts have jurisdiction to entertain these suits. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Second Appeal No. 325 of 1943, Decided on 11-9-1947, from decree of Addl. Dist. Judge, Khandwa, D/-30-1-1943.

(a) Transfer of Property Act (1882), S. 123 — Gift deed duly executed, attested and registered — Gift accepted by donee — Title passes to donee — Any mental reservation or secret intention on part of donor does not invalidate gift.

Where a gift has been effected by a registered instrument duly executed and attested and the gift has been accepted and acted upon by donee the effect of such instrument is that title legally passes from the donor to the donee and any mental reservation or secret intention on the part of the donor to the contrary is indeed ineffective and cannot prevent the legal effect of a validly executed gift deed. (b) Limitation Act (1908), Art. 142 — Suit for possession — Plaintitiff's husband in occupation and management within 12 years of suit—No plea that husband's possession was on plaintiff's behalf —Plaintiff held still entitled to prove that husband's possession was on her behalf and not adverse to her.

Where in a suit for possession, the plaintiff has pleaded her possession of the field in suit within 12 years as owner, it is open to her to prove it by adducing evidence showing that she was in actual physical possession or that she was in possession as owner through her agents, managers or relations. When the field was in actual possession and management of the plaintiff's husband during such period, it is open to the plaintiff to prove that all the rights constituting possession were in her all along and mere occupation was in her husband who was managing the field in suit on her behalf, even in the absence of a plea that the possession and management of her husband was on her behalf. In any way the plaintiff is entitled to show that possession and management by her husband was never on his own behalf and did not constitute adverse possession so as to extinguish her title. [Para 12]

Annotation : — ('42-Com.), Lim. Act, Arts. 142 & 144, N. 87.

(c) Limitation Act (1908), Art. 142 — Adverse possession — Husband and wife — Gift of field by husband to wife — Possession delivered — Subsequent possession and management by husband must be presumed to be on wife's behalf — Mere secret change of intention or mortgage of field by husband without knowledge of wife does not change nature of possession.

Where a field is gifted by a husband to his wife and the gift deed recites that the possession has been delivered to the wife, it must be presumed, on the principle that possession follows title, that the wife was in possession since the date of gift. If in such a case the husband is in actual possession and management of the field gifted and the husband and the wife are living together cordially, there is a strong presumption that the possession of the husband was on behalf of his wife and not adverse to her. Having thus taken up or continued management of his wife's property on her behalf a mere secret change of intention or the acts of the husband such as a mortgage deed executed in respect of such field without the knowledge of the wife would not help him to prescribe against the wife: Case law referred. [Paras 15, 16]

Annotation : — ('42-Com.), Lim. Act, Arts. 142 & 144, Ns. 57 and 58.

(d) Limitation Act (1908), Art. 142 — Adverse possession — Onus of proof — Husband and wife — Husband's possession over wife's property pleaded to be adverse — Very heavy burden lies on person so pleading.

One who pleads adverse possession has a strong burden to discharge and the strength of the burden depends on the circumstances of the case. It is very heavy in a case where a husband's possession over the property of his wife is pleaded to be adverse. Even ordinarily the burden of effective adverse possession cannot be discharged without a clear and convincing evidence that possession is hostile to the real owner and amounted to a denial of such owner's title. This is much more so when the husband or persons claiming through the husband rely upon the husband's possession to be adverse possession: Case law referred. [Para 20]

R. S. Dabir—for Appellant.

M. R. Bobde and B. R. Mandlekar—for Respondent.

Judgment. — This is a second appeal by the plaintiff arising out of a suit for possession of field No. 11, area 2.73 acres of mauza Bhota, tahsil Burhanpur. The suit was dismissed by the trial Court and that decree is upheld by the lower appellate Court.

[2] The field in suit admittedly belonged to Dalpat of the village Bhota. In 1920 the plaintiff was a widow and Dalpat took a fancy to marry her by pat marriage. Dalpat had then a wife and children and he was also pretty advanced in age. The plaintiff and her brother were not, therefore, willing to accept the offer of Dalpat unless Dalpat transferred some property by way of gift to the plaintiff as a condition precedent to the pat marriage. Evidently the plaintiff wanted to make some provision for herself in the event of disagreement with or death of Dalpat. Dalpat agreed to gift away the field in suit to the plaintiff and he actually executed a gift deed on 15-3-1920 in plaintiff's favour. This gift deed was duly attested and registered and the gift was accepted by the plaintiff. According to the plaintiff she was thus the owner of the field in suit from 15-3-1920 and that she was also in possession thereof as owner all along till her dispossession by the defendant in February 1940. The present suit for possession was instituted on 19-1-1942.

[3] The defendant on his part alleged that the plaintiff had never any title to the field in suit and that she was never in possession thereof. It was alleged that the gift deed, even if proved, was nominal and executed under undue influence and coercion with the result that the title to the property in suit never passed to the plaintiff and that it always remained in Dalpat. It was further alleged that Dalpat continued in possession of the field in suit as the owner even after 15-3-1920 and that the plaintiff was never placed in possession of that field. It was further pleaded that the plaintiff was never in possession of the field within 12 years of the date of suit and that her title, if any, was in fact extinguished by the adverse possession of Dalpat and his transferees. Dalpat, it was alleged, dealt with this property as the owner and mortgaged and sold it and the plaintiff having permitted him to do so she is now estopped from asserting her own title to the prejudice of the bona fide mortgagees and the purchasers for valuable consideration.

[4] The plaintiff asserted her possession and denied knowledge of the alleged mortgage deeds and sale-deeds. She contended that her possession and enjoyment were never disturbed before dispossession by the defendant in February 1940. She also denied all adverse allegations in the written statement which included the allegation that Dalpat's possession was adverse to the plaintiff.

[5] The learned Judge of the lower appellate Court disagreeing with the first Court held that the gift deed dated 15-3-1920 was duly executed, attested and registered. He, however, held that the gift deed was merely a paper transaction as Dalpat never intended to pass the title to the plaintiff. Dalpat was, therefore, according to the learned Judge, the owner of the field in suit till 18-1-1930 when he sold the same to Ganpat, his son-in-law. The Judge of the lower appellate Court negatived the plaintiff's contention that the sale in favour of Ganpat was nominal and in fraud of the creditors. It was ultimately held that the plaintiff had no title to the field in suit at any time and that the title, if any, was extinguished by the adverse possession of Dalpat and his transferees.

[6] On the main question of title to the field in suit the decision of the lower appellate Court is indeed difficult to understand. It is clear from the record that the plaintiff and her brother insisted on some property being gifted to the plaintiff as a condition precedent to her marrying Dalpat by pat. Dalpat accepted this condition and actually fulfilled it by executing a valid gift deed in plaintiff's favour. The gift deed was produced by the plaintiff in Court and on that account it can be safely presumed that this gift deed was handed over by Dalpat to the plaintiff and it remained all along with her. The gift deed was acted upon by the plaintiff and she actually married Dalpat and they two lived happily and cordially together until Dalpat's death in or about 1932.

[7] These being the facts which are undisputed and which are in any case duly established it is surprising that the lower appellate Court should have held the gift deed as a paper transaction and did not transfer title in plaintiff's favour.

[8] On 15-3-1920 when Dalpat executed the gift deed he could have no intention to commit fraud on his would-be-wife by executing a nominal gift deed in her favour. On the one hand the plaintiff was anxious to have a valid gift in her favour and on the other Dalpat was eager to have the plaintiff as his wife. In these circumstances it is difficult to imagine that Dalpat would have acted with mental reservation or with secret intention of not transferring title to the field in plaintiff's favour in spite of his having executed a duly registered gift deed in plaintiff's favour.

[9] Under S. 122, T. P. Act a gift is the transfer of certain existing immovable property made voluntarily and without consideration by the donor in favour of the donee and accepted by the latter. Such transfer is effected under S. 123, T. P. Act by a registered instrument duly executed and attested. The effect of such instrument is that title legally passes from the donor to the donee and any mental reservation or secret intention on the part of the donor to the contrary is indeed ineffective and cannot prevent the legal effect of a validly executed gift deed. In the gift deed dated 15th March 1920 Dalpat clearly and unequivocally admitted that the title to the field in suit has, as a result, of that gift deed, passed to the plaintiff who was thereafter to be the exclusive owner of that property. He has also admitted that the field was placed in possession of the plaintiff who was entitled to the possession thereof and that she was free to get the property mutated in her name and to enjoy it in any manner she liked. Acting on these recitals and the gift deed, the plaintiff acted to her prejudice and married Dalpat. It was therefore no longer open to Dalpat to urge that the title in the field in suit still remained with him and not with the plaintiff. The lower appellate Court should have therefore held that the title to the field in suit passed to the plaintiff and she was the owner of the field and that the defendant was estopped from pleading and proving, contrary to the apparent tenor of the document, that is the gift deed, and the admissions of Dalpat contained therein, that Dalpat continued to be the owner of the field in suit. As already stated above, the gift was accepted and acted upon by the plaintiff and thus it was perfectly valid. It was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council in 50 Mad. 193[1] that acceptance by the donee may be either express or implied and very slight evidence would be sufficient to prove acceptance. In fact their Lordships held that mere delivery of the gift-deed by the donor to the donee was quite sufficient to prove acceptance. In this case as observed above, the gift deed was acted upon by the plaintiff and it was on the strength of that gift deed that she married Dalpat by pat. There is thus no force in the defence that after 15th March 1920 the title in the property in suit continued with Dalpat and not with the plaintiff.

[10] The question which next calls for decision is whether the plaintiff-appellant has proved her possession and dispossession as alleged in the plaint or whether the defendant proved adverse possession as pleaded by him. As held in I. L. R. (1941) Nag. 655[3] a suit falls within Art. 142, Limitation Act when the facts admitted in the plaint or pleadings establish that the plaintiff's case is based on possession and dispossession within 12 years of the date of suit. All other suits for possession would be governed by Art. 144, Limitation Act. In I. L. R. (1937) Nag. 254[3] it is held that in suits falling under Art. 142 the plaintiff must prove dispossession within 12 years of suit. The questions as to possession and dispossession of the plaintiff within 12 years and adverse possession pleaded by the defendant are often so intermixed that the two questions have to be considered together. It is more so in the present case as both these questions depend upon the determination of the nature of Dalpat's possession from 1920 to 1930 or 1932. But before entering into that question a word must be said on the point of pleadings in the case.

[11] The plaintiff-appellant pleaded in the plaint that from the date of gift i. e. 15th March 1920 she was in possession of the field in suit as owner until her dispossession in February 1940 by the defendant. This implies that whoever were in possession or occupation or management of the field in suit from 1920 to 1940 were in possession on behalf of the plaintiff. This position is also clear from her denial of the defendant's allegation regarding adverse possession of the defendant and of his predecessors-in-title including Dalpat. It is no doubt true that nothing has been pleaded explicitly about Dalpat's management and like other mofusil pleadings, the pleadings in this case are vague and inartistic. This has to be said of pleadings on either side. The parties have not taken care to make use of the several provisions of the Civil Procedure Code and to have the pleadings definite and specific. According to the trial Court and the lower appellate Court the plaintiff did not plead that possession and management, of Dalpat was on her behalf and she could not be allowed to adduce evidence to prove the nature of Dalpat's possession. Relying on A. I. R. 1930 P. C. 57,[4] the Courts have discarded the plaintiff's evidence on that point. In my opinion the lower Courts were not right in discarding this evidence.

[12] When the plaintiff has pleaded her possession from 1920 to 1940 as owner it should be open to her to prove it by adducing evidence showing that she was in actual physical possession or that she was in possession as owner through her agents, managers or relations. In 1941 N. L. J. 534,[5] the Divisional Bench of this High Court pointed out the distinction between possession as owner and a bare occupation. The concept of possession is a complex one and it need not include actual occupation. It comprises the right to possess, and the right and ability to exclude others from possession. The adverse possession of which the law speaks is an ouster from all those rights which constitute possession in law. It was thus open to the plaintiff to prove that all the rights constituting possession were in her all along and mere occupation was in Dalpat who was managing the field in suit on her behalf. In any way the plaintiff was entitled to show that possession and management by Dalpat was never on his own behalf and did not constitute adverse possession so as to extinguish her title.

[13] The proposition that possession is prima facie adverse is true in the case of a stranger entering into possession but it is not necessarily true when the person occupying the property is the agent or a near relative who is ordinarily expected to help the owner in the management of the property. There is a strong presumption in these cases that the occupation and management is permissive and on behalf of the owner. In 30 N. L. R. 88,[6] at p. 92, it is held that where a person who would naturally manage the minor's property actually leases out a portion of that property in her own name it does not amount to an assertion of hostile title so as to constitute her possession adverse to the true owner. In 5 Rang. 576,[7] the possession and management of the father over the property which he gifted to the children from the deceased wife was construed as permissive possession on behalf of the children and not adverse to them. The possession of the guardian over the property of the minor ward was similarly construed as permiesive, in A. I. R. 1938 Nag. 89.[8] In 12 Rang. 238[9] their Lordships of the Privy Council observed thus :

"Where the facts of the case are consistent with the ownership of the property remaining in the person who acquired it by a registered sale deed and also with the defendant being in possession of the property with the permission of the owner from the time when the owner had acquired the property until his death, and where there is no evidence that the defendants' possession of the property was inconsistent with the continuance of the title of the owner, the defendant cannot in a suit for possession by the legal representative of the owner retain the property on the ground of title by adverse possession."

[14] The relations between husband and wife are very close and by fiction they are regarded as part of the same body. In the nature of things and particularly by the custom of the country a wife always looks to her husband for safeguarding her interest and for management of her property, and she would least suspect, when their relations are cordial and when they live together happily as husband and wife, that the husband would entertain an intention to acquire title to her property by adverse possession. It is held in 24 Suth. W. R. 274 [10] and 25 Suth. W. R. 542,[11] that when a man and his wife live together and the husband is in possession of the property of the wife his possession must be construed to be on behalf of the wife and not adverse to her and on this principle the husband is presumed to be the agent of his wife. In 41 Bom. 5,[12] the possession of the husband who occupied one of the two gifted houses with another wife was held not adverse to the wife to whom the houses were gifted. 12 Rang. 238,[9] already quoted above leads to the same conclusion.

[15] In the present case the plaintiff married Dalpat soon after the gift of the field in suit in her favour and thereafter she lived very cordially as Dalpat's wife till his death in or about 1932. During this long period, Dalpat is not shown to have even denied her title to her knowledge and he took no steps to have the gift deed in plaintiff's favour caceelled. In the gift deed he expressly admitted delivery of possession to the plaintiff. A heavy burden would lie on Dalpat in these circumstances if he were to plead that his possession was adverse to the plaintiff. Having taken up or continued management of his wife's property on her behalf a mere secrect change of intention or the acts of Dalpat such as the mortgage deeds executed without the knowledge of the plaintiff, would not help him to prescribe against the plaintiff. It is necessary for Dalpat who was either an agent or who stood in a fiduciary relationship with the plaintiff to bring it to the knowledge of the plaintiff that his possession was adverse to her. There is absolutely no evidence on this point and in the absence of such evidence the possession of Dalpat must be construed to be on behalf of the plaintiff in spite of his one-sided acts or his secret intention to hold the property adversely to the plaintiff.

[16] As a result of the gift deed, dated 15th March 1920 the title to the field in suit passed to the plaintiff as already held above and as a result of the application of the principle, possession follows title, it would be presumed that the plaintiff was in possession of the gifted field from 15th March 1920. This presumption is strengthened by the admission of Dalpat in the gift deed that possession was transferred to the donee, that is the plaintiff; and once the possession of the plaintiff started, the presumption in favour of the continuity of that possession is attracted and it is for one who urges against this presumption to establish it and to prove that the possession of the plaintiff was discontinued or intercepted or negatived by the adverse possession of that person. The mere fact that Dalpat was managing the field on account of the special relations between him and the plaintiff is not of much consequence as that would not amount to his possession being adverse to that of the plaintiff. Acts which create adverse possession must be scrutinized in the light of the relation between the parties and if a husband who was the donor of the property to his wife, the donee, relies on adverse possession on proof of his title he must make out a very strong case. In such cases it is quite possible that while legal possession may rest with the wife, the possession or management in fact may be with the husband and his possession would not thus be adverse to her. Moreover possession is not the same as adverse possession. For construing mere possession as adverse possession, the adverse possessor must prove the animus and this has not been proved in the present case. The plaintiff and Dalpat were admittedly residing together till Dalpat's death and during all this period it could not be said that the plaintiff was excluded from the possession of the field in suit. Both of them must be visiting this field as also other fields and the usufruct of this field as also of the other fields must be enjoyed by both of them. In these circumstances there is no possibility of one of them holding property adversely to the other.

[17] In A. I. R. 1935 P. C. 53,[13] their Lordships of the Privy Council observed thus :

"The principle of law is firmly established that a person, who bases his title on adverse possession, must show by clear and unequivocal evidence that his possession was hostile to the real owner and amounted to a denial of his title to the property claimed."

The defendant has not shown that the possession of Dalpat was in any way adverse to the plaintiff. He has also not shown when and how Dalpat's possession became adverse to the plaintiff. Dalpat, as pointed out above, entered into possession at best as an agent on behalf of the plaintiff, his wife (the donee) and there is no evidence on record of dispossession of the plaintiff or discontinuance of possession by her during the life-time of Dalpat. I therefore, hold that the plaintiff was in legal possession of the field in suit during the life-time of her husband and that the possession and management of the property by her husband Dalpat was permissive on her behalf.

[18] It is however urged that the possession of Ganpat in whose favour Dalpat executed the sale deed on 18-1-1930 was decidedly adverse to the plaintiff and the present suit is filed more than 12 years after that date. This contention assumes firstly that the sale deed in favour of Ganpat was genuine and not bogus and fraudulent as alleged by the plaintiff and secondly that there was a transfer of possession on 18-1-1930. Ganpat was examined in this case as D. W. 8. He deposed thus :

"I then accordingly gave that amount of Dalpat and thus paid the entire consideration of the sale deed ; two days after that the sale deed was registered. I was present that time. After that we went to Bhota and stayed there for 2 to 4 days. I took possession of the fields and the houses."

It may be noted that this sale deed was presented for registration at Burhanpur on 22-1-1930 and obviously therefore according to this witness the possession was taken by him (assuming that it was taken) some time after 22-1-1930. The present suit was filed on 19-1-1942 that is within 12 years of the registration of the sale deed and alleged possession by Ganpat. The plaintiff has however denied that Ganpat ever took possession of the property and, according to her, she continued to be in possession and enjoyment of the property until dispossessed by the present defendant. She pleaded that the sale deed in favour of Ganpat was bogus and fraudulent. In view of the finding which I have given that Ganpat took possession of the field (assuming that he took possession) some time after 22-1-1930, that is, within 12 years of the date of suit, it is not necessary for me to enquire into and to record a finding whether the sale deed dated 18-1-1930 was genuine or bogus. Even if it was genuine still Ganpat and the transferees from Ganpat would not acquire any title to the property as the title to the property vested in the plaintiff and she admittedly never transferred the property in their favour. If it was at all necessary for me to give a finding on this point I would have found much difficulty in upholding the finding of the lower appellate Court that the sale deed was genuine and not bogus. There are several material circumstances which clearly point to the non-genuine nature of the sale deed in favour of Ganpat. However, that point need not be laboured further.

[19] In view of the finding that I have recorded about the title of the plaintiff and her possession within 12 years of the date of suit the plaintiff's claim ought to have been decreed. I have however to deal with the plea of adverse possession advanced by the defendant.

[20] As I have said above the two pleas namely the plaintiff's possession within 12 years and the defendant's adverse possession for more than 12 years are inter-mixed and the finding on the first plea which I have recorded above to a large extent negatives the defendant's plea of adverse possession. But apart from that there is, in my view, no sufficient evidence to establish adverse possession for more than 12 years by the defendant and his predecessors-in-title. One who pleads adverse possession has a strong burden to discharge and the strength of the burden depends on the circumstances of the case. It is very heavy in a case like the present where a husband's possession over the property of his wife is pleaded to be adverse. Even ordinarily the burden of effective adverse possession cannot be discharged without a clear and convincing evidence that possession is hostile to the real owner and amounted to a denial of such owner's title. This is much more so when the husband or persons claiming through the husband rely upon the husband's possession to be adverse possession.

[21] In 26 C.W.N. 666[14] at p. 673 their Lordships of the Privy Council pointed out that adverse possession can only be proved by proving its adequacy, continuity and exclusiveness. These are also the remarks by their Lordships of the Privy Council in 14 Pat. 327[15] and by the High Court of Calcutta in 62 Cal. 921[16] and 63 Cal. 300.[17] In 63 Cal. 300[17] at p. 313 it is pointed out that :

"The proposition that adverse possession need not be brought to the knowledge of the person against whom it is to operate has been reaffirmed in 14 Pat. 327[15] in which their Lordships have further pointed out that the proposition is nevertheless subject to the qualification that when the party claiming by adverse possession fails to show that the person possessed against by exercising due vigilance ought to have been aware of what was happening, his claim must fail, whether his possession be adequate in continuity or not."

[22] There is no reason for the plaintiff in the case to hunt for the record of the Registrar's office and to find out whether the husband has transferred her field to somebody else nor is there any evidence that either Dalpat or any one else ever informed the plaintiff that her property was being dealt with by Dalpat as his own. There is thus no reason for the plaintiff to suspect that it was unsafe to allow Dalpat to manage the property, and that if she does so allow there is the risk of the property being lost to her on account of Dalpat's possession being adverse to her. In my view, therefore, it has not been proved that the possession of Dalpat became adverse to the plaintiff since 15-3-1920. There is consequently no force in the plea of estoppel that was raised by the defendant.

[23] In my view therefore the plaintiff's title is not extinguished on account of the adverse possession of the defendant or his predecessor-in-title for more than 12 years before the date of suit. Finally in this respect I would rely on the observations in I. L. R. (1943) Nag. 726[18] at pp. 732, 733, 734 :

"The lower appellate Court has found that even if the plaintiff's predecessor had exercised possession, it was neither to the knowledge of the true owner nor continuous. It may be conceded on the authority of 61 Cal. 262[19] that adverse possession need not be shown to have been brought to the knowledge of the rightful owner, but this rule can apply only to a person who is a complete stranger. Ordinarily ignorance on the part of the true owner of his right or of the infringement of that does not prevent the operation of the statute but when a person is in possession which is either permissive or held in a fiduciary capacity such as that of servant or an agent he cannot by a mere secret and undisclosed wish alter the character of his possession so as to set the time running in his own favour : see 27 Bom. 43.[20] Ganpat and Jagannath (the vendors) were the Pujaris and R. B. Buti (the vendee) was a member of the Managing Committee of the temple. They had both been appointed by the Raje Bahadur. Consequently their possession was lawful and the principle is well known that possession is never considered adverse if it can be referred to a lawful title : see 11 N. L. R. 164[21] at p. 167. The act of transfer by the the Pujaris and purchase by the plaintiff's predecessor no doubt prove an intention to assert a hostile title against the true owner but unless that was brought to the notice of the person affected could not set the limitation running against him. In 47 Mad. 572[22] their Lordships of the Judicial Committee pointed out that a licensee cannot claim title only from possession, however long, unless it is proved that his possession was adverse to that of his licensor to his knowledge with acquiescence. This principle applies with equal validity to one who is in possession in a fiduciary capacity such as the parties to the material sale deed in the present case were. The reason is obvious; their possession by virtue of their special relationship to the real owner was initially not independent but subordinate to the master. Such a subordinate possession could not become adverse, i. e., independent unless it was coupled with a denial of the true owner's title or assertion of a hostile title to the knowledge of the true owner. That the possession required to establish a title to immovable property under the Limitation Act must be adequate in continuity was laid down by the Judicial Committee in 27 Cal. 943[23] and was affirmed in 61 Cal. 262.[19] At all events, it appears clear from the findings of the Courts below that the actual possession of the plaintiff's predecessor for the requisite period was doubtful. The plaintiff could not succeed unless he established affirmatively his exclusive possession to the knowledge of the true owner for the requisite period of 12 years : see 11 Lah. 638.[24] That disposes of the plaintiff's appeal."

[24] The respondent did not rely on EX. D-8 and in fact he gave up that plea.

[25] Finally, and in view of what is stated above, the appeal is allowed and the plaintiff's claim for possession of the field is decreed with all costs.

Second Appeal No. 361 of 1941, Decided on 7-11-1946, from appellate decree of Addl. Dist. Judge, Bhandara, D/- 26-3-1941.

(a) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 14, R. 2 — Preliminary issue of limitation raised by defendant—Allegations in plaint to be taken as true.

Where the defendants ask the Court to decide an issue, such as a preliminary point as to limitation, on the very allegations of the plaintiff, they must be taken to admit for the sake of argument that the allegations of the plaintiff in his plaint are true reserving to themselves the right to show that these allegations are wholly or partially false in the further stages of the action, should the preliminary point be overruled. Hence for the purpose of deciding such point the statement of the defendants has to be ignored: 40 Cal. 598 (P. C.), Rel. on. [Para 6]

(b) Limitation Act (1908), S. 3—Applicability to arbitration proceedings.

The law of limitation as laid down in the Limitation Act applies to arbitration proceedings. The arbitrators, like a statutory Court, have no power to entertain and allow a claim presented beyond the period of limitation prescribed by the relevant Article in Sch. I to the Act. Section 3 of the Act thus applies in arbitration proceedings and it would be incorrect to urge that Ss. 4 to 25 of the Act would not apply as this would lead to unjust and anomalous results : 16 A. I. R. 1929 P. C. 103, Rel. on. [Para 10]

(c) Limitation Act (1908), S. 14— Time taken for arbitration proceedings — Exclusion of.

The word 'Court' in S. 14 does not mean only the statutory Courts but includes arbitrators and proceedings before them are civil proceedings before a Court within the meaning of that section. Therefore, the time spent in arbitration proceedings should be excluded from computation of the period of limitation for a suit instituted subsequently in respect of the same subject-matter provided the other requirements of S. 14 are satisfied. Whether the subsequent proceedings are before arbitrators or before a statutory civil Court makes no difference in the application of S. 14. An arbitration agreement merely clothes the arbitrators with power to decide the dispute between the parties to the reference but the cause of action in proceedings before arbitrators as also in the civil suit is one and the same and that is the dispute regarding the right or the title which one party claims and the other party denies : 16 A. I. R. 1929 P. C. 103 ; 30 A. I. R. 1943 All. 162 and 17 A. I. R. 1930 Cal. 5, Rel. on; 20 A. I. R. 1933 Nag. 130, Dissent. [Paras 13, 17 and 18]

(d) Limitation Act (1908), S. 19 — Admission of unsettled account contained in arbitration agreement.

An agreement to refer a dispute to arbitration contained an unqualified admission of the fact that the defendants purchased from the plaintiff certain goods and that a difference cropped up in the account in respect of those dealings :

Held that the legal effect of such an admission was that whoever on account should be shown to be the debtor was bound to pay the debt to the other. Such an admission amounted to an acknowledgment of liability within S. 19 and was not subject to a condition that the defendants would be liable only if the liability is ascertained by the arbitrators. It would afford a fresh starting point of limitation quite independently of the settlement of account by the arbitrators : 2 N. L. R. 130 (P. C.), Foll; Case law discussed. [Paras 21 & 24]

(e) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 6, R. 17 — Amendment seeking additional ground of exemption from limitation.

Where the plaintiff seeks to amend his plaint by relying on an additional ground of exemption from limitation based on a letter written by the defendant and on which the defendant himself has relied in his written statement it cannot be said that the defendant is being taken by surprise by such amendment especially when the plaintiff has relied on such ground in his previous written replies. Moreover such an amendment cannot be said to introduce a fresh cause of action or any substantial change in the cause of action on which the suit is based and therefore it should be allowed even at a late stage. The fact that the plaintiff has not produced the letter in question cannot be a valid ground for refusing the amendment : 22 A. I. R. 1935 Mad. 158 ; 25 A. I. R. 1938 Nag. 388; 24 A. I. R. 1937 Cal. 485 and 22 A. I. R. 1935 Bom. 213, Rel. on.

Judgment. — This is a second appeal by the plaintiff against the dismissal of his suit on a preliminary point of limitation by the trial Court and also by the lower appellate Court and that is the only question which calls for decision in this appeal.

[2] The suit from which this appeal arises was instituted on 24th August 1938. It was for the recovery of Rs. 4052-15-3 due from the defendants for the price of goods supplied and the amounts advanced by the plaintiff to them, from 24-5-1933 to 22-1-1934. A suit of this nature is for purposes of limitation governed by Arts. 52 and 57, Limitation Act, which prescribe three years as the period of limitation. The plaintiff's suit was thus instituted beyond the prescribed period of limitation.

[3] Where a suit is instituted after the expiration of the prescribed period of limitation O. 7, R. 6, Civil P. C., requires that the plaint shall show the ground or grounds upon which exemption from such law is claimed. It is therefore necessary to examine the pleadings on record in this light.

[4] The plaintiff pleaded that the subject-matter in dispute in this suit was by agreement of the parties referred to arbitration. The agreement of reference was executed by them on 26-8-1935 and handed over to the arbitrators. The plaintiff awaited the result of the arbitration but finding that the arbitrators did not at all move in the matter he decided to file a suit and, in fact, had a plaint drafted on 1-9-1936. At this stage the defendants approached the plaintiff, paid him Rs. 500-0 0 and requested him to await the result of the arbitration for some time more. The plaintiff acceded to this request. He waited for a long time and ultimately served the arbitrators with registered letters on 30-4-1938, 2-5-1938 and 11-7-1938, but the arbitrators did not care to reply. The plaintiff therefore filed the present suit. In para. 6 of the plaint, the plaintiff claimed exclusion of the period from 26-8-1935 to 11-7-1938 from computation of the period of limitation and in para. 9 the cause of action is said to have accrued on the dates on which the plaintiff's letters were received by the arbitrators.

[5] The defendants admitted execution of the agreement dated 26-8-1935 but denied that it was handed over to the arbitrators, or that the arbitrators assumed jurisdiction. They denied that the plaintiff was entitled to exclusion of time from 26-8-1935 to 11-7-1938 and further averred that the plaintiff did not prosecute the proceedings before the arbitrators in good faith and with due diligence as is required by S. 14, Limitation Act. The defendants denied that the agreement dated 26-8-1935 contained an acknowledgment of liability by the defendants within the meaning of S. 19, Limitation Act so as to permit a fresh period of limitation to be computed from that date. The defendants denied the agreement dated 1-9-1936 and they further denied that the alleged agreement gave a fresh cause of action and a fresh start of limitation.

[6] As observed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in 40 Cal. 598[1] at p. 609, where the defendants ask the Court to decide an issue on the very allegations of the plaintiff, they must be taken to admit for the sake of argument that the allegations of the plaintiff in his plaint are true reserving to themselves the right to show that these allegations are wholly or partially false in the further stages of the action, should the preliminary point be overruled. For the purpose of deciding the point involved in this appeal the statement of the defendants has thus to be ignored. From the relevant allegations of the plaintiff, he should be taken to have relied on the following grounds of exemption from the bar of limitation :

(a) that the period between 26-8-1935, that is the date of reference to the arbitrators and 11-7-1938, that is the date when, according to him, the arbitration proved abortive, should be excluded under S. 14, Limitation Act, in computing the period of limitation prescribed for the suit ;

(b) that the period of limitation be computed afresh from 26-8-1935, the date of the agreement of reference to arbitration, as according to the plaintiff, that document contained an acknowledgment of liability in respect of the subject-matter in the suit; and

(c) that the agreement dated 1-9-1936 referred to in para. 3 of the plaint furnished to the plaintiff a fresh cause of action and the present suit filed within three years of that date should be held to have been filed within time. The plaintiff, somewhat later, wanted to rely on an additional ground of exemption as would appear from what follows.

[7] In para. 11 of the written statement filed on behalf of defendant 2 on 4-11-1938, and subsequently adopted by defendant 1 the defendants alleged that they sent a registered letter dated 16-10-1936 to the plaintiff admitting the liability for Rs. 70-7-0 only and they remitted that amount by money order but the plaintiff refused to receive it. On these grounds, they claimed that the plaintiff was not entitled to the interest claimed and the costs incurred by him in the suit. In the written reply dated 21-11-1938 the plaintiff admitted the receipt of the defendants' letter dated 16-10-1936 and the refusal to receive the money-order sent to him by the defendants. In the oral statement dated 18-1-1939, the plaintiff admitted the money order coupon and undertook to produce the original letter dated 16th October 1936, though, in fact, it was not produced. In the second written reply filed by the plaintiff on 20th June 1939, he pleaded that the defendants' letter dated 16th October 1936, contained a valid acknowledgment of the plaintiff's claim, and that it gave a fresh starting point for computation of the period of limitation for his suit. This plea was repeated in a subsequent written reply filed by the plaintiff on 19th March 1940. These written replies were permitted by the trial Court to be placed on record creating an impression that the additional ground of exemption pleaded therein would be available to the plaintiff without any further steps being taken by him. On 6th April 1940 the trial Court, however, refused to take this additional ground of exemption into consideration without a suitable amendment of the plaint and the plaintiff filed an application for amendment immediately. The trial Court disallowed the amendment by its order dated 13th April 1940 and the lower appellate Court upheld that order. It is urged in this appeal that the amendment should have been allowed and the plaintiff should have been permitted to take advantage of this additional ground of exemption pleaded by him.

[8] The record of the trial Court shows a great deal of laxity in observing the rules of pleadings. The first written statement by defendant 1 was filed on 11th October 1938 and the last of the plaintiff's replies was filed on 19th March 1940. During this period of a year and a half the defendants were permitted to file written statements from time to time; the oral statements which are not strictly pleadings were recorded on more hearings than one and the plaintiff was allowed to place on record three written replies. The parties and the Judges who handled this case during this period are equally to be blamed for this laxity. We find from the order-sheets of the trial Court that the case was fixed for recording evidence on 20th March 1939 and 21st March 1939. No evidence was recorded on those dates because of a somewhat vague proposal by the the parties that they would appoint arbitrators, if possible. The case was adjourned on this account from time to time till 30th June 1939 infructuously. Thereafter on 10th July 1939 the trial Court ordered the suit to be stayed and referred the subject-matter of the suit to the arbitrators already appointed by the parties by their agreement dated 26th August 1935. The suit was thus held up till the aforesaid order of the trial Court was set aside in appeal on 5th January 1940. On 23rd January 1940 the trial Judge ordered the parties to file additional pleadings and schedules, but before this was done, the record of the case came before another presiding Judge, who on 13th April 1940 framed preliminary issues and disposed of the suit on one of those preliminary issues, namely, the issue of limitation. Thus from 20th March 1939 the suit was held up for one reason or the other till 6th April 1940. These facts are set out as they are material for deciding the question of amendment already referred above.

[9] The learned counsel for the appellant urged that the plaintiff's suit was within limitation even apart from the acknowledgment contained in the defendants' letter dated 16th October 1936. He argued that the plaintiff was entitled to exclusion of time from 26th August 1935 to 11th July 1938 under S. 14, Limitation Act, and that the case reported in 29 N. L. R. 272[2] on which the Courts below relied was not correctly decided. He contended that the word 'Court' in S. 14, Limitation Act, should include every tribunal constituted either under a statute or by agreement of parties, having power to adjudicate upon the disputes between the parties before it and to give a final and binding decision thereon.

[10] The word 'Court' is not defined in the Limitation Act, but it is defined in S. 3, Evidence Act, as under —

"Court includes all Judges and Magistrates, and all persons, except arbitrators, legally authorized to take evidence."

This definition indicates that for the purpose of the Evidence Act arbitrators are not a Court. The legislature, it appears, thought fit to make that exception so that the arbitrators who are often laymen should not be bound by the technical rules contained in the Evidence Act. It is, however, otherwise, regarding the provisions of the Limitation Act. It is well settled that the law of limitation applies in arbitration proceedings and that the law is as laid down in the Limitation Act, 1908. Thus, the arbitrators, like a statutory Court, have no power to entertain and allow a claim presented beyond the period of limitation prescribed by the relevant Article in Sch. 1 to the Limitation Act, 1908. Section 3, Limitation Act, thus applies in proceedings before the arbitrators and it would be incorrect to urge that though S. 3 and the Articles in the Schedule to the Limitation Act apply to the arbitration proceedings, Ss. 4 to 25 of the Act do not apply. This would lead to unjust and anomalous results.

[11] The learned counsel for the appellant relied on the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in 56 Cal. 1048[3] which was distinguished by Staples A. J. C. in 29 N. L. R. 272.[2] The facts before their Lordships of the Privy Council were, no doubt, not identical with the facts in 29 N. L. R. 272,[2] or with the facts in the present case. The exact point before their Lordships was whether the time spent in the first arbitration proceedings which proved abortive should be excluded from computation of the period of limitation when the same claim is put forward before arbitrators appointed subsequently. It is not however the actual decision but the principles enunciated by their Lordships in that decision which are material and this, we say with respect, was not correctly appreciated by the learned Judge who decided 29 N. L. R. 272.[2] If the law of limitation as contained in the Limitation Act was not applicable to arbitration proceedings the question which arose for decision before their Lordships would not have arisen at all. In fact, their Lordships placed the matter beyond doubt when they observed thus :

"The first question of law which arises is the important general one, whether the Limitation Act, 1908, applies to arbitration proceedings."

Their Lordships answered this question in the affirmative and cited with approval the following observation in (1899) 68 L. J. Q. B. 252[4]

"a submission to arbitration does not per se exclude the right of either party to raise the defence of the Statute of Limitation."

[12] In the course of their judgment their Lordships further expressed their agreement with the reasoning of Greaves J. which is reproduced below :

"It remains for me to decide whether, in computing the period of limitation, the time occupied in prosecuting the proceedings above referred to is to be excluded. It is urged that, having regard to the wording of S. 14, Limitation Act, this section cannot apply. This argument, however, does not seem to me to be well founded. If limitation, as I think it does, applies in arbitration proceedings, the law of limitation applicable is that laid down in the Limitation Act, 1908, which is expressed to apply to suits, appeals and certain applications to Courts. If, therefore, this Act is to be applied to arbitration proceedings, notwithstanding the words above referred to, I see no reason why S. 14 of the Act should not apply. If it is said that the wording of the section is not apposite to arbitration proceedings, it could equally be said that the wording of the Act itself is not apposite. In my view, therefore, in computing the period of limitation, the time occupied in the proceedings which ended in the decision of the Judicial Committee is to be excluded."

Their Lordships further observed in that case thus

"The Limitation Act has no application in terms to arbitration proceedings and, as Greaves J. has pointed out, if the words 'suit instituted, appeal preferred, and application made' in S. 3 are to be applied to arbitration proceedings, it seems to follow that the same interpretation must be put upon them in S. 14, and that civil proceedings in a Court must be held to cover civil proceedings before arbitrators whom the parties have substituted for the Courts of law to be the judges of the dispute between them."

[13] In view of what is stated above it is clear that arbitrators are a 'Court' and that proceedings before them, are civil proceedings before a Court, within the meaning of S. 14, Limitation Act. It would therefore follow that time spent in arbitration proceedings is to be excluded from computation of the period of limitation in a suit instituted subsequently in respect of the same subject-matter, provided the other requirements of S. 14, are satisfied.

[14] We are fortified in our view by the following observation of Lort-Williams J. in 56 Cal. 639.[5]

"In my opinion, the proceedings before the arbitrator were proceedings in a Court within the meaning of the section" (which means S. 14, Limitation Act.)

[15] This question is considered very elaborately by a Division Bench of the Allahabad High Court in I. L. R. (1943) ALL. 467.[6] In that case the dispute between the parties was referred to arbitrators by the agreement dated 6-12-1931 and the proceedings before the arbitrators continued till 2-12-1937. On 2-12-1937 one of the arbitrators applied for withdrawal from the arbitration proceedings, and consequently the proceedings proved abortive. On 24-1-1938 one of the parties to the dispute instituted a suit which was then prima facie beyond the prescribed period of limitation. He however claimed that the period from 6-12-1931 to 2-12-1937 which was spent in arbitration proceedings should be excluded from computation under S. 14, Limitation Act. The learned Judges of the Allahabad High Court in allowing the exclusion of time relied on the cases already noted above and also on the opinion of Mr. Chitaley in his Commentary on the Indian Limitation Act, Vol. 1, p. 548. Many of the arguments advanced before us by the learned counsel for the respondents were considered and repelled by the learned Judges in that case and we express our respectful agreement with that decision and the reasoning contained therein. It was further observed in that case that even though the failure of arbitration proceedings may not be due to a defect of jurisdiction, nevertheless S. 14 applied on the ground that there was 'a cause of a like nature' to a defect of jurisdiction within the meaning of S. 14, Limitation Act.

[16] In 27 N. L. R. 272[2] the learned A. J. C. held that S. 14, Limitation Act, did not apply firstly because the proceedings before arbitrators are not proceedings before a Court within the meaning of S. 14 with reference to a subsequent civil suit, and secondly because the arbitration did not fail for want of jurisdiction in the arbitrators or for a cause of a like nature within the meaning of S. 14, Limitation Act. He also observed that the proceedings before the arbitrators cannot be held to be on the same cause of action as a civil suit. According to the learned Judge the cause of action in proceedings before arbitrators is the agreement of reference whilst in a civil suit the cause of action is the right or title which the plaintiff alleges in himself. These are the grounds on which the learned Judge distinguished the Privy Council decision in 56 Cal. 1048.[3]

[17] We find ourselves unable, with respect, to endorse the learned Judge's appreciation of the decision in 56 Cal. 1048[3] and the reasons of the learned Judge on which S. 14, Limitation Act, was held inapplicable do not also commend themselves to us. In our opinion there is no warrant for holding that the proceedings before arbitrators are proceedings before a Court with reference to subsequent arbitration proceedings but not with reference to a subsequent civil suit. In fact, this is opposed to the pronouncement of their Lordships of the Privy Council

"that civil proceedings in a Court must be held to cover civil proceedings before arbitrators whom the parties have substituted for the Courts of law to be the judges of the dispute between them."

Once it is clear that proceedings before arbitrators are civil proceedings before a Court, then it makes no difference in the application of S. 14, Limitation Act, whether subsequent proceedings are before arbitrators or before a statutory civil Court. Where arbitrators refuse to function either expressly or impliedly as can be gathered from their conduct, they become functus officio and the arbitration fails; the same situation arises where the award given by the arbitrators is set aside by a civil Court. On this point we have already expressed our respectful agreement with the opinion of the learned Judges of the Allahabad High Court where they held that even if the failure of arbitration proceedings may not be due to a defect of jurisdiction, nevertheless the failure was due to a cause of a like nature to a defect of jurisdiction. Further we do not agree with the learned Additional Judicial Commissioner that the cause of action in proceedings before arbitrators is the agreement of reference. The agreement merely clothes the arbitrators with power to decide the dispute between the parties to the reference but the cause of action in proceedings before arbitrators as also in the civil suit is one and the same and that is the dispute regarding the right or the title which one party claims and the other party denies. For these reasons, we find ourselves unable, with respect, to agree with the decision of the learned Additional Judicial Commissioner in 29 N.L.R. 272.[2]

[18] In view of what is said above, it is not necessary to consider in detail the arguments advanced by the learned counsel for the respondents. Suffice it to say, that in our opinion the word 'Court' in S. 14, Limitation Act, does not mean only the statutory Courts as contended by him. Nor do we think that the cases relied on by him in which time spent in proceedings before a Railway Board or a conciliator was not excluded under S. 14, Limitation Act, are in point. In those cases the officers dealing with the dispute had no powers as the arbitrators have to give a final and a binding decision.

[19] In the result, we disagree with the decisions of the Courts below on preliminary issue 1 (a) and decide that issue in favour of the plaintiff. It is now for the lower Court to decide whether the other requirements of S. 14, Limitation Act, are satisfied.

[20] The next question to be considered is whether the agreement of reference dated 26-8-1935, contains an admission of liability by the defendants within the terms of S. 19, Limitation Act. The first part of the agreement contains an unqualified admission of the fact that the defendants purchased from the plaintiff goods e. g. crude oil, diesel oil etc., and that a difference cropped up in the account in respect of those dealings. It is not disputed and it cannot be disputed in view of the observations of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in 2 N. L. R. 130[7] that the legal effect of such an admission is that whoever on account should be shown to be the debtor is bound to pay the debt to the other. Their Lordships were dealing in 2 N. L. R. 130[7] with an admission more or less similar to the one contained in the first part of the agreement dated 26-8-1935 and they held that it constituted a conditional acknowledgment of liability, the only condition being that the balance should be ascertained to be against the person making the admission.

[21] The contention of the learned counsel for the respondent in this respect is that the document contains a conditional admission, the condition being that the liability should be ascertained by the arbitrators appointed under that document. In our opinion, this contention is not sound. In 2 N. L. R. 130[7] their Lordships of the Judicial Committee referred with approval to a case in 10 Mad. 259[8] which was very like the case before us. In that case 'A' acted as a commission agent for 'B' and 'C'. A dispute between them as to the liability of 'B' and 'C' was referred to arbitration. In a memorandum signed by 'B' and 'C' they denied that the balance would be found due to 'A' but admitted that accounts must be taken and that they would be liable if any balance is found due to 'A'. The arbitrators made an award which was subsequently set aside by the Court. In a suit subsequently filed by 'A' against 'B' and 'C' it was held that what was contained in the memorandum was a sufficient acknowledgment within the terms of S. 19, even though 'B' and 'C' denied that any balance would be found due by them.

[22] In 17 Lah. 737[9] there was a dispute between the Municipal Committee and a contractor as to the amount due to the latter and it was referred to an arbitration which eventually failed. The question before the learned Judges was whether the document embodying the resolution of the Committee admitting an unsettled account between the parties which was to be referred to arbitration contained an acknowledgment which extended the period in spite of the fact that the arbitration eventually failed. It was contended on behalf of the Committee that the acknowledgment was coupled with a condition namely an implied promise to pay such sum as would be found due by an arbitrator and as the arbitration failed there was no acknowledgment of liability at all within the terms of S. 19 and reliance was placed on 40 Mad. 701.[10] The learned Judges held, distinguishing the Madras case, that quite apart from an implied promise to pay whatever would be found due by an arbitrator, the admission of an outstanding account constituted an acknowledgment of liability within the terms of S. 19 and that it afforded a fresh starting point of limitation. The other cases relied on by the learned counsel for the appellant viz., A I. R. 1932 Lah. 470[11] and A. I. R. 1939 Sind 113[12] also negative the respondent's contention.

[23] The learned counsel for the respondents relied on 40 Mad. 701[10] which turned mainly on the construction of the particular agreement which in effect contained the statement by the defendants to the following effect:

"We deny that anything is due to you, but as you threaten a suit, we shall agree to refer matters to arbitration and if the arbitrators give an award holding us liable to pay any sum, we shall pay it to you."

The learned Judges of the Madras High Court observed that there was in that document no admission of a subsisting jural relationship of debtor and creditor and that a mere reference to arbitration which is a mode of settling disputes and not an admission of any liability, does not import any such relationship. In A. I. R. 1937 Mad. 38,[13] Venkataramana Rao J. relying on (1854) 1 Kay. 677[14] at p. 681 held that for an acknowledgment of a right to account there need not be an acknowledgment that a debt or even a specified amount thereof is actually due. It is enough (as observed by Wood V. C. in the aforesaid case) that there was an acknowledgment that an account is pending, and that the defendant promised to pay the balance, if any, due from him upon such account. The learned Judge further observed that the decision in 40 Mad. 701[10] was only an authority for the proposition that a mere reference to arbitration with an agreement to pay whatever the arbitrators decide would only be a conditional acknowledgment depending upon the decision of the arbitrators. The other cases, namely A. I. R. 1937 Pat. 616,[15] A. I. R. 1932 Lah. 470[11] and A. I. R. 1919 Mad. 838[16] relied on by the learned counsel for the respondents were also decided on the construction of particular documents which the learned Judges had to interpret in those cases. These cases are clearly distinguishable.

[24] In our opinion the acknowledgment contained in the agreement dated 26 8-1935 was not subject to a condition that the defendants would be liable only if the liability is ascertained by the arbitrators. Following the principles laid down in 2 N. L. R. 130[7] we hold that the agreement dated 26-8-1935 contains an acknowledgment of liability within the terms of S. 19, Limitation Act and that it affords a fresh starting point of limitation quite independently of the settlement of accounts by the arbitrators.

[25] We do not find much substance in the argument of the learned counsel for the appellant advanced on the basis of the alleged agreement dated 1-9 1936. It is moreover not necessary for us to consider it in detail as the plaintiff's suit is not based on that agreement, or on the cause of action alleged to be furnished thereby. In a suit based on the cause of action furnished by the dealings between the parties, this oral agreement cannot help the plaintiff in removing the bar of limitation.

[26] The only question which remains to be considered is regarding the amendment of the plaint disallowed by the lower Courts. The amendment is disallowed mainly on the ground of delay and also on the further ground that letter dated 16-10-1936 which is said to contain the acknowledgment sought to be pleaded was not produced. We are of opinion that looking to the nature of the amendment applied for it should not have been disallowed on those grounds.

[27] By this amendment, the plaintiff was only seeking to rely on an additional ground to remove the bar of limitation and this ground was based on the letter of the defendants on which they themselves relied in their written statement. The defendants cannot therefore complain that they are being taken by surprise. Moreover the amendment was not introducing a fresh cause of action or introducing any substantial change in the cause of action on which the suit was based. It is only when the amendment applied for is of a fundamental character that the question of delay becomes material and as observed in I. L. R. (1939) Nag. 194[17] such amendments should not be allowed except under special circumstances. On the other hand, where the amendment is not of a fundamental character it should be allowed readily and at any stage except that the other side may in suitable cases be compensated by the award of costs which, it is said, is a panacea which heals every sore in litigation.

[28] It is clear from the record that the plaintiff pleaded as early as 4th November 1938 and again on 20th June 1939 that the defendants' letter dated 16th October 1936 contained an acknowledgment of liability by the defendants in respect of the subject-matter of the suit. What was done on 6th April 1940 was that the same matter was put in the form of an application for amendment as required by the Court. In our opinion there can be no valid ground at all for disallowing the amendment of this nature. The non-production of the letter dated 16th October 1936 can equally be no ground for disallowing the amendment as the defendants themselves have admitted the relevant portion of that letter and the plaintiff can appropriately produce it, if the amendment is allowed.

[29] It is pointed out by Sir Dinshah Mulla in his commentary on O. 7, R. 6, Civil P. C., that even where the plaint does not show any ground of exemption the Court of first instance should allow the plaint to be amended save under very exceptional circumstances. In the present case the plaint did show the grounds of exemption from limitation and the plaintiff merely wanted to add one more ground. In A.I.R. 1935 Mad. 158[18] the learned Judge pointed out that an amendment should be allowed at any stage where no new relief is prayed for or a fresh cause of action added by the amendment. It was observed that an additional ground of exemption does not change the cause of action. It was further observed that under O. 6, R. 17, Civil P. C., not only is the Court given power but it is under a duty to allow such amendments as will enable the real questions in issue to be raised. The learned Judge referred with approval to the weighty remarks of Lopes L. J. in (1887) 19 Q.B.D. 394[19] at p. 396 :

"However negligent or careless the first omission and however late the proposed amendment, the amendment should be allowed if it can be allowed without injustice to the other side."

[30] In A. I. R. 1937 Cal. 485[20] the Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court interfered with the order of the lower Court disallowing amendment when by that amendment the plaintiff wanted only to add another ground of exemption from limitation. The learned Judges pointed out that while exercising the discretion in the matter of amendment the following observations of Lord Buckmaster must be borne in mind :

"All rules of Court are nothing but provisions intended to secure the proper administration of justice, and it is therefore essential that they should be made to serve and be subordinate to that purpose, so that full powers of amendment must be enjoyed and should always be liberally exercised, but none the less no power has yet been given to enable one distinct cause of action to be substituted for another, nor to change, by any means of amendment, the subject-matter of the suit etc."

In the opinion of the learned Judges the amendment seeking to add one more ground of exemption from limitation is not either to substitute one cause of action for another or to change the subject-matter of the suit and such an amendment should therefore be readily allowed. In A.I R. 1935 Bom. 213[21] the learned Judge observed that the Court may at any stage of the proceedings of a suit allow a party to amend its pleadings by permitting him to substitute one ground of exemption from limitation for another, and in this matter reliance was placed on 10 Bom. L. R. 346.[22]

[31] In our opinion the Courts below acted with material irregularity and against the established principles of law in disallowing the amendment. The application dated 6th April 1940 for amendment should have been allowed and we accordingly allow it. The lower Court should permit the letter dated 16th October 1936 to be produced and placed on the record so that it would be in a position to decide if it contains an acknowledgment within the meaning of S. 19, Limitation Act.

[32] The decree of the lower appellate Court dismissing the plaintiff's suit is set aside with costs, and the suit is remanded to the first Court for disposal according to law.

Uttamrao Shripat Bhutekar—Complainant—Applicant v. Asru Hanwanta Bhutekar and another—Accused—Non-applicants.

Criminal Revn. No. 58 of 1947, Decided on D/- 14-10-1947, from order of Addl. Sessions Judge, Buldana, 30-11-1946.

(a) Crminal P. C. (1898) Ss. 253 (1) –Warrant case —It is duty of Magistrate to call and examine persons said by complainant to know facts, before discharging accused under S. 253(2) on subsequent hearing—Criminal P. C. (1898), Ss. 259, 247.

In a warrant case, under S. 429, Penal Code, when the offence alleged is cognizable and non-compoundable, the Magistrate cannot discharge the accused under S. 253 (2) on the ground that "the complainant being absent there is no evidence against accused person", when the complainant had said on affirmation in his examination on the previous hearing that though he knew nothing personally, he had been told the facts by two persons whom he named. Before it can be said that there is no evidence, it is incumbent on the Magistrate to call and examine such witnesses as are said to know the facts : 23 A. I. R. 1936 Nag. 192, Ref. [Paras 2 & 3]

There is a difference between a summons case and a warrant case. In the former, S. 247 applies and the accused can be acquitted if the complainant does not appear upon the day appointed for the appearance of the accused, or any day subsequent thereto to which the hearing may be adjourned. In warrant cases S. 259 applies and the power to discharge the accused in the absence of the complainant is only given in compoundable and non-cognisable cases. [Para 6]

(b) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 253 (2)—Reasons for discharge of accused must be recorded —Omission is not curable.

Under S. 253 (2), the reasons need not be recorded in any particular form and it would be enough if the reasons which motivated the discharge of the accused can be gathered from the order, but reasons there must be in some form or other. There must be enough material in the order to satisfy the High Court that the discharge was for good and proper causes. Omission to record reasons is not curable irregularity. [Para 5]
